HERE WE GO AGAIN

This summer, as the world balanced on the edge of war, the University of Toronto experienced growth and change and mirrored the impact of the world's encounter with history.

Today as the university enters upon another period of unified experience, enrolment climbs, physical changes are noted, and growth makes itself felt in the 115th year of the university's life.

This summer, as the concerted voice of the West spoke recriminations at the execution of Pal Maleter, Imre Nagy and the leaders of the Hungarian Revolution, U of T examination results revealed a surprising 75 per cent of the 43 Hungarian refugees enrolled here had failed their first Varsity years.

In the same sunny months of summer, 1958, as the world watched warfronts grow hotter in Algeria, Lebanon, South America, and Formosa, students and staff of this university travelled and watched.

As the hand of atomic power grew heavier and closer, the University of Toronto joined the nuclear age with the inauguration this June of a half-million-dollar sub-critical atomic reactor for students here of nuclear engineering.

The university also answered an apparently ever-increasing need for trained scientists and instituted for the first time here a three-year general science course.

Meanwhile, as the University of Toronto's ex-president Sidney Smith represented Canada internationally as foreign affairs minister, acting president Moffat St. A. Woodside stepped down after a year's service to make way for incoming president Claude T. Bissell, former president of Carleton University, Ottawa, and a graduate of this university.

He is to address the staff and students in Convocation Hall at 3:45 today and will be formally installed October 24.

For the new president, who took office quietly last June, there spreads a prospect of surging enrolment, already above last year's figure of 13,032, a giant 10-year expansion program, and a host of challenges to higher education that developed as the world hastened toward greater ideological opposition and war.

In Toronto, the need for more university-level education was answered with the announcement in August that York University would probably be functioning here by the fall of 1959.

Across Canada, the same problem was felt as universities in the West raised fees, and Quebec students continued a losing battle against Premier Duplessis' refusal to accept federal grants for education.

At least one notice, however, of the increasing demand was seen, as the Conservative Government raised federal grants to education by 50 per cent giving the universities a shot in the arm.

Today, as lectures begin, freshmen are attending their first lectures in Canada's largest university, and for returning students there are major construction projects—a Victoria College residence, a Loretto College residence, a new Dentistry Building and Women's Athletic Building as evidence of the continuing growth of the university in a new age.

New University By 1959 Planning Group Announces

A series of interconnected developments by a planning committee and a new centre for adult education in North York should lead to the formation of Toronto's second university — York University — sometime in the fall of 1959.

Months of speculation ended this August with the announcement by Air Marshal W. A. Curtis, vice-president of A. V. Roe Canada Ltd., head of a nine-man planning committee that such a university was in the works and a charter for it would go before the legislature next spring.

Meanwhile, as educators across Canada greeted the announcement of the committee, made up of Toronto business executives and teachers, the North Toronto YMCA announced that a series of night courses in adult education would begin this fall.

"Anything that comes out of this (YMCA education center) we will be glad to look at for help," a spokesman for the York University planning committee said last night.

Courses in the North Toronto YMCA adult education centre get underway Monday and a registration "open house" at the YMCA last night sought 250 applications.

Courses at the North York YMCA will include English literature, Canadian history, contemporary philosophy, drama, and eight more courses.

Reginald Bundy, chairman of the centre's operating committee said, "instruction and leadership will be undertaken by a highly qualified staff which has undergone pre-training in the methods to be used."

"This will enable students to relate such information and facts to their own lives in experience of renewed satisfaction," he said.

Alan Clarke, secretary of the York University planning committee pointed out that Carleton University grew out of a venture similar to the one being undertaken by the North Toronto YMCA.

President Boosts Arts Predicts New College

Dr. Claude T. Bissell, new president of the University of Toronto, said last night the humanities are by far the best preparation for any profession.

Addressing the University College Fall Convocation, he said "the study of humanities must constitute the heart of a college."

Dr. Bissell said he could see a time when another college would be added to the university. But the university should "wait for the maturing of plans and the securing of resources," before this happened.

Bill Davis (IV UC), president of the UC Literary Association called for the building of a Students' Union.

"It is something that has been talked about for many years," he said. "It is something that nothing has been done about."

Principal F. C. A. Jeanneret said scholarship must take precedence over everything else, "extra-curricular activities in particular."

"There should be no modesty whatsoever about one's scholarly aspirations," he said. He told freshmen to "resist the tide of prejudice and intolerance that is sweeping upon us at all levels."

Some 800 students, faculty and others attended the function.

A BRAVE NEW WORLD of university life may lie behind the gloomy shadows of University College. Freshies Ruth Guer, of Victoria College, and Mary Hunter, of UC, kept smiling as they picked their way through a puzzling and hectic enrolment yesterday.

Cry From the Depths

The Varsity, a daily paper published irregularly for and by Toronto university students, needs new staff.

If you want to write, and have the stamina to withstand the tension, trundle down to the office in the students' administrative council building Friday at 4.00 p.m.

Wanted badly are cartoonists, make-up men, reporters, and anybody with experience.

Also needed immediately are copy-runners. Runners will be paid, especially if they have a car.

By the way, the SAC building is that bare, domed structure obscuring the view of the Hart House front door.

Open New Reactor Here As Toronto Goes Fission

The University of Toronto this summer joined the nuclear age with the inauguration June 19 of a $500,000 sub-critical reactor by Ontario Premier Leslie M. Frost.

The reactor, located in the Wallberg Building, is the first to be installed in a Canadian university. It is to be used solely for educational purposes and is specifically designed not to produce a critical reaction.

At present, the gleaming new reactor will be used by graduate students in U of T's new nuclear engineering course. However, Prof. Douglas Andrews, reactor chief, said yesterday he "has every hope of making it available to undergraduate students in the near future."

Situated in a well-like recess at the west end of the Wallberg Building chemical engineering laboratories, the reactor is surrounded by a maze of pipes, feed-lines and electronic measuring devices. The reactor itself is deceptively simple: a six-foot high, five-foot wide aluminum tank.

Although the reactor will not generate a chain reaction, it nevertheless duplicates a large scale nuclear installation. The absence of lead and water shielding which usually surrounds reactors accounts for its small size.

The reactor, designed and installed by Canadair Ltd., uses uranium on loan by the Eldorado Mining and Refining Ltd. — as well as heavy hydrogen at the rate of $28 per pound.

The reactor, Prof. Andrews explained, has no means of power of its own, that is, it cannot produce more power than the fuel fed into it permits.

"It is," he explains, "a slave to its own source of power, that is what sub-critical means."

Installation of the reactor was underway last January, but tests on it continued through April and May before a permit was obtained from the Atomic Energy Control Board.

On the subject of McMaster University's reactor, presently under construction, Prof. Andrews said "I have nothing but praise for what they are doing there."

He said that while Toronto's reactor is strictly for study, McMaster's was a full-scale reactor, capable of a critical reaction and valuable for research.

Text book Site Big and Bright

When U of T students trek to the south end of the campus this week to begin their annual battle for text books they will take a different route.

The route will lead them to a spacious, square front building between Knox College and the UC men's residence which stands, after a year of controversy, as the new university bookstore.

Architects have termed it a "monstrosity" and an irate letter to The Globe and Mail recently complained of poor planning and valuable display space given up to postcards and children's books.

But for better or worse, the store stands since its July opening with plenty of surprises for the influx of students expected during the next few weeks.

A staff of 40, almost half composed of students, is already behind counters in a room about twice the size of the old bookstore.

For the first time the textbook stock is supplemented by a wide range of second hand books in language and mathematics courses and a complete store of paper back books.

Discount prices from 10 to 15 per cent are available on all texts in Medicine, Pharmacy, Nursing and Dentistry and on a limited selection of books in Engineering and Geology, Mathematics, Physics and Chemistry, Economics, History and Geography and Psychology and Biology.

For the first six weeks of term, the store is offering what manager Harold Bohne terms "a super-market express service" to get students through the rush period. After that he hopes it'll be an outlet for cultural and scholarly publications for the whole university community.

mercial reaction to the centre will determine partially what type of university we are going to have," he said, indicating the relation between York University and the YMCA project.

"Carleton started by holding evening classes in schools, and, later, day classes in churches and even private homes. We may very well have to start along the same lines," he added.

Mr. Clarke said it was estimated the need for another university was greater in York County than anywhere else in Canada.

James Gibson, dean of arts and sciences at Carleton University said: "the new college will help distribute the load more evenly."

It is doubly welcome because the universities of Ontario will be unable to handle the load over the next ten years unless the University of Toronto is to turn into a monster institution."

Members of the York University committee are: Air Marshal Curtis; A. R. Hackett, partner in a Toronto advertising agency; A. D. Margison, professional engineer; T. R. London, retired professor of aeronautical engineering at U of T; E. T. Alberts, industrial insurance agent; S. H. Decks, executive director of the Industrial Foundation on Education; Dr. Roby Kidd, director of the Canadian National Association for Adult Education; Arthur Jordan, executive secretary of the North Toronto YMCA; and Mr. Clarke.

Nfcus Seminar

Call Canada's Culture Inadequate

A first-in-history National Federation of Canadian University Students seminar met earlier this month at the University of Western Ontario in London, and 44 delegates from 26 Canadian universities were told what was right and wrong about Canadian universities.

Among other things, they heard that Canada is not making an adequate contribution to world culture, that universities should make no effort to aid national development, and that Canadian students are ignorant of the place of labor in society.

University of Toronto delegates to the London seminar Sept. 8-12, were Barbara Leaman, III UC; Mary Catzman, IV UC; and Don Morin, IV Meds.

Theme of the seminar was "The role of the university in national development," with emphasis on the humanities, the arts, and social and applied sciences.

Dr. John Leddy, dean of arts and science at the University of Saskatchewan, told the seminar that "it is high time we (Canada) had more success in such fields of humanities as literature."

The humanities, he said, could contribute to national morale, and he cited the surge of culture in Great Britain in the 1940's when he explained, the English people reached into their cultural background for strength.

Dr. E. W. R. Steacie, president of the National Research Council, told Nfcus delegates that unless universities pursued knowledge for the sake of knowledge and avoided trying to produce graduates for the sake of national development, there was a great danger they would turn into vocational schools.

"This would be bad for technology which needs people who are educated, not people who are trained," he said.

He discounted reports that there was a critical shortage of engineers and scientists and maintained that in some cases trained engineers had been employed in sales and administrative posts, indicating that a shortage could not therefore exist.

It is, for Canadian universities, the best of times and the worst of times; the age of wisdom and the age of foolishness. And there is more than a mere rumble of revolution in academic corridors.

In Quebec, the barricades are up already, while se-date Ontario—recognizing the demand of society—moves forward towards a democratic but unmistakable overthrow of the educational status quo.

At the University of Toronto we stand, in fact, at the twilight of the old, established system. When the class of 6T2 graduates, it will leave behind a better alma mater. Her face will be lifted, the limbs extended and her spirit regenerated and redirected.

When today's bewildered freshmen trundle out with their degrees, some 27 acres of victorian architecture west of St. George Street will have been levelled into dust and a bright new campus will be rising on the ashes.

When they take their last lectures, professors will still be guarding the glory that was Greece, but more concern will be given toward preserving the grandeur that, still, is man.

And when the new class of 6T6, 20,000 strong, comes swirling through the gates, the federal government should be paying the piper for many of them.

Developments in Quebec over the summer indicate the objection to this last change is that the federal government will also be calling the tune.

On these grounds Premier Duplessis still declines to accept federal educational grants for his province, despite an increase of 50 per cent last month.

Quebec students, tired of having their universities maintained at subsistence level by provincial grants, have issued determined declarations of right.

The moral issues at stake far outweigh the petty problems of cash and cultural independence. In whatever light we may choose to regard Duplessis' actions, the result from the student point of view is disastrous, and not even the premier of all Quebec can withstand the pressure that are bound to be brought into play.

In these terms, it matters little whether Duplessis chooses to be honest and accept the federal grants for what they are, or whether he elects to save his face once more and find another means to achieve the same thing.

For the one clear fact emerging from the revolution, both here and in Quebec, is that the nation as a whole has realized that the wages of ignorance are far, far more expensive than the cost of education.

in a mug

Today we print in gold.

The implication is not all that you expect. It stretches beyond the ridiculous and towards the sublime.

It is a token of our esteem.

Nobody has ever seriously doubted the importance of the University of Toronto to the community at large. Its functions, its aims and its achievements have been recognized by both the lowly and the great.

But this marks the first time labour and management have joined hands, settled their differences and given new hope to a parched province, in mutual recognition of the undergraduate's devotion to his beer.

Such a tribute deserves no less than gold.

Down the length of the sun-scorched street, the empty men loafed against the searing buildings, puffs of tired dust rose in the silent summer air.

The figures of the men, gathering and ungathering in little groups of discontent, were like blackened shades, shifting and lost in the late heat of day.

In the silence was only the sound of an infant's uncomprehending cry, the diabolic hissing of the occasional passing car.

It was like the 30's, like the hardest times on the prairies, one thought of empty stomachs and frizzled clothes, lard-pails empty when the children went freezing to school.

But it was summer, 1958, and it is now, the summer of the Great Strike, the dry time.

Times men will always remember.

And it is now.

Men loaf by the shattered temple, men group by the empty beer store. A sign proclaims: "CLOSED ON ACCOUNT OF STRIKE." The loafing men cough dryly in the summer heat. Someone spits.

"I don't know how long I can stand it," one man whispers to his companion, a lonely-looking man with a heartbroken, unshaven face.

"We must bear up," says the heartbroken face. "These times require strength."

"No man has so much, Ed," said the first man with the look of an uncertain martyr crossing his face.

But the union knows what's best, they're only trying to help us. There are bigger issues at stake.

"Nothing is bigger than, than b-b-beer."

Some coughs in the silence of the sun-wracked street. The word beer is muttered along the dusty wastes where life once flourished. Beer. For a long time there is quiet.

"But Ed, Ed, I think about it all the time. I can't help it. I think about the days when we would work all day in the warehouse, helping the people get their beer. And then we would have a few. Cold ones. And then when I got home I would have some more. And then, after supper, another. And . . ."

The heartbroken face creases

as discipline wrenches at its owner's soul: "The union knows what is right. We cannot complain." He utters each word deeply from the bottom of his dry belly, the words rasping in his bone-dry throat.

"But, Ed, Ed, no more beer, no more beer. It can't be worth it. It can't."

For a while Ed contemplates the universe from the bottom of his collectivized soul. In his mind the bourgeois, the proletariat and the capitalists do battle on dusty fields. Then a vision splits his seamy face.

"All men drink beer. Each class drinks beer. It is not thesis nor antithesis. It is synthesis, the conclusion." And a maddened light is in his eyes.

"In my coat, right here," he whispers, "I have two bottles of beer. I have kept them to mock the folly of the capitalist greed. I had kept them as signs, as something I do not need. But there is more to this. They are synthesis. And I am thirsty. We will drink them. Come."

But up and down the burning street the men are moving.

The blackened knots of figures in the five-o'clock sun are shifting, stumbling, running. Beer, beer, beer, the voices whisper, words wracking dusty lungs.

Ed clutches the bottles to his breast, he turns to run, but the mob is converging, screaming, giggling, choking, and the men are trapped.

In the burning sun there were no screams, no blows, no blood, but only despair that surely pierced the darkness and the darkness and the truth of creation; the clink of bottles, the delicate, musical shattering of glass.

When the men were gone, long after, when hands turned inward on themselves in recrimination, when little children huddled frightened and mothers wept, the thin, brown liquid ran and mingled with the dust, trickled silently in the gutters.

And time wore slowly on.

...and it only cost 50 dollars

A reactionary writes:

Sir:

There is no better time I think, than the occasion of your first issue to take up a cause which badly needs support on this campus at the present moment. The cause, perhaps a lost, or rather, abandoned cause, is one which in the past several years has been close to my own ideals and, I believe, those of the university as a whole.

It is the cause of sincerity. Insincerity, and its second cousins, affectation and mutual admiration, have eaten into the character of the undergraduate body. This trio of despair, issuing brightly through the shallow framework of pretended knowledge, has rotted one of the finer aspects of university life: argument.

I am tired of playing games. I am tired of listening to "intellectuals" range at large — by way of some one else's opinions.

Undeniably false, they destroy true discussion and honest argument. They illustrate the easy way out, the hypocrisy of the times and the machine-nurtured wisdom of hollow minds.

They are basically alien both to knowledge and to a true university.

Albert Henshaw (SGS).

Imperative

Each year at this time we attempt to outline a general credo for confused freshmen. The result is often confusing and inadequate. Below, reprinted by kind permission of the Trinity College Review, is a statement which includes all our feeling on this subject. Written perhaps with more poetic licence than we could either muster or allow ourselves, it deserves attention not only of undergraduates but of students everywhere.

To you, we have many things to say, but we cannot form them on our lips. They dwell within the inner silences of our hearts. Indeed they are robed in the mystery of Life.

To everyone we say, "you have some talent, some potentialities, some little spark which it is your responsibility to use."

You must not say, "I am a poet, but it is too long and arduous to learn the craft that my vision may be carved into words." You must not say, "I am a mechanic, but I can get more money selling cars than by using my skill with my hands." You must not say, "I am a thinker, but thinking is hard, so I will abandon it along the way."

For Life demands that each should contribute according to his potentialities, and that each individual will undertake a life of Service.

It is also true that no man is born free. Life immediately imposes responsibilities through the granting of talent and potentialities. It does however, grant the individual, as a gift, the freedom to discover the road along which his capabilities will lead him.

To the man on the street, to the man who can drive the streetcar, to the man who can screw bolts into a car we say, "As long as you are serving to the best of your capabilities, you are not less than a great thinker or a great creator."

To the artist, poet, and philosopher, we say: "If you can maintain your artistic, poetic, or philosophic integrity within the framework of society, remain there, but if you must leave that path to travel a lonely way that your meditation and dreaming might be put to some use, take courage in your heart, and do not falter."

To those who have not found their direction in Life, to those who believe they have no potentialities, to those who have fallen along the road, "Begin your life of Service with whatever you are doing at this moment, for it is not the task, but the approach to the task that matters. For if you first give of yourself from your heart, asking no return, the doors of Life which are for you will open, and you will receive all manner of things which are beyond your dreaming."

Seek not after happiness, for it is elusive and cannot be caught. It is the gift which comes from living a life of Service, whatever may be the way in which you serve.

SWEET SMELL OF SUMMERTIME SUCCESS

"What about operating two summer theatres next year? Say Port Carling and Peterborough. Or Port Carling and the Red Barn?"

"What about running a winter production? A commercial play, really beat the drums for publicity, get a mid-town theatre?"

What about doing Cyrano, Two for the Seesaw? A university production in Hart House over the Christmas season?"

Ideas for more productions came fast as soon as Davis-Jaffary Incorporated began to look like a success last summer. And if the new ideas sound a bit hare-brained, so did the idea last spring of another group trying to make a go of summer theatre.

But they did. And no matter how far-fetched Karl Jaffary's schemes sound, actors and investors wonder now if he and partner Bill Davis couldn't bring it off.

Hard put to raise even $200 last year to make a down payment on the Muskoka stock theatre, Karl Jaffary (Vic) and Bill Davis (UC) returned after a splendidly successful season with an undisclosed, but undoubtedly large profit.

Their actors were drawn from the university, all familiar to Hart House theatre-goers. Fred Euringer, Judy McLeod, John Douglas, Juliana Gianelli and husband John Saxton made up the resident cast. Hired in for leads during the summer were Don Sutherland, Mary Anderson, Maureen Fox, and Bill Brydon of the Producers Playhouse.

Even the back stage crew were drawn from university circles: Catherine Cragg, Matthew Corrigan (first St. Mike's), Peter White (first Vic), Pam Thayer and Bill Bennet.

Notably an unsound idea financially, the summer theatre business saw most Ontario theatres either fail to open, or close early last year. Port Carling was the exception.

History of the Straw Hat Players in Port Carling goes back to the first university group to found a theatre there. Donald and Murry Davis ran the Players for eight years before a company from Victoria College (Bill Bennett and Wilf Pegg) attempted to take over for a summer, but unsuccessfully. The rejuvenated Straw Hat Players, (Davis-Jaffary Inc.) are reported to have made the Davis Brothers green by pulling in a larger profit than they did in their early successful summers.

Art

Exhibits Non-Representational

Two exhibitions attempted a comprehensive display of contemporary Canadian art this summer. The Stratford exhibition, selected by a National Gallery committee, was small and inadequate. The CNE exhibition, selected according to a new and ingenious system, was big and bewildering.

The Stratford exhibition was a helter-skelter collection of artists coast to coast; most of the paintings pleasant, some good. But the total number of works was small, there was no catalogue provided, and the gallery itself was too narrow.

Dominating the display, because of its position, and its excellence was a painting by the French-Canadian Riopelle, better known internationally as a Parisian painter. His great canvas of kaleidoscopic colors in maelstrom movement had an energy and vigour that made the rest of the show look spiritless.

Many more artists were represented at the Canadian National Exhibition. Five well-known Canadian artists selected the show, each responsible for the pictures in one of the five rooms of the big CNE gallery.

Two of the rooms were regional in character. Lawren Harris selected West Coast artists, Claude Piche, Quebec artists. The three largest rooms were given over to Ontario painters. Jock Macdonald chose paintings by the revolutionary Toronto group called the Painters Eleven, as well as paintings by young and unrecognized or unknown Toronto artists.

Kenneth Forbes, known to Maclean's readers for his recent bitter attack on modern art, and known to art patrons as an academic painter with great technical skill, filled his room with paintings by the recently established Ontario Institute of Painters, a group of ultra-academics that are almost naive in their fanaticism, and occasionally, almost primitive in their lack of ability.

No one can deny Forbes his facile and meticulous talent, but many of the Institute painters are so unskilled as to be almost amateurs. In fact the resemblances to the CNE exhibition of amateur art were often striking.

The third Ontario room was a catch-all for artists not included with Mr. Macdonald's radicals, or Mr. Forbes academics. The middle ground however, is very large. Fred Finley was the selector and in his large gallery were to be found most of the painters familiar to Toronto gallery-goers, and some of the best works in the exhibition.

Well-known artists were missing from both the Quebec and B.C. rooms. None of the outstanding Montreal artists such as Riopelle, Bordenau, Pelland, Roberts, de Tonnancour and Cosgrove were represented. The Lawren Harris gallery displayed three charming pictures by Gordon Smith, all familiar to the campus after the Hart House exhibition last year, but was used mainly to display the recent abstractions of Lawren Harris. Harris, respected because of his membership in the Group of Seven, and admired for some of his abstractions of the forties, seems hardly to be the same man in these painful and nightmarish recent works. Toronto will have a chance to see more of them later this fall at Laing's Gallery.

Despite the confusion of classification, and the large number of paintings exhibited overseas in the Brussels exhibition, both Stratford and the CNE managed to show the public a great many Canadian paintings.

Drama

Brief Backward Look At The Stock Season

The early summer recorded several bad starts in summer stock seasons. The Vineland theatre burned down after the opening night of CAT ON A HOT TIN ROOF, the Red Barn opened late and closed early, while Gravenhurst and Peterborough failed to open at all.

Attention was again focussed on Stratford, where the three plays chalked up their usual financial success, but drew mixed criticisms from the press. THE WINTER'S TALE, directed by Douglas Campbell, was a disappointment, disjointed and slow, with little indication of the fairy-tale quality of the poetry, except in Bruno Gerussi's unusual performance of the rogue Antolycus.

MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING was the big success of the season. Under the masterful direction of Michael Langham, the play, usually dismissed as second-rate Shakespeare, was turned into an evening of highly intelligent, lively entertainment, fast-paced, and brilliantly performed by Christopher Plummer and Eileen Herlie.

Jason Robards, Jr., with a robust Brooklyn enthusiasm, stomped lustily across the stage for HENRY IV, Part I, introducing a frightening but immensely satisfying concept of Hotspur, and nearly eclipsed Douglas Rain's charming Prince Hal, and Douglas Campbell's vigorous but conventional Falstaff. The production was handled by Langham, assisted by George McGowan.

Ontario's more ancient Shakespearean Festival, Toronto's Earle Grey Players, presented KING LEAR, AS YOU LIKE IT, and COMEDY OF ERRORS in the Trinity Quadrangle. Each production was a living testimonial to the fact that not even the immortal bard can survive a shabby, amateurish production. Another urban endeavor, the Music Fair, produced an exceptional BOY FRIEND, an astounding POREY AND BESS, but fell down on the more familiar works, such as OKLAHOMA, and ANNIE GET YOUR GUN.

Toronto's professional revue-makers tried to take a tip from Montreal's college amateurs when they wrote CLAP HANDS, now running at Hart House Theatre. Loaded with Canadian satire and provincial rags, this show has all the ingredients MY FUR LADY possessed, except the ability to amuse its audience constantly.

Biggest theatrical event of the late spring, in fact of the last five years, was the Moiseyev Ballet, a company of over a hundred dancers from Moscow. For two hours this group presented dances from 16 of the 120 national folk regions of the USSR, received a thunderous ovation from the audience, which they returned with gusto.

Contrary to all predictions by the prophets of gloom, the summer season showed conclusively that theatrical ventures were thriving just as vigorously as ever.

Films

There's No Peace in Our Time

After last year's major disappointment, THE BRIDGE ON THE RIVER KWAI, the summer months displayed an unusually large number of interesting motion pictures. Strangely enough, most of them were concerned with war.

Of these, the most outstanding was Stanley Kubrick's PATHS OF GLORY, based on Humphrey Cobb's searing expose of corruption in the French general staff during World War I. Unfortunately, the film proved to be one of those uncompromising masterpieces which seem doomed to short runs—it only played two weeks at the Uptown Theatre.

Chaplin's THE GREAT DICTATOR, a brilliant and terrifying burlesque of Nazism, contained many fine touches, the most memorable of which was the balloon ballet, set to the "Lohengrin" Prelude.

However, the most startling film this summer was the Japanese HARP OF BURMA, which may rank as the finest war film ever made. Unfortunately, the absence of box-office appeal in the title will probably prevent its being shown commercially, although the Toronto Film Society is scheduling it for its current season.

Other films included THE BROTHERS KARAMAZOV, which retained the skin and bones of the original novel, but somehow left out the guts and marrow. INDISCREET was a heavy-handed production of the Broadway play, but GIGI was a delightful musical version of Colette's most famous short story. GOD'S LITTLE ACRE was a slickly produced film, but one in which the presence of a newcomer, Tina Louise, made one notice the inadequacy of the small screen. The Downtown showed THE REVENGE OF FRANKENSTEIN, the terrible significance of whose title was immediately appreciated by anyone foolish enough to sit through it.

And finally, there was Chaplin's A KING IN NEW YORK, which may serve the useful function of inducing the great comedian to release MONSIEUR VERDOUX, his most profound creation.

It was a good summer, all in all, one that indicates an exciting season this fall.

Note Major Changes After SMC Turnover

St. Mike's students returned this week to find a major changeover in the SMC administration.

For the first time in St. Mike's history, the position of superior and president of the college will be divided. New SMC president is the Rev. John Kelly, who will retain his position of head of the St. Mike's philosophy department.

The Rev. Father John Madden has replaced the Rev. L. K. Shook as SMC superior. Father Shook, who is also the former president of the college, will remain at St. Mike's on the undergraduate faculty.

New registrar for the college is the Rev. H. C. Mallon. He will replace the Rev. Charels Lavery, who has been transferred to St. John Fisher College in Rochester, N.Y.

The Rev. Robert Gibbons will serve this year as faculty advisor to the University Students' Administrative Council. The Rev. Francis Orsini will replace Father Madden as Dean of Residence at St. Mike's.

New Science Course As Calendar Altered

The University of Toronto's Faculty of Arts has inaugurated two new courses for the 1958-59 session and will continue three courses offered for the first time in the '57-58 session.

The new courses are a three-year General Courses in Science and a four-year Modern History (English Option) course. Registration for these courses is still going on and the registration department can give no accurate estimate of enrolment as yet.

The General Course in Science will consist of eight compulsory courses in mathematics and four basic sciences — botany, chemistry, physics and zoology, with five elective courses in mathematics and science. The elective courses will allow a certain degree of specialization in the subject of the student's choice. As a balancing effect, in each of the three years, four hours per week will be devoted to subjects in the humanities and the social sciences.

The new and growing need is for a course designed to provide a broad education in science, and it is to meet this need that the University of Toronto will offer in the autumn of 1958 the General Course in Science.

The other innovation, the Modern History course with an English option, is designed to qualify graduates for admission to the Type A course in English and History at the Ontario College of Education.

The courses introduced last year and continued this year are The Ancient Near Eastern Studies Course, The Modern Near Eastern Studies Course and the Slavic Studies Course.

BLUE—MUSTANG BATTLE?

Queen's Weak, McGill Dark Horse; Varsity Chases Defending Champs

Night football, a Stewart-less league, a new coach at McGill, confidence at London and Toronto—these are the basic ingredients of a fast-approaching Intercollegiate season. With the opening whistle a matter of hours away, all indications point to a renewal of the deadly feud of yore—Varsity and Western fighting it out for the title.

In London, John Metras—starting his nineteenth year as Mustang coach—has assembled a depth-less squad to chase Western's eighth Yates Cup since the war.

The Horsies have 16 veterans back, although graduation and two vital academic failures cut deeply into the Mustang hopes of retaining the championship they won last year.

At Queen's, the prospects are for another season of sweeping the league cellar. Ron Stewart—around whom Coach Frank Tindall had hoped to build a contender—has turned professional.

The Golden Gaels' immediate strength appears to lie in a sizeable wingline, but with a shortage of experienced backs, the Tricolor are unlikely for the better's favor.

McGill, too, has a depleted lineup to bolster. Rookie coach Bruce (Bones) Coulter, who succeeded Larry Sullivan in a summer change, faces a tough chore.

In Toronto, the prospects appear bright. Varsity's likeable coach Dalt White welcomed 18 veterans—plus 27 other aspirants—to the Lake Couchiching training camp.

With a power backfield—plus loads of depth—White made a major formation change from the twin-fullback system of old to a straight-T.

From the four training camps, The Varsity has received correspondent reports on the teams, and these are presented in condensed form below:

TORONTO

TEAM NAME—Varsity Blues.
COLORS—Royal Blue and White.

HOME PARK—Varsity Stadium.

CAPACITY—27,500.
COACHES—Dalt White, John McManis, Jack Kennedy.

KEY MEN MISSING—Tackles: John Casey, Bill Beamish, Walt Radzik, Bill Miller; end Burt Kellock, backs: Pete Maik, George Stubbs, John Tattle.

WE NEED REPORTERS

The Varsity Sports department needs reporters.

Brunk, sober, experienced, green, sick, healthy, and dead—we need them.

The present staff—about four strong—plans to graduate in the spring.

That means a wide-open field for ambitious citizens who desire loads of experience for a minimum of work.

This university offers no journalism course as such. All news-writing experience is gained right here on The Varsity.

Our address is the basement of the Students' Administrative Council building, south of Hart House.

Our telephone number is WA 3-8113.

If you hit a blank, call sports editor John Brooks at WA 3-8411 or pay him a visit at Trinity College.

quarterbacks Brian Aston, Larry Joynt; backs Tim Reid; Steve Chisholm, Bobby Dann, Dave Creswell.

INJURED—Creswell (out three weeks), and Doug Loughede (out until next week).

SUMMARY—Changing to a straight-T to take advantage of a speedy backfield, Varsity rates as best bet to dethrone Western.

Major problem will be in the line, where graduation left a gaping hole. Russell, Martini and Johnston are welcome returnees, with Thoburn a hefty addition.

Coach White has Bill Hunter, Jim King, Julian Porter and Bruchofsky to help fill the vacancies.

As the Lake Couchiching training camp drew to a close, Coach White had this to say about the approaching season:

"Western has the team to beat; and we are going to beat them."

EXHIBITION GAMES—The Blues defeated the Whites 34-13 in an intra-squad game at Varsity Stadium, September 19.

WESTERN

TEAM NAME—Western Mustangs.

COLORS—Purple and White.
HOME PARK—J. W. Little Memorial Stadium.

CAPACITY—10,000.
COACHES—John Metras, Jack Fairs, Ed DeArmon.

KEY MEN MISSING—Guards: Remo Copat, Clarke Puffer; tackle Tom White; ends John Girvin, Morgan Clark; backs Bill Britton, Willy Casanova, Dale Crichton, Neil Desborough; Dave Loughene, Frank Loftis.

KEY MEN RETURNING—Center: Bill Mitchell; guards: Ed McIsaac, Jim Edgar; tackle Jack Coups; ends Don Stewart, Ted Roman; quarterbacks Art Turner, Frank Cosentino; backs Lionel Conacher, Doug McKenzie, Meco Poliziani, Roger Stewart.

SUMMARY—Western's major problem lies in a lack of bench strength to back up what will probably be a stronger starting lineup than the 1957 Mustangs featured.

Lineup changes to date include the shift of captain and veteran tackle Ted Roman to end, and fullback Jim Edgar to guard.

Coach Metras has quarters Turner and Cosentino to guide what will be a powerful running attack from the double-fullback formation.

Metras is also relying on his regular offensive players to go both ways, with graduation having severely depleted a strong Mustang defensive core that allowed only 42 points in six games last season.

EXHIBITION GAMES—Western demolished Ontario Agricultural College 60-0 in London September 20.

McGILL

TEAM NAME—McGill Redmen.

COLORS—Red and White.
HOME PARK—Molson Memorial Stadium.

CAPACITY—20,000.
COACHES—Bruce Coulter, Ron Murphy, Vaughn McVey.

KEY MEN MISSING—Center: Ron Murphy; guards: Buster Brown, Merv Shaw; tackles: Len Sigurdson, Rae Brown; ends Sam Yuska, Johnny Bennett; back John Cronin.

KEY MEN RETURNING—Guard Terry Dingle, centre Leo Konyk, tackle Paul Harisimowicz; end Joe Poirier; quarterback Dick

OUTSTANDING NEWCOMERS—Returnee halfback Wally Bulchak, formerly with Varsity.

SUMMARY—McGill, with rookie coach Bruce (Bones) Coulter replacing Larry Sullivan, appears to have a problem similar to Varsity—a depleted line.

In addition, one-third of their potent passing trio—Johnny Bennett—has departed for pro ranks. Quarterback Carr and end Poirier return, however, to render the aerial attack still potent.

Always an unknown entity, and capable of surprise upsets, Redmen enter this season as the league's dark horse. On paper, they have the makings of a potential champion.

But a new coach, scarce line and weakened pass attack go against McGill's chances of snaring their first title since 1938.

EXHIBITION GAMES—McGill edged University of British Columbia 9-6 in the annual Paraplegic Association game in Vancouver September 20.

QUEEN'S

TEAM NAME—Queen's Golden Gaels.

COLORS—Royal Blue, Old Gold and Cardinal Red.

HOME PARK—Richardson Memorial Stadium.

CAPACITY—7,500.
COACHES—Frank Tindall, John Edwards, Al Lenard.

KEY MEN MISSING—Guard Graydon Harrison; tackles: Mitch Wask, Stan Trzop; ends Paul Fedor, John Redfern; backs Ron Stewart, Dave Harshaw, Chuck Saffrance, Karl Quinn.

KEY MEN RETURNING—Guard Dave Wilson; tackle Sam Poopes; backs Terry Dolan, Jocko Thompson, Bill Truelove, Ken Takasaki.

SUMMARY—With the fabulous Ron Stewart departed for the Ottawa Rough Riders, Coach Tindall lacks a key man on which to base his 1958 Gaels.

Newcomers at the camp this year have been plentiful (and heavy) but, for the most part, inexperienced. Best rookie in camp has been 240-pound tackle Howie Whately from Sackatoon.

Tindall plans no major change in his offense, and with no indication of a passing attack, it appears rival coaches will concentrate on a ground defense to halt the Tricolor.

Reports from spectators at the camp suggest that Queen's will once again hold the somewhat ignominious position of cellar-dweller come November 8.

EXHIBITION GAMES—Queen's blanked St. Lawrence University (Canton, N.Y.), Larries 15-0 at home on September 20. It was Larries' seventeenth consecutive defeat.

Remember the summer of 1958?

The four kids from UCLA harmonizing to the top with an appropriate little ditty called Summertime Love?

That Sunday in Philadelphia when Ron Stewart, our greatest college grinner of the decade, kissed amateur ranks farewell?

The ever-lovin' chemist that sacked the skin-tights and opened up a new field in female architecture?

The Eddie-Debbie union landing with a bitter crash in the moneyed wake of Around the World in 80 Days?

Deux jeunes filles Francaises—Gigi and Bardot—singing and meowing (respectively) to success on our continent?

The rush for home brew ingredients as even the urging of temperance leaders failed to crack the beer strike?

The double crises in the Middle East and China with the oft-battered diplomatic football in for some more hoofing?

Mitch Miller and the Gang taking Mom and Dad on a misty-eyed flashback with a fine album of all-time favorites?

The Dodgers of Flatbush a bit less zany and sentimental in their palatial Los Angeles lemon?

A beautiful princess named Margaret Royal winning the hearts of all Canada with a whirlwind tour?

The death of poet Robert Service bringing back memories of two ill-fated Irishmen called McGee and McGrew?

Thousands of rock 'n' rollers weeping pitifully as truck driver Elvis moaned: "Don't forget me while I'm gone."

The free world in sympathy with a Negro ex-convict facing execution for robbing an elderly white woman in Alabama?

Those holidays at the cottage when we relived the McGill football weekends and dreamed of another very soon?

(And the realization a few days ago that the famed jaunt to the Queen's Hotel was less than two weeks away?)

Meeting a long-lost buddy in a tiny pub deep in the heart of Canada's lonely, rugged north near Gravenhurst?

The east-west Toronto subway becoming a guarded topic of discussion as November's civic election drew closer?

Those long, long days when the University of Toronto seemed to have forgotten about mailing exam results?

Near-tearful pride in the courageous return to life by a spunky fellow called Roy Campanella?

Government officials gloating over entertainment taxes on a valuable chunk of real estate known as God's Little Acre?

The last few moments with the little gal back home who helped so much to make it a good summer?

It's mostly history now.

Ahead lie the unlimited opportunities of another year on this little patch of green inside horn-crazy Toronto.

For many of us, the next eight months represent the swan song to the ne'er-to-be-forgotten college days.

For others, this is the first step into a new life that goes unparalleled in this troubled world we inhabit.

And for all of us—nearly 14,000 strong—it's another 31 weeks of interest, excitement and value.

Welcome home—you, you and you.

Football-Hockey Ticket Information

Four home football games and eight hockey games for only $2.50.

That's the unbeatable deal being offered all students by the Athletic Association.

The 12 tickets, which come in booklet form, can be purchased from the ticket office in Hart House.

Also included is a special ticket for admission to an intercollegiate football playoff, should one be necessary and played in Varsity Stadium.

The football ducats are good for home games this Friday night against Western, October 18 against Queen's and November 8 against McGill.

An intercollegiate playoff if necessary, will be played on November 15.

The hockey tickets include admission to league games with Laval, University of Montreal and McGill (two each), plus exhibition games with Queen's and the University of Michigan.

Athletic officials, in urging students to purchase the tickets on the special deal, point out that separate admission prices to the 12 games would be $7.

An additional change this year at football games will be the selling of regular programs in the student section. In the past, only player lineups have been distributed.

But as a special service to students, the Athletic Association will print the full player lineups in the last issue of The Varsity before each game.

Radiation Spurs Meds Research

The medical work of the University of Toronto was broadened in two different directions over the summer with the establishment of a department in Medical Biophysics and a post-graduate course in medical bacteriology.

"A major function" of the biophysics department, the university announced, "will be to investigate and to give instruction about the biological effects of radiation." The physics side of the department "provides facilities for producing almost every known kind of radiation."

Other physical agents that cause disease and other physical agents for investigating normal and disease processes will also be studied.

Dr. A. W. Ham, of the university's Department of Anatomy staff for many years, will head the department.

Working closely with Dr. Ham will be Dr. Harold E. Johns, professor in the Physics Department for the past year and in charge of radiation physics at the University of Saskatchewan.

The new department will be centred in the research areas of the Ontario Cancer Institute on Sherbourne St.

The bacteriology course is to provide post-graduate training for physicians working in hospital, university and public health laboratories.

The course will be given in the School of Hygiene and supervised by A. J. Rhodes, the school's director. It will prepare students for a Diploma in Bacteriology.

Graduates now enrolled in the course come from laboratories in Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, Quebec, Ontario, Saskatchewan, Thailand and Ecuador.

Top Newsman Takes Post Here

Kenneth Edey, University of Toronto public relations head from 1947 to 1954, and managing editor of the Montreal Star since, said yesterday he is back where he wants to be.

A beefing up the university's public relations staff has let him come back this year as full-time public relations head.

Mr. Edey was a reporter from 1928 with the Montreal Herald, the Ottawa Journal and the Toronto Star. His former part-time job as U of T public relations head, he said, meant that he had to take other jobs such as Canadian Readers' Digest representative.

Because of the great demand on his time thus created he found it necessary to resign his job for the Montreal Star post.

He "jumped" at the chance to return to the university, he said, and his appointment was announced Aug. 28.

Communications media lost other names to education this summer as A. David Dunton, head of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation Board of Governors for 13 years, resigned to become president of Ottawa's Carleton University and William Boss, Canadian Press correspondent, joined the University of Ottawa staff.

Walking through the corridors of Simcoe Hall yesterday, Mr. Edey said, "It's wonderful to be back. It's a great place. I guess there's just about everything in the world here — every blessed thing."

"BE ANGULAR" BISSELL SAYS

by Doug Marshall

President Claude Bissell yesterday cautioned some 1,500 fellow freshmen against the dangers of being "well-adjusted" during their university careers, and urged them to be "lop-sided" instead.

"During your university days you should emphasize concentration and intensity", the president said, "and not be in the least afraid of being angular or lop-sided".

Speaking to a capacity undergraduate audience in convocation hall Dr. Bissell said he distrusts the idea that every university student is exposed to a wide spectrum of knowledge.

He said the university was not a finishing school which sets the pattern of professional conformity. Students can adjust to their environment after they graduate.

Concentrating on an individual interest develops the confidence and sureness which comes from really mastering a subject, he said.

"Be skeptical of those who speak in glowing terms of the well-rounded man," Dr. Bissell said, "as if the highest aim of a university was the production of a well-rounded man."

Moving into the extra-curricular field, he said, leadership should not come from "all-round students, but from those with an intellectual passion as the centre of their development.

Speaking easily, the president introduced himself as "a freshman, looking forward to the future instead of basking contentedly in the past."

He told undergraduates they were the "raison d'être" of a university. Decrying the semi-serious opinion that universities would be fine places if it were not for the students, he assured students they were "indispensable" at this university.

He suggested his ten year's experience as University College's Dean of Residence would help him to meet students individually.

He will make every attempt to overcome the myopia, peculiar to university presidents, which makes it difficult to recognize individual students, he said.

"I am still not too venerable," said Dr. Bissell, "to dig" the modern undergraduate."

Later the president did some uninhibited boasting about the University of Toronto.

He said it was not a large university, except in the arithmetical sense.

"We are small . . . in our association of small units and our respect for the individual student."

This, together with the human emphasis given to its problems, makes the U of T one of the focal centres of higher education in the western world.

Dr. Bissell stressed the undergraduate's relation to the world outside. He prefers, he said, to regard students as citizens with a role of high responsibility.

"But," he added, "you are not yet obliged to shoulder the full burden of adult responsibility."

Dr. Bissell also called for a re-evaluation of the ideas found in university with the realities of social and political existence.

While strident, destructive political action by students is a sign of immaturity, the president warned against becoming too passive and tractable.

"If enthusiasm for ideals and zeal for reform is not found in academic halls, then that country is prey to a malignant disease," he said.

NEW PRESIDENT Claude T. Bissell addresses a packed Convocation Hall in his opening address to students yesterday.

Male Melisandes . . .

Who Serenades Who?

St. Mike's men "reacted unfavorably" to news of a residence curfew, one SMC student said, last night.

Undergraduates heard their new residence rules last night from Dean of Residence the Rev. Francis Orsini. SMC men will have to be in residence by 11 p.m. unless their prefects give permission for later hours, Father Orsini said.

Freshmen and Sophomores will also have to rise by 7 a.m. and report to prefects by 7.30 a.m., he said. Seniors will rise at 7.15 a.m. and report by 7.45 a.m.

Rules on male apparel made by the SMC Students' Administrative Council will be enforced again this year, Father Orsini said. Male students must wear flannel trousers, shirts and sport coats to meals and lectures.

Father Orsini also asked for "avoidance of boisterousness." He said the new rules were an encouragement for the students to live by the SMC motto, "Teach Me Goodness, Discipline and Knowledge."

Action would be taken against students who broke residence rules, Father Orsini said.

One SMC student said "the morning rules are all right, but the evening rules are ridiculous." "I am making preparations to move out of residence," another said.

Knox Celebrates 100th Birthday

Knox College Wednesday night cut loose on the first part of a three-day celebration of her 100th anniversary with the first of three Laidlaw Lectures, delivered by the Rev. Daniel Jenkins, an alumni banquet, and a service in Knox Church.

Today, the centenary celebrations continue with the second and third of the Laidlaw Lectures, and two Centenary Lectures by the Rev. Joseph Haroutunian, professor of systematic theology, McCormick Theological Seminary, Chicago.

The centenary ends tomorrow with the fourth and fifth Laidlaw Lectures by the Rev. Jenkins, of Kings Weigh House Church, London, Eng.

Last night the Rev. Jenkins addressed faculty, students, alumni, and members of other theological colleges in the Knox Chapel on "The present interest in religious Christianity." This is the first in his series "Beyond Religion" concerning problems of modern religious faith.

At last night's alumnae dinner, Dean James I. McCord, chairman on Calvin Research, World Presbyterian Alliance, spoke on the present status of Calvinist research.

At a convocation following the dinner 10 theological degrees were conferred on members of Knox College.

Dressed in colorful academic gowns, members of the college senate and other officials were in the front row of Knox Church for the convocation ceremonies as members of the Presbyterian Synod of Toronto and Kingston and members of Knox Church parish watched the elaborate ceremony of conferring degrees.

Main address at the convocation was by Prof. Haroutunian on "How to hear the Gospel".

Library Opens

The University of Toronto library opened yesterday, but normal library hours will not be in effect until Oct. 4.

The library will be open from 9 a.m. to 5.30 p.m. for two weeks. On Oct. 4, hours will be extended to 10 p.m., and a study room will be kept open until 11 p.m.

The extended hours will be in effect until May 8, 1959.

New Blotters Free For All

This year's combination calendar-blotted is ready to record the idle doodles of essay-weary students.

A Toronto University Press official says the blotter is available free of charge at the bookstore, the Students' Administrative Council building and porters' lodges across the campus.

Colored an inspiring yellow, the blotter carries dates of all major events coming up during the academic year. Listed phone numbers are also included.

Nine Changes In Staff Posts

J. C. Evans, Registrar of the University of Toronto, has been appointed to the new post of Director of Alumni Affairs.

Other appointments announced by the university this summer included new heads for the Departments of Mathematics and Pharmacology and the addition of a European specialist each to the Faculty of Dentistry and the Department of Physics.

Mr. Evans is to co-ordinate the work of various groups representing 100,000-odd living alumni of the university, of whom more than 7,000 live in the United States and 3,000 on other continents.

Mr. Evans joined the administrative staff of the university in 1945 and was appointed registrar in 1949. He will continue as registrar on a part-time basis during the coming session.

Dr. Daniel B. DeLury has been appointed chairman of the Department of Mathematics. He succeeds Prof. I. R. Pounder who is retiring after 46 years on the staff.

Dr. DeLury has been Director of the Department of Mathematical Statistics, Ontario Research Foundation, since 1947, and concurrently, special lecturer in mathematics at the university.

Dr. E. A. Sellers has been appointed head of the Department of Pharmacology, replacing Dr. Harry Cullumbe who has resigned to enter industry in the United States.

Dr. Sellers had been chief superintendent of the Defence Research Laboratories since 1955. He is advisor on medical research and development to the Royal Canadian Navy.

Dr. Egil P. Harvold, a Norwegian, has been appointed head of the department of Orthodontics in the Faculty of Dentistry.

He is a cleft palate specialist who studied at the University of Leipzig, the Norwegian State Dental School and the University of Oslo.

Dr. Jan Van Kranendonk, a Dutch theoretical physicist, has been appointed Associate Professor of Physics.

He obtained his PhD at the University of Amsterdam and has been a lecturer at the Institut Lorentz, University of Leiden, Holland. Dr. Kranendonk developed the theory of pressure-induced infrared absorption discovered some ten years ago at the U of T.

Prof. F. E. W. Wetmore, acting dean of the Faculty of Arts for the 1957-58 session while Dean of the Faculty Moffatt A. Woodside served as acting U of T president, has been appointed associate dean, a new post.

Prof. D. G. Creighton has been appointed the H. A. Innis Research Professor for the coming session. Prof. Creighton will continue to head the Department of History but will be relieved of his teaching load.

In University College, I. E. Woodbury has been appointed acting head of the Department of Classics, in place of Prof. R. J. Getty who has resigned to become the first holder of the George L. Patterson Professorship of Latin at the University of North Carolina.

Prof. W. S. McCullough has been appointed acting head of the Department of Near Eastern Studies in the college during Prof. F. V. Winnet's leave of absence to head the American Schools of Oriental Research.

Crosswalks have always been a point of concern on this campus, sliced as it is by three arterial roads.

With more than 13,000 students oscillating daily from one side to the other, the hazards these thoroughfares present are enormous.

In years past we have offered several suggestions designed to improve the situation. The Metropolitan Council has at last indicated that it is beginning to get the point.

But only beginning.

The present crosswalk system, represented by a sign and two thin white lines, is obviously inadequate. It gives neither motorist nor pedestrian a fair gamble for their lives.

The addition, endorsed Tuesday by the council, of an eight-by-twenty foot "X" fifty feet before the crossing is only a limited improvement.

The greatest danger any crosswalk produces is the possibility of a stopped car obscuring the pedestrian from the view of an overtaking vehicle. Despite signs, motorists on Toronto's car-packed streets can fatally mistake a car waiting at a crossing for one which is parked.

The only real answer to this problem are zebra stripes. They have been employed effectively both in England and in British Columbia for several years.

We fail to see why Metro still declines to introduce them, for they represent vividly one corridor of safety through a vehicular minefield.

State of the Unions

By Mark Nichols

Most of Ontario yesterday heaved a sigh of relief as negotiations between brewery workers and beer manufacturers indicated settlement of the more than 40-days-long beer drought might be near.

But almost simultaneously, nearly 75 per cent of the working force of Sudbury, Ont., was idled by a strike against the International Nickel Company.

In Toronto, a close settlement has staved off a strike by some 3,500 municipal employees but at the same time, 450 striking cement masons have halted work on millions of dollars of construction here.

These, and more strikes and threatened strikes across Canada raise the question of the rights and wrongs of union activities at the proportions they have reached. Particularly for young adults now, there is a problem that is more than practical, that reaches beyond the actual dynamics of economy: a question of how, when, for how much and at what man should work.

In the case of the Toronto strike by cement masons, a retaliatory measure has been taken by the Toronto Builders' Exchange. A lockout, barring all masons from jobs as long as they continue to strike, manifests a sentiment that the builders "are tired of being pushed around by the unions". The action and the statement indicates a change in attitude about unions that has nothing to do with the black smudges of union racketeering dredged up by United States Senate committees.

What are we to think of unions now? In all but isolated sections of the country, unions have become strong, they are powers to be reckoned with, they have, in some industries, negotiated the Guaranteed Annual Wage, they have secured bountiful fringe benefits and pensions.

Where does the young man stand when he looks for concepts to admire in the economic struggles of wealthy North America? The days of the fanatical unionist, fighting for social justice, steering to the left in order to secure the inalienable rights of man for his fellows has almost vanished.

But the unions remain, constantly pushing upwards in the social scale, pushing to give every worker his car, every family its television, every wife her platinum toaster.

Our democracy is founded on the belief that men are entitled to whatever they are capable of acquiring without harming their fellows. For that reason ours is still the land of promise.

In the early history of Canada and of the United States, men made fabulous fortunes, monopolies grew and legislation was enacted to limit them. Taxation on great fortunes made it necessary for the incredibly wealthy to set up charitable foundations to drain off money.

Perhaps the unions now are nearing the point where legislative controls must be enacted. It is a tremendous problem, and this is not a demand for restrictions on man's right to organize to correct wrongs. How such controls might be effected, it is difficult to say, and the government that does must act with the utmost care.

UWO May Lack Adequate Defense

There is a big, glaring question mark facing University of Toronto Blues as they prep for tomorrow night's Intercollegiate senior football opener against Western.

Has Mustang coach John Metras assembled a defensive unit capable of halting a Toronto attack that is expected to be as potent in the air as along the turf?

No one except Mr. Metras knows the answer to what could be the key factor in determining the 1958 outcome of the Yates Cup come mid-November.

Although it wasn't said in so many words, comments in the Varsity Stadium coaches' room last night indicated feeling here is that Western may be weak defensively.

After hearing a list of former Horsies no longer in camp, assistant coach Jack Kennedy grinned: "We can't help but beat them."

That was said jokingly, but there may be more truth than kidding in Kennedy's words.

Mustangs will visit tomorrow without the services of several outstanding defensive players, including Willie Casanova, Neil Desborough, Dave Langhorne, Bill Britton, Morgan Clark and a few others.

That leaves Metras with a pretty shallow defensive backfield, and casts a heavy burden on his regular offensive players, who may be required to go both ways.

Western's best defensive back returning is Doug MacKenzie, and conjecture is that the 185-pound veteran will be in Mustangs' starting offense tomorrow.

Varsity assistant coach John McManus, who scouted the Western-OAC game in London last weekend, offered MacKenzie, Lionel Conacher, Roger Stewart, George Shepherd and Frank Cosentino as a starting backfield.

With the Blues, meanwhile, the personnel situation is bright. Only halfback Dave Creswell and centre Nick Bruchovsky are expected to miss the opening game.

And Creswell is the only definite non-starter. He is still nursing a torn leg muscle suffered at camp, and may see active combat until next week.

Bruchovsky went home yesterday with the 'flu, and may not be out of sick bay in time. Quarterback Larry Joynt returned last night after three days in bed with the same ailment.

After yesterday's long workout, Joynt was "pretty tired," but should be raring to go by the opening whistle at 8 p.m. tomorrow.

Coach Dalt White put his charges through a two and one-half hour practice last night, including 20 minutes of semi-scrimmage as a nightcap.

Impressive during the brief head-knocking finale was rookie fullback Peter Joyce, who bulled through a squad of defenders to clear territory on two occasions.

The former RMC standout requires half a dozen steps to get rolling, but once he's in high gear the opposition faces a runaway bulldozer.

Just Jots . . . McGill's huge import tackle Tom Steff has been ruled ineligible for Intercollegiate play because he missed his degree from Maryland by half a credit . . . a three-year letter man with the Terrapins, he had been regarded as Redmen's prize rookie.

Coach Bruce (Bones) Coulter, former understudy to Sam the Rifle on the Alouette roster, will also miss halfback Carl Hansen . . . He's out for three games with torn knee ligaments . . .

Curt Russell and Gene Chrostekski were named co-captains this week . . . Russell was captain last year, while "Stick" missed the '57 season with a bad back injury . . . Queen's coach Frank Tindall, reviewing movies at Gael's training camp, called Gene "the best end in the league" . . .

Also questioned last night was the playing condition of Western's Conacher . . . The Little Train missed the first week of training while performing at the CNE water show . . .

Veteran readers of these pages will be glad to hear the inimitable One-Eyed Benny is returning . . . watch for his opening epistle tomorrow . . .

RAY DUNN

DUNC BRODIE

Ray Dunn At Hershey; Dummies Seeking Brodie

Professional hockey lures are being dangled in front of Varsity hockey Blues and at least two are nibbling at offers.

Goaltender Ray Dunn departed from football this week for the Hershey Bears' training camp at Niagara Falls, although the ex-junior netminder is expected back in two weeks.

In his third year in PHE, Dunn will probably turn down any pro offers this year to complete his education and return to the Varsity cage.

Fiery winger Dunc Brodie is recipient of the other offer — this one by the world champion Whitby Dunlops.

Brodie has been talking with Dummie general manager Wren Blair but, contrary to reports, has made no commitments or placed his name on any contracts.

"I'm definitely finishing out the football season with Varsity," Dunc said last night, and added: "I'll worry about hockey when football is over."

Last year, Brodie teamed with centre Mike Elik and winger John Macdonald to form Blues' most potent line in their fourth consecutive Intercollegiate championship.

Also on the hockey scene, indications are that Varsity will become the first team ever to win the college crown five years in a row.

Veteran captain Dave (Red) Stephen has promised coach Jack Kennedy he'll be available for full-time duty.

Newcomers expected include forward Bob McKnight, a standout with St. Michael's College Majors in junior play last year.

Another Plea To Reporters

Hear ye! Hear ye!

The Sports Editor, who went into hiding after yesterday's column, has been found.

And he has promised to be in the office this afternoon from 3 until 5 to greet all prospective reporters.

The staff is growing, slowly but surely.

By Monday, we expect we'll have to turn away dozens of Ring Lardners, Grantland Rices and Jimmy Cannons.

If you can't attend the little party this afternoon, it is recommended that you come back to-night after 7.30.

And one thing that was erroneously omitted in yesterday's appeal — we appreciate gals as much as gents.

Distaffers are always welcome. So bring your mother-in-law, and come along. Quickly now.

HART HOUSE FALL DANCE

Friday, October 3rd . . . stag or drag . . . 75c

Men and Angels

by LIZ BINKS

We might begin this column by saying there is something reassuring about Toronto in the Fall after a summer in points far distant and it's not so bad to be back after all.

We might begin it by inclining a gracious nod towards the high rostrum of learning which has reared itself before us again and then perhaps add a disdainful smile that says there is little so new under the sun which is likely to make this year different from any other.

We might have begun by talking about the beer strike. We would have said hello to Jack in the KCR anyway and promised not to notice that the sign over the Park Plaza is blue this year. But now the strike is over and we in Toronto the Good can hold our heads high again.

We might shrug sadly because Hoskin Ave's proud days are over. A pedestrian crosswalk has been installed and daredevils must now content themselves with jumping puddles. But we could also grin wickedly as we think of the once - reckless motorists pulling up short before the accusing finger of civic authority.

And by then we would have reached the middle of the column without acknowledging that we, too, can be IBM kids and contribute to the efficiency of Organization Highbrow. And we could boast wallet-sized ATL cards with perforated character sketches on the back flap.

We might then continue by paying a mental visit to the familiar meeting places as undergraduates gather again to measure out their lecture hours with coffee spoons. We would see the familiar groups forming and the familiar barriers rising, and in their wake new ones following familiar patterns.

At this point we would extend a welcome to freshmen . . . and here we would hesitate. Should we urge them to get in step, or tell them to go home? Or should we simply direct them to the lecture room they cannot find?

Then we would begin to wonder—just briefly—why it is that a university to be rarified, must so often be phony, and why university students, to play the part, must not only accept but also justify the phony.

And by then we would have combined clichés with a bit of poor philosophy and would be feeling quite smug that the first piece of blank paper has been filled.

We might end the column by quoting the remainder of the passage from which the title is taken. But then, that would be telling . . .

Vic Residence Construction Halted After Large-Scale Union Walk-out

The city-wide construction strike has brought work on Victoria College's new Women's Residence to a standstill.

The walk-out may delay completion of the new $1,000,000 residence. It was originally scheduled to be finished May 1, 1959.

The same strike by the 450 members of the Operative Plasterers and Cement Masons International Union has closed work on six other major city projects including the $12,000,000 O'Keefe Civic Auditorium.

Yesterday's lockout by 80 contractors in the Toronto Builders' Exchange halts all major building programs in the city.

The job of moving the Forestry Building north on St. George St. was completed yesterday.

The 250-foot move of the building will clear space for a new Engineering Building, part of the university's expansion program.

Superstructures of the Women's Athletic and Dental Buildings have been completed Buildings and Grounds Supervisor A. Russell said yesterday, "We don't know yet just how it (the lockout) is going to affect them."

Anglin-Norcross Ontario Ltd., is building the $1,800,000 Women's Athletic Building along a 270-foot frontage on Huron Street.

Total cost of the dental project will be about $6 million, including $700,000 for the land, and $1 million for scientific and technical equipment.

It will be housed in a five-storey modern brick building covering the whole city block bounded by Elm, Chestnut, Edward and Centre Streets near the Royal Victoria Hospital.

Facilities will ultimately be provided for an undergraduate enrollment of 725 compared with last year's 417 in the faculty.

UC, Vic Rolling On Follies, Bob

Two colleges yesterday got on the road toward the first of their major escapades of the year—Victoria's Bob Apple Battle, and the UC Follies.

Writer-directors Sy Zysman, Sheldon Godfrey, and Mike Cowan, said their Follies show is already written. Auditions, which started last night, continue today and tomorrow. They close Tuesday and the cast will be announced Wednesday night at the Red and White Dance.

This year's show will be an original musical comedy. The writers said the plot centers on the traditional rivalry between UC and the Faculty of Engineering.

Blanks have been left in the script to fill in with up-to-date satire material, they said.

Co-producer Harvey Levenstein said last night, "I would just like to remind the Engineers that last time the Follies had anything to do with Skulmen they succeeded in stealing the legendary Skule cannon and fired it on the campus to announce the opening of Follies ticket sales."

Victoria College freshmen elected leaders yesterday for their initiations beginning Monday.

The elected frosh will plan freshman initiation rebellion and engineer the Vic Bob Apple battle at the end of initiation week.

Vic Union Vice-president Joe Gill was "disappointed" with the 45% freshman voting turnout.

"However, I'm very pleased with those elected," he said.

Women Bob winners are: Judy Caldecott, Jane Farrow, Pat Lawson. Because of a voting tie, four men were elected: John Wood, Gary Hodgins, John Norman and Apple Battle leader Bob Ecclestone, who polled the highest votes.

Sophomores will defend a greased pole topped by a freshman beanie in the Bob Apple Battle. Last year the beanie was on the wrong end of the pole — buried underground. Freshmen managed to demolish the sophomore guard of seven, but time ran out before they could uncover the buried beanie.

You've heard of the Subterraneans, of course. Why not come down and meet them at 4.00 p.m. today?

Come on down and dig. I mean, like dig. A monster staff meeting, recruiting session with free green tea and tamales for all comes off today at 4 p.m. in the cave under the SAC Building.

Challenges, Charges Volley As Campus Party Blowup Sparks Mammoth Debate

Name-calling and challenges rent yesterday's steamy weather as a sudden demand for debate by the campus Liberal club brought hot language and answering challenges from campus Tories and CCFers.

U of T Liberal Club president Jim Doris lit the fuse when he asked the Progressive Conservative campus members to debate at some time to be specified the topic: "Resolved that the Frost Government is aged, incompetent, and irresponsible."

Tory and CCF backers on campus quickly got into the act with proclamations and challenges that rapidly indicated a mammoth, tri-party debate would be in the offing soon.

Liberal Club president Doris said he hoped the Conservatives would answer the challenge as quickly as possible.

The reply came within hours as Tory Club chief Gordon Ross (1 Law) got wind of the challenge and posted notice of willingness to debate "with the utmost pleasure at the soonest available time."

"In the past," he said, "the club on campus has been ineffectual, ineffective, and inert. We are pleased to note that it is inert."

"The charges that the Liberal club has levelled," he added, "are without foundation."

CCFer Jerry Caplan (IV UC) added the voice of the third campus party when he issued a general condemnation of both Tories and Liberals, charging that they planned to "officially combine forces."

Until recently, he said, the Liberal party in Ontario had "at least attempted to keep up the myth of being a truly liberal party."

He cited "the recent involvement of the Hon. John Wintermeyer in the new scandal of the Frost Government in which Mr. Wintermeyer and several Conservative ministers made exorbitant profits on natural gas."

He said the Liberal party should have demanded Wintermeyer's resignation after the affair. "Nor did Mr. Wintermeyer himself feel noble enough to consider stepping down," Caplan said.

He continues that the Progressive Conservatives, with "their inimitable capacity for standing still," had "said nothing new in the past decade." He said that the Tories seemed to place highways before such things as education, health and welfare.

"Highway scandals, gas scandals, an impoverished education system, nothing seems to deter them (the Tories)," he said.

"Mr. Frost seems to have found himself a monument forever and ever on the 401 highway," Mr. Caplan said.

He added that the Liberal platform showed no more promise than the Conservatives'. Mr. Caplan described the Liberal attitude as "advocating the 'supreme reign of individualism.'"

"Even if it means that those several thousands who are infirmed, perhaps, or ill, or unemployed through no choice of their own, or aged, may perhaps suffer just somewhat while we who are superior are enjoying the fruits of our higher positions. Thus say the Liberals," he concluded.

Mr. Caplan made his statement after campus Tories and Liberals challenged one another to debate. "The CCF club," he said, "defies either or both of these parties to attempt to defend themselves on an open platform, the date of the debate to be set at any time those two groups find convenient."

Liberal leader Jim Doris said his club would hold its first official meeting Oct. 15 in the University College Women's Union to hear Senator David Croll, formerly MP for Spadina.

"We're looking forward to a big year," he said. "We have a club loaded with energy and drive."

Faubus In Flames In Ottawa Prank

Ottawa, Sept. 25 — Students at Ottawa University marched 1,400 strong to hang Orville Faubus in effigy last night—and ended up burning him on a pyre.

In a move reminiscent of Victoria College's Faubus effigy burning last October, the students chanted "Down with Faubus" as sparks flew 100 feet into the air.

The giant burning on the Ottawa campus began as a neck-tie party. When scaffolding collapsed, one student climbed onto the rubble and laid the Faubus effigy on top. While the pyre burned, student leaders read a proclamation condemning the Arkansas governor.

"Education is a universal right of man guaranteed by the United States constitution," Student Federation Vice-president Louis Cliche said.

"The US furthermore is a country which during World War II shed its blood for the suppression of racist theories," SF President Marcel Prud'homme said.

The meeting was part of Ottawa U's Freshman Week. It was covered by press and television representatives.

Interested in debating? Read on.

This column is the first in a series designed to publicize campus debating activities. First thing to note is that the University of Toronto Debating Union will hold its annual debating trials about October 15.

A six-man team will be selected in both prepared and impromptu debating. Every student is invited to try and appreciation forms will soon be available at the Students' Administrative Council office.

The debating union itself hasn't received too much publicity in the past, although it organizes all debates which the U of T attends as a university, on or off campus.

This year, it sends four-man teams to the Eastern United States as well as Montreal and other Canadian cities.

Other projects planned include extension of the successful debating tourney held here last year. More than 20 American and Canadian teams are expected to participate in the meet this January.

A public service program in the offing will include the sponsorship of high school debates and a radio program.

The union draws members from all the university's colleges and faculties. Besides having their own debating unions, they name representatives to the UTDU — the overall co-ordinating body.

This column will, from time to time, tell you about debates between the colleges and faculties, to encourage greater interest in them.

Hart House, perhaps the stronghold of parliamentary debating at the university, has an excellent schedule for this year.

The first debate, on Oct. 9, features Dr. Eugene Forsey, research director of the Canadian Labor Congress. The topic: "Resolved that trade unions in Canada are becoming too arrogant."

Memories of the beer strike should provide plenty of fuel for argument.

UofT Grabs Shoot Honors

The University of Toronto's Canadian Officers' Training Corps this summer became the first university rifle team to compete at the annual Dominion of Canada Rifle Association Shoot.

The meet was held at the Connaught Ranges, Ottawa, August 11 to 15.

University College's Fred Munn led the Toronto team in collecting honors taking third place in the Brewers' Aggregate Trophy competition for newcomers.

Other members of the four-man team were Jack Maleswich (II SPS), Mike Cavanagh (II UC) and George Pasciewicz (IV SPS). Major D. F. S. Thompson, U.C. English professor was also on the team.

Pasciewicz won the Consolation Shoot, a last-day event for those who have not won money previously.

Everyone except Cavanagh took home some prize money.

Lieutenant-Colonel A. C. M. Ross, a Victoria College French professor and a keen shot himself was in charge of the team.

See Locale Changes For FROS, Faculties

Students returning to the campus this year are finding that a lot of things just ain't where they used to be.

The Faculty of Arts is now in the old book store next to the Students' Administrative Council building. Its old quarters in the Victoria Club have been taken over by the School of Architecture.

The Mathematics Department is now in Baldwin House, 33 St. George St., while the Psychology Department, formerly at 100 St. George, hopes to be at 112 St. George by Sept. 29.

The Zoology Department will also move to 112 St. George in a few weeks. It is now located in the Biology Building. The Forestry Building is at 45 St. George, and under present plans the Downsview Aerophysics branch will be on Dufferin St. by November.

The following buildings are also at different locations: The University Health Service at 110 St. George; the Alumni Association at 18 Willcocks St.; the FROS house at 3 Willcocks with the National Employment Service; the Campus Co-operative Residences office at 32 Sussex St.

Ring Gone

Dr. F. W. Heichelheim of University College has been robbed of what he feels may be the only ring of its type in Toronto.

Some time between Friday September 5 and Tuesday September 9 while Dr. Heichelheim was in Great Britain, thieves broke into his UC office and removed a Tudor ring along with some other Tudor artifacts.

Dating from the sixteenth century, it may be worth about $50, Dr. Heichelheim said yesterday. He uncovered it during excavations in England.

The ring, which is an imitation of a Roman ring, has a heart and a star on the mounting, surrounded by the inscription "Love is Best."

Dr. Heichelheim hopes that the ring will turn up in a local pawnshop. He has a picture of it which he will show to anybody who thinks he has seen it.

RCAF Vet Gets Post

A former RCAF pilot has been appointed head of University of Toronto's biggest department.

U of T president Claude T. Bissell announced the appointment of Dr. D. Carlton Williams as director of the Department of University Extension Tuesday night.

Dr. Williams, 46, graduated with a BA in psychology at the University of Manitoba and took post graduate degrees at U of T. He joined U of T in 1949 after receiving a full professorship in the Manitoba psychology department.

Canadian television audiences have come to know Dr. Williams through last year's 12-part CBC series "Live and Learn". He has written for Canadian, British and American journals.

Almost 18,000 students are registered at the Extension Department—approximately 5,000 more than the full time enrollment.

Present Expansion Plans Like Post-War Says Smith

By Harvey Shepherd
Varsity News Editor

Sidney Smith says the year 1956-57 coupled the past of the University of Toronto with the present to an extent comparable with the post-war year 1945-46.

That was the opinion expressed by the outgoing U of T president in his annual report for 1956-57. The last academic year he was to spend as U of T president.

Some of the things he looked forward to were the great expansion now under way of physical university facilities, a new deal for the staff and a great increase in the university's enrollment.

The report was released after the Varsity ceased publication last term.

The major portion of the large block of land west of St. George St. recently acquired by the university is to be used by the faculty of arts, the report said. Included will be a central Arts Building (for most of the departments now precariously lodged in various scattered locations). New science buildings will also be built.

The expansion of the Faculty of Applied Science and Engineering, "of almost equal urgency", will be expedited by the construction of a new Engineering Building west of the McClelland Laboratory.

Small and medium-sized lecture rooms will be the rule in the new buildings.

Enrollment in the university is expected to increase to 23,000-24,000 by 1968 from the 12,871 enrolled in 1956-57, the report stated.

But, Mr. Smith stressed, there should, despite the obvious efficiency of a standardized approach, be "freedom for the student to develop his own interests and capacities."

In addition to the absence of large lecture halls in the new buildings, the encouragement of "great teaching" would contribute to this end.

Teachers' salaries are to be raised by 1959-60 to a low of $5,500 for lecturers increasing to $12,000 and up for professors from the 1956-57 levels which ranged from a low for lecturers of $3,500 to a high for professors of $10,000.

Salary increases are to be decided on merit. They will not be automatic and will not necessarily be equal in amount in individual cases within a particular range.

All appointments of promotions to the rank of Lecturer or Assistant Professor will be for one year, renewable by the Board for only one year at a time. There will be a repeal of the "up or out" regulation under which a Lecturer's employment would be terminated if he was not promoted to Assistant professor in six years.

"We must protect and expand the opportunity for the members of our staff to pursue independent research," He pointed out the tendency which had begun in and has continued since the war years for the government, the armed forces and industry to dominate the financing, procedures and control of research and even "the sources from which ideas for research originate."

Most of the plans for the next twelve years, it was pointed out, were the work of the Advisory Planning Committee, appointed in October, 1956 and composed of representatives of the Board, the academic staff and the administrative staff.

Much of the financing, the president said, would be looked for from the corporate donor.

He said the university should ask the businessman for money by appealing not to their generosity but to their common sense.

"Industry needs educated people; universities need money to educate them."

Mr. Smith's last annual report marked the end of twelve years as president of the university.

Resume:

SAC Loses -No Raise

Last April the Students' Administrative Council stood fast on a decision not to distribute Torontoensis free to the graduating class—and lost an estimated $3,000 in added income.

The decision came after a proposed budget based on a $3 hike in student's fees to SAC was thrown out by the university administration. Students now pay $5 to SAC included in incidental fees.

Reason the administration gave for not presenting the budget to the university's Board of Governors was the increase gave students no tangible value for their money.

However, Simcoe Hall indicated the budget would be approved for the board if the SAC agreed to distribute the university yearbook free to graduating students. Normal cost of "Nensis" is $4.50.

Since the budget was presented after last year's final SAC meeting, the council executive felt it did not have the power to reverse the full-council decision. No action was taken on Simcoe Hall's alternative and a deficit budget was presented to the Board of Governors.

Earlier the decision to charge the normal $4.50 for the yearbook was made in a publications committee meeting and endorsed by the council.

The committee felt "Nensis" would be cheapened and lose much of its prestige if it became an automatic gift to graduates.

Without the $3 increase, this year's SAC is operating on a deficit budget, withdrawing more than $3,500 from its $16,000 capital reserve fund.

SAC President Vince Kelly Wednesday said he was glad the issue had gone the way it did.

"Although we desperately need the money we think the decision not to accept the administration's alternative preserved the integrity of the SAC as an independent student organization," he said.

He added: "with exams pressing, there was no time to present this thing properly last year. It will be given serious reconsideration this year."

One of the basic weaknesses of any student government is the shortness of its term in office.

Toronto's Students' Administrative Council is no exception. With representatives sitting for only one year, the council consistently wastes the first three months of each academic year trying to pick up threads left dangling by their predecessors.

More than that, the new council, however active and intelligent, is always lacking the full background of major issues initiated the year before.

The weakness applies particularly to SAC activities which carry over from the spring term into September. In order to achieve anything, the incumbent council must make decisions which will be entirely the concern of their successors.

Finance and the All Varsity Revue present the most frequent problems.

If the AVR is to be, at all successful, major decisions must be made in the spring to allow producers and directors time to reach the planning stage during the summer months.

Much bitterness was generated last year when the new council reversed an implied decision by their predecessors. Months of AVR planning by one group was thrown to the gods; and a new group was forced to mount an entirely new production in less than five months.

This year's council is in much the same confusion over finance, after the university administration last April rejected a proposed SAC budget based on a three-dollar-a-student fee increase.

Before the present council can even begin to see this issue clearly, most of the ground seeded last spring will have to be reploughed.

The budget will have to be replanned, explained repassed and presented again. The Administration will have to be approached and new negotiations made. Committees will be convened to consider side issues twice thrashed over. And in the end, the whole thing could again well come too late to be accepted at all, and thus be passed on from generation to generation via an infinite regression into chaos.

Although such a possibility is at present as insubstantial as a nightmare, the problem remains realistic.

The solution is, we think, a simple one.

Half the council's representatives should be elected on a two-year basis while in their third year at university. Holding secondary posts during the first session, they could succeed to the major posts in the second session and thus have a clear and continuing understanding of the issues before the council.

The objection to this system is that no student can afford to sacrifice two years of his university career to the demands of being a student politician.

We feel that the increased efficiency produced, coupled with the fact that certain students would welcome the opportunity, negates this argument.

For it is only in this manner that the SAC can effectively fulfill its functions and obligations on this campus.

Canada's Stand?

Race and Empire

By Paul Hockings

The wheel has come full circle when Governor Faubus can smugly tell his supporters about the latest racial riots in Notting Hill, England. But Faubus is of course adept at closing one eye.

Racial discrimination takes a similar form and springs from similar arguments in many parts of the world. Yet in Arkansas it has the support of local officialdom. In Britain it does not.

In Arkansas the status quo of segregation and unequal opportunities is maintained by the State Government, by lawyers, schoolmen, civic leaders — and possibly the Church. In Britain neither the Government nor the Labor Party nor the lawyers nor the Church has ever said a word in favor of segregation.

Britain — unlike Canada, Australia, New Zealand, and South Africa — considers that every Commonwealth citizen has a right to live in her country. And from early in this century considerable numbers of West Indians and other colored people have settled in Liverpool, Cardiff, London, Newcastle and Glasgow. Since the War this migration has increased and is still increasing rapidly. In 1954 there were 30,000 African negroes in Britain, 20,000 West Indians, and 10,000 locally born negroes and mulattoes.

Why do they continue to go to Britain when their living conditions there are steadily becoming less congenial?

First there is the stimulus of overpopulation in the Caribbean and parts of Africa. Secondly there is that ancient myth about the streets of London being paved with gold.

Doubtless these men would be absorbed more smoothly if they could offer the economy some useful technical skills; but for the most part they can only take their place in the ranks of labourers with the least education and the most intolerance.

So where does the fault lie? Partly with the English laborer, partly with the colored migrant, and partly with the Commonwealth Governments — all of them, including Canada.

In the first place we should perhaps expect the governments of the British West Indies and Ghana to place some restriction on emigration to England. Certainly we should expect them to propagate much more information on birth control — now politely called "family planning."

But this is not all. We should expect the Governments of Canada, Australia and New Zealand to assist Britain by opening their doors to these over-populated countries, especially as they are continually in need of English-speaking migrants. On the other hand India, Pakistan, Ceylon and Malaya faced with their own population problems can hardly be expected to help. And it is much more comforting to forget that the black sheep South Africa is still a member of the British Commonwealth.

Canada's attitude? Surely a noble one. She allows a few West Indians — apart from diplomats and students — to enter the country on a quota basis. Prime Minister Diefenbaker tells the General Council of the United Church that the world should reject the un-Christian theories of race superiority which stand in the way of universal brotherhood. And the Minister of External Affairs apologizes humbly to the South African Government because its policies were actually criticized in the Canadian House of Commons!

Perhaps Mr. Faubus is not the only man to close one eye.

Robert Service

Robert Service will not be buried in Poet's corner. He would be as out of place there as Sam McGee out of his furnace. Too Canadian to be a poet, he is secure in a tradition that died long before he did. It is a tradition that Canada, the poetic part, anyway, is trying to live down but will have to learn to live with, a comfort to the stolid and a thorn in the aesthete's side.

To rhyme of rich and rainy nights,
When like a legion leap the lights
And take the town with gold;
Of taverns quaint where poets dream,

Of cafes gaudily apleam,
And vice that's overbold;
Of crystal shimmer, silver sheen,
Of soft and soothing nicotine,
Of wine that's rich and old.
Of gutters, chimney-tops and stars,
Of apple-carts and motor-cars,
The sordid and sublime;
Of wealth and misery that meet
In every great and little street,
Of glory and of grime;
Of all the living tide that flows—
From princes down to puppet shows—

I'll make my humble rhyme.
So if you like the sort of thing
Of which I also like to sing,
Just give my stuff a look;
And if you don't, no harm is done—
In writing it, I've had my fun;
Good luck to you and everyone—
And so . . .

HERE ENDS MY BOOK.

Music

HHO Triumph In Brussels

For the first time in Canadian musical history superlatives such as "ravishing", "exquisite" were used to describe a group of Canadian musicians abroad.

Our own Hart House orchestra in the fourth year of its existence sent Belgian and American critics raving to typewriters and teletypes. "A ray of light in the gloom" read a preliminary report in the Globe and Mail.

On a grant from Canada Council this selected group of Toronto string players (from both the Toronto Symphony and the CBC Orchestras) played in the Grand Auditorium at the Brussels' World Fair on Canada Day, August 25, and put a very savoury olive into what would have been a rather dull diplomatic cocktail party.

The Hart House Orchestra's successful concert at the Brussels Fair has been covered in the article below by Chris Wilson, a former chairman of the Hart House Orchestra Association, who was on the spot.

BRUSSELS, (CUP Special) — Society turned out in force, in fact all the tickets had been distributed to a social and political elite and none were available for the rank and file of music lovers. Representatives of the Canadian press were only able to enter after several hours of suspense and intrigue. It was the European press if anyone, who told the truth of the triumph, with comprehensive critical notices, that we would call "raves".

The orchestra was acclaimed for its courage and ability to tackle a programme of string music always interesting and always with contrast. Their pure tone received warm praise and the authority of their conductor, Boyd Neel, was reaffirmed.

Flawless ensemble, effortless trills, proper balance of forces and sensitive response to Dr. Neel's robust direction communicated the essence of the music in a manner more fresh, acceptable and convincing than that of any similar orchestra we had heard in London, England, during the season.

In these terms, the Hart House Orchestra's contribution to this Exposition Universal emerged as significant and worthwhile and from the universal language and values of music has come a truly Canadian contribution to the culture of the world. Under these circumstances, we need not be too soul searching about a Canadian culture in the limited nationalistic sense. We have passed that stage when we have such cultural ambassadors able to take their place in the international scene.

Finally a tribute from afar to those who have worked for and supported the Hart House Orchestra Associates. HHOA offer a unique example of the liaison that can be established between a university and the culture of a country and one in which those concerned should take sensible pride and strive to continue.

—Chris Wilson.

Toronto musical organizations halted for a complete reassessment after a recent CBC announcement that the weekly CEC Symphony broadcasts have been scheduled for Sunday nights. These concerts, free to the public, will have name soloists and will be broadcast from the 1,000 seat Odeon Carlton Theatre.

Since the members in the TSO and the CBC Symphony are almost the same, this means that an additional strain is heaped on them, considering the fact that there are the Sunday afternoon 'pop' concerts. Concert schedules on campus have been disastrously affected.

The Hart House Music Committee is faced with a considerable problem of re-programming, while the Hart House Orchestra Associates are even more seriously affected.

The Associates are currently re-scheduling the concert to week-days, but needless to say, the problem is formidable.

—Elmo Ciprietti.

Morpheus Descending

The Hunters (Imperial) is another one of those grandly produced, wide-screen fly pics that never gets off the ground.

Herein, Screenwriter Wendell Mayes has prosaically constructed an airborne triangle, isosceles to the point of being obtuse. Corner one is a disillusioned, frightened combat Lieutenant (Lee Phillips) who talks big, hunts small and drinks to make up the difference. Corner two is his willowy young bride (May Britt) who paints like Picasso and looks like Venus. Major Robert Mitchum, an icy-nerved fighter pilot who hunts MIG's in the daytime and other guy's wives at night, completes the romantic geometry.

"I'm in love with you, Mrs. Abbott," drones Mitchum with an expression as inscrutable as the nearby Buddha.

"Am I foolish?" replies May, sidling toward the bedroom.

After thirty minutes of such 'true romance', Director Dick Powell finally gets his boys in the air where the action is fast (thanks to the U.S.A.F.) and very well photographed. Soon, however, hubby gets shot down over Red Korea, but does Major Mitchum return to waiting wifey May? No sir! He belly lands his F-86, braves half the Red Army to bring hubby back alive and winds up convalescing in a military hospital. And what's happened to wifey May? Oh she's still around but Robert can't see her. He's too busy watching those vapour trails in the sky.

Director Dick Powell offers colour, action, stock characters and dull dialogue, never developing the dramatic possibilities of an originally flimsy story line. His actors go through the motions, but that's all. The only inspiring element here is May Britt whose sloe-eyed Swedish beauty makes up for her acting inexperience. Robert Wagner also happens along as a straight-shooting, beat-talking ace to add some much needed cornball humour.

In the air, this fly pic is exciting, well-filmed entertainment. On the ground, it's a colossal bore.

John Gielgud, Artist

Sir John Gielgud is a tall man as people go, balding gracefully, with a manner that is at once outgoing and fluent. He was more than a match for the battery of newshounds who crowded into the library reception room at the Royal York.

He stood with his back to the small bar, merrily sipping rye and ginger ale as I was introduced. I sat back and let the famous Gielgud voice reverberate through the close, high-vaulted room.

Why would such a man, rated by most critics as the foremost exponent of the classical theatre in this century, undertake a whirlwind tour of literate North America, a task that would leave a man half his age prostrate with exhaustion?

"Precisely because it is, for me, unprecedented. Not only will it give me an excellent opportunity to bring some of the joys of the classical drama to a great many people, it will also give me a chance to extend my range of experience, find new ideas, and generally add vigour to my art."

But won't you find such a tour fatiguing?

"Deuce, yes. But I'm nothing if not optimistic." He added with a smile, "I'm in good health, and God willing, I shall be equal to your Canadian winter."

"One must always guard against staleness. This is by no means a new idea. In the early part of the century, many actors and actresses at a later period in their career, undertook tours very like this one, with considerable success. I go on without scenery, make-up (not even a wig), and let the verse speak for itself. I stress the informality, trying as much as possible to get away from everything stagey. I hope to present a new slant."

Sir John Gielgud, acclaimed as the world's foremost exponent of Shakespeare, as Leontes in "The Winter's Tale". Sir John is currently appearing at the Royal Alex Theatre in "The Seven Ages of Man".

What type of role did he prefer?

"In the past I have tried my best to attempt as many and diversified roles as possible. I like to think I can have a bash at anything and carry it off, whether it be comedy, tragedy, or the modern version of either. I enjoy any good role."

At this point, I was rather crowded out of the conversation by members of the Stratford Company, the hosts of the press conference, who were anxious that their valuable charge be ushered to a quiet supper.

I returned to the bar, impressed by the dignity of this man, whose quiet confidence, shaded slightly by an almost imperceptible trepidation, would carry the best of an old theatre to a new country.

Any gals on campus who idolize Dorothy Kilgallen and Emily Post might drop in and pay Pam and Sharon a visit. They'd be glad to see you (so would the male sports staff).

And, as way of introduction to female sports, and the upcoming activities in said division of athletic endeavour, The Varsity present a list of valuable notes:

WUS Confab Wonderful

Tim Reid (IV Trin.) who attended the annual World University Service General Assembly this summer said last night it was a "wonderful international gathering" in spite of lack of student participation.

More than 120 students and professors from 33 countries met at Maison Montmagny Québec from August 16 to 22 and:

—discussed and evaluated WUS activities of the past year, —formulated a program of action for 1958-59, including the continuation of programs to help needy universities and students in series of studies and workshops in situations of emergency and at various parts of the world, —discussed the topic, "The Challenge of Partnership in Higher Education" and —elected a slate of officers headed by International Chairman for 1958-59 Sir Keith Murray, Chairman of the University Students' Committee, Great Britain.

The University of Toronto was represented by Professors J. S. Morgan and A. J. Earp as well as by Reid.

"Canada took a very great part" in the assembly, Reid said.

But in the education symposium, "the lack of student participation hindered the reality." The discussion "tended to look at things from the staff's point of view and neglected the student."

Name Your Figure At SAC Book Shop

Texts can be bought at about 2/3 of their original price at the Students' Administrative Council book exchange at 119 St. George St.

But, says manager Bruce Stewart, "we need books."

The exchange opened Monday with a first-day turnover of some $300 worth of books. The figure was doubled after the first day.

Last year's sales amounted to some $3,000.

The exchange will be open about five weeks, Monday through Friday, 10 a.m. to five p.m.

It works like this: students bringing in the urgently-needed books name the price at which the exchange will try to sell them. About 2/3 of the original price is recommended. The service charges only a 10 per cent commission to cover expenses.

Students will find a staff of from two to four to help them and an inventory of some 3,000 books.

About 2/3 of the books brought in so far have been sold. But students are not encouraged to bring in high-school texts, outdated books or law books.

Plan New Party In Campus Scene

A fourth political party is in the works on campus in protest against the present "inane and dogmatic state" of university politics.

Organizers of the party say they prefer to remain anonymous until plans and a platform have been worked out.

A spokesman for the new party complained of the "stagnant malignancy" of present campus politics.

"We believe there is a strong popular sentiment now existing for a completely new and radical approach to politics at this university," he said.

CCF and Progressive Conservative leaders said the charges laid down by the new party are completely groundless.

The Liberal leader suggested his party was the answer to any "inane and dogmatic" state now existing.

Calling the new group "a fourth force in campus politics" rather than a "third force in world politics," spokesmen said the party would gain support from "every organization, every college and every faculty on campus."

The group already has support in University College, Trinity and Victoria, one said.

"This is a serious move and is not designed merely as another prank."

But Gordon Ross, campus PC chief said, "I don't think the approach of the political parties inane and I don't think it's dogmatic."

Gerry Caplan, CCF head, said, "I don't know what they mean by inane and dogmatic."

Both leaders praised the calibre of on-campus political figures in all three parties. "We happen to believe in all these things," Caplan said.

Ross did not "see any need whatever for it to exist" while Caplan said a new party could only harm the job the three existing parties were trying to do of educating people on campus.

Caplan thought the lack of a platform was suspect and Ross had the same idea about the anonymity of its founders.

Campus Liberal leader, Jim Doris took a somewhat different tack.

"The founders of this movement," he said, "might investigate our own club."

"The Liberal movement is an attitude rather than a dogma."

The Liberals, he said, are "in no way cogs in an organizational machine as are the Socialist and Conservative clubs."

He cited a resolution given by the campus Liberals to the national party last year advocating the recognition of Communist China. This resolution has not been adopted by the national party.

The Liberals, he said are an "autonomous community" and are "free from interference from above."

The CCF is "ruled by manifesto and dogma" while "the Conservative party's action reflect its thinking and its name." Its attitude "hasn't passed the colonial stage."

Manitoba Controversy As Prof's Letter Read

WINNIPEG, Sept. 28 (CUP) — Police and the Canadian Association of University Teachers are investigating what has turned out to be the hottest academic controversy here in years.

Wide publicity of alleged infringement of academic freedom has put tiny United College onto the map and may drag the college into the law courts.

Leading figures are; history professor Harry Crowe — who wrote a letter; Prof. William Packer — who was supposed to read the letter; and Principal W. C. Lockhart who actually did read the letter.

It all began last summer when Crowe, on sabbatical leave at Queen's University, wrote a letter to United College colleague Packer.

The letter apparently contained criticisms of faculty members at United, criticism of the United Church, discussion of the federal election, and censure of the prac-

Unleashing their finest one-two running punch since the days of Steve Oneschuk and Phil Muntz, Varsity Blues upended Western Mustangs 26-20 in Varsity Stadium Friday night.

Veteran halfback Tim Reid and rookie sensation Peter Joyce spearheaded a vicious ground attack that gave Toronto 391 yards rushing and handed Western its first loss since 1956.

And despite a last-minute Mustang drive that brought 12,593 paid customers to their feet, Blues were full value for their win in the first Intercollegiate game ever played under lights.

Quarterback Brian Aston directed the team for most of the game, skilfully combining twin off-tackle plays with an option pattern that could be Blues' most powerful weapon.

Joyce and Reid hammered continually at the centre of the Western line, with Santo Martini, Weldon Thornburn, Mike Chyka-luk, Julian Porter and Bill Hunter blistering gaps in the visitors' front wall.

And when the Mustang wing-line tightened, Aston turned to the option play. It worked to perfection almost every time.

Western, defensively shaky in the first half, were virtually run into the ground as Varsity raced for 200 yards. Blues ran up 13 first downs to only three by Western by the intermission.

Reid sliced off-tackle behind Martini for the opening score midway through the first quarter after Varsity had marched 66 yards in eight plays.

Earlier, Toronto went from centre-field to the Western 11, but a pitchout went astray and Mistangs' Doug Mackenzie fell on the ball.

John Metras' lads took the lead in the second period for the only time in the game after some erratic Varsity fielding and a 45-yard Western pass.

Held on their own two-yard line after Larry Joynt's 35-yard field goal try had gone wide, Mustangs were forced to kick on third down.

Varsity couldn't hold the punt, and an eager Don Stewart grabbed the pigskin on the centre-field stripe.

Two plays later, Horsies' quarter Frank Cosentino hit end Bob Pearson behind Joynt, and Pearson scampered to the Varsity one-yard line before being stopped by Bobby Dann.

Free Thinkers Picket KCR's Beer Drinkers

A zany, fun-loving group dubbed the University of Toronto Free Thinking Society made its debut on campus Saturday night.

Postal officials said tampering with the mails is a criminal offence, and have told Crowe he may call in police to investigate.

So far there is no clue as to how the letter to Packer was deviated to the Principal. It was finally delivered to Packer a month late.

Crowe has charged the Principal used the personal letter "to my serious detriment." He also charged a "complete misrepresentation of my religious views is now being widely spread."

University of Manitoba professors have started a fund to enable Crowe to turn down the Board's offer of a year's pay and bring a law suit against the college.

Bearing signboards with slogans such as "Prepare to meet thy doom — the end of the world is near", about twenty members greeted people leaving the reopened KCR.

A spokesman said Metro police made no effort to break up the group, as they stood outside the KCR and marched past adjoining stores and restaurants.

Second year Victoria College men and freshman Architects make up the membership of the society. No motive was given for this unusual alliance. The same spokesman said the society's aim is "to see that we enjoy ourselves."

Future activities are undecided, but whatever form they take is hardly meant to be taken seriously, a member said.

INCO METALS AT WORK IN CANADA

You'll travel faster...more comfortably aboard new Stainless Steel trains

CONTAINING INCO NICKEL

New self-propelled railway cars are made in Canada of stainless steel containing Inco Nickel. They're completely air-conditioned . . . smooth-running . . . strong, lightweight, fast.

Each car has its own engines and controls. It can operate as a one-car unit or as part of a train of cars. Result: better service . . . because railroads can schedule lower cost single-car trips to accommodate passengers during off hours.

The new cars are as efficient and economical as they are comfortable and convenient. And nickel-containing stainless steel helps make them so. They travel faster with greater safety—cost less to operate. Stainless steel doesn't need painting; it tends to wash itself clean in every rainfall. Maintenance costs are negligible.

Nickel helps give stainless steel its exceptional strength and its resistance to rust and corrosion . . . makes it easier to fabricate. Another way that Inco Nickel serves the Canadian industries that serve you.

Inco has recently published a colourfully illustrated 32-page booklet about Canada's nickel industry, entitled "The Exciting Story of Nickel". Knox's Centennial Celebrated Quietly

While the university community buried itself in a flurry of registration fever last week, one college was unpretentiously celebrating its centennial year.

Like many of its activities, the history behind the Knox College centenary was little publicized, but the three-day lecture and Convocation session spoke for a great deal in the development of theological education and marked a milestone in the growth of the Presbyterian Church.

Prior to receiving its charter in 1858, the college performed its ministerial work for two years without a name and 14 years without a charter.

When the college received its charter in 1858, it already had 16 years of service on record and its graduates numbered in the 80's.

The remaining years of the century saw Confederation, the opening up of the western provinces, and with this expansion, the growth of the church. Marking this development step by step, Knox, by 1900, had the highest enrolment of any Presbyterian college in Canada.

By 1912 it had moved from its original quarters on Spadina Crescent to its present site on the university campus. Here began collection of what is now one of the most complete libraries of theological literature in Canada with a collection of about 47,000 volumes.

In 1948 Knox became an accredited college in the American Association of Theological Schools and in co-operation with the university, today offers graduate degrees for study in the theological curriculum.

Feature Lutheran For HH Service

U of T students adhering to faiths other than the Lutheran will have a chance to attend a Lutheran service Sunday as the first Hart House all-university church service is held.

Sunday's service will be the first in a series of six all-university services in the Great Hall.

The services, an annual event, are designed to allow students to come into contact with faiths other than their own, and each year are representative of the various faiths and sects of the world.

A prominent American theologian, president Conrad Bergendoff of Augustana College, will deliver the sermon at the opening service, which will be conducted by Pastor Frederick Gumz of the Lutheran Student Service.

Dr. Bergendoff, president of Augustana since 1931, is the holder of academic and theological degrees from universities in the United States and Sweden. He was awarded a knighthood by the King of Sweden in 1944.

He has long been prominent in Lutheran councils in America, and has served on a number of international bodies, including committees of the World Council of churches.

Dr. Bergendoff is also well known for his theological writings, and is at present serving as editor of "The Lutheran Quarterly," a joint publication of the Lutheran seminaries of America.

This week's service, which starts at 11 a.m. will be of the order of the Lutheran Morning Service without Communion.

Suffer yourselves to be blamed, imprisoned, condemned; suffer yourselves to be hanged; but publish your opinions; it is not a right, it is a duty."

omnes in mare

A recent letter in a Toronto paper spent a considerable number of column inches elaborating on the merits and integrity of Canadian trade unions.

Saying nothing new in a rather blatant way, the letter was lifted from the prosaic into the abnormal by the recurrent use of the term "Un-Canadian".

Trade unions, the letter insists, never behave in an "Un-Canadian" manner. They are basically democratic, honest, clean, morally upright and generally "good things".

Now this is interesting.

If the use of this term, an obvious descendent of "Un-American" and, by a more devious route, "not cricket", becomes popular, it will mean one more level has been reached in this country's descent into nationalism.

It will mean that the stages of introspection, doubt and intelligent self-criticism are past; that the ages of awareness and wonder have died; that conformity and collectivism have become the creed; that to be "Canadian" is to be democratic, honest, clean, morally upright and generally a "good thing".

It will mean that to be Canadian will be to embody in a unified soul all the ideals and achievements of Western Civilization, and most of the good things of the civilization that came before that.

It will mean that to be Canadian will be to epitomize purity everywhere.

It will mean that to be Canadian will be to be virtually perfect—just like everyone else.

And it seems a damned shame.

"dear mom..."

The new U of T bookstore is a marvellous place.

We went in the other day with a book list and a wheelbarrow intending for once to get our texts bought quickly and painlessly.

The first thing that caught our eye (we only have one between us) was a fascinating display of greeting cards and since Christmas is almost here we browsed for a while and bought ten or twelve.

The next thing we saw was a full line of Perry Mason mystery stories and we couldn't resist buying just a couple of those.

And while we were there we thought we might just as well load up on ball point pens, school crests, embroidered ashtrays, and paper clips.

But the bargain of the day was definitely "The Child's Book of Trees". It was out on the display counter so we got ours before they were all snapped up.

By this time we had almost forgotten why we had come in in the first place, but the adventure had hardly begun and before it was over we had a bartender's handbook, a pamphlet on how to lose 20 pounds in 10 days, and a visitors' guide to the Gobi Desert all neatly piled in our wheelbarrow. And the texts on our book list? Well, they don't have any of those in stock right now.

But they will be more than happy to order them for us.

A close look at: You and Nfcus

By BOB LEE

Next week delegates from 32 Canadian universities and colleges will assemble in Ottawa for the 22nd Congress of the National Federation of Canadian University Students.

Nfcus (rhymes with hibiscus) was founded in 1926, with the first conference being held at McGill University in December of that year. At this time the aims of the organization were outlined as follows:—to promote: (1) a better understanding among all Canadian University students, (2) a greater degree of co-operation and correlation among Canadian universities, (3) all student interests, (4) international relations with student groups of all nations.

During the past thirty-two years Nfcus has attempted to fulfill these aims in a variety of ways. In the early years the emphasis was on debating and exchanges with universities in other parts of the world. In 1932 reductions in rail fares for students were obtained, and shortly after this discounts for students were obtained from several nationwide business firms.

Material Benefits

In recent years Nfcus has attempted to place more emphasis on its role of acting as an official spokesman for Canadian university students. A great deal of work has been done in an attempt to familiarize the Federal Government with the needs and problems of Canadian students, and to obtain material benefits for students. These activities have been concerned chiefly with unemployment insurance, income tax, and scholarships and bursaries.

During the past year one of the major programs of Nfcus has been a campaign for a vast increase in the number of scholarships and bursaries available for students. At the 21st Nfcus National Congress held in Quebec City last year, the following resolution was passed.

"Be it resolved that the following principle be adopted by our government and applied at the earliest possible date:

"Every Canadian student who has met the entrance requirements of a Canadian university is entitled to the receipt of an adequate scholarship."

Education Brief

Following the Congress an intensive "Brief on Government Aid to Education" was drawn up in the national office of Nfcus. A copy of the brief was sent to every Member of Parliament and also to many other individuals and organizations across the country.

Third year Meds student: Bob Lee is National Affairs Chairman for the Students' Administrative Council, and will represent the SAC at the Nfcus conference in Ottawa next week. Here he outlines just what Nfcus stands for and what it is doing for you.

The principle underlying the proposals set forth in this brief, and indeed the whole scholarship campaign of Nfcus, is equality of opportunity. It is felt that at present in Canada, every student graduating from high school and having the academic ability to go on in higher education does not have equal opportunity to do so.

About 15 per cent of Canadian University students now receive aid from governments in one form or another. This figure is considerably less than in any other country in the Atlantic Community, and far below the percentage behind the Iron Curtain. In Britain during the academic year 1956-57, 79 per cent of the total student enrollment received financial aid. In the United States 47 per cent of the student group receives assistance.

Seven Per Cent

Another point emphasized in the Nfcus brief is that only seven per cent of Canadian youth of university age attend university, while up to 30 per cent have the ability to do so. There is an obvious waste of talent, especially since the need for professionally trained personnel has greatly increased with recent scientific developments.

A wide survey has shown that the average cost of a year of University education, including living expenses, varies from $1,200 to $1,700. Taking an average of all students, only 7.5 per cent of this figure is provided for by loans or scholarships. Sixty per cent is taken care of by the student himself by means of savings and summer and part-time employment. This leaves 32.5 per cent which must be provided for by family assistance.

We do not feel that the Federal Government should provide free education for everyone who is capable and wants to attend university. However, we do feel very strongly that there should be an increase in scholarships and bursaries sufficient to eliminate the 32.5 per cent of the cost of an education now provided for by family assistance. Then a capable student would be able to attend university, regardless of his family's financial status.

Less Chances Here

It was with these conditions in mind that Dr. Cyril James, Principal and Vice-Chancellor of McGill University declared: "A young Canadian from a family of modest circumstances has less chance of getting a university education today than a youth in any other country with which I am familiar." And it is also with this in mind that Nfcus has felt the responsibility to undertake a campaign for increased financial aid to students.

Last spring Walter Tarnopol, president of Nfcus, and Andre l'Heureux, the executive secretary, succeeded in obtaining an interview with Prime Minister Diefenbaker. At this interview the need for Federal assistance in education was pointed out, and a proposal was made for the immediate institution of 10,000 Federal-Provincial bursaries and scholarships of about $550 each.

Federal-Provincial scholarships were suggested in order to recognize the provincial rights in education as set forth in the British North America Act.

The figure of $550 was estimated to be approximately the difference between the cost of education for a year and the amount a student and his family can pay.

Unemployment

At this interview the Nfcus officers also asked for legislation to make tuition fees exempt from taxable income.

With regard to unemployment insurance, they proposed that either university students should be exempt from paying for unemployment insurance, or that they should be entitled to receive benefits if they are unable to obtain summer employment. According to reported cases before Unemployment Boards of Referees, no student has ever been granted unemployment insurance.

We sincerely hope that at the 22nd Nfcus National Congress meets next week, further efforts and continued progress will be made in these attempts to obtain benefits for students, which are so important if our system of higher education is going to compare favorably with that of other countries in the world.

"I Guess Some People Can Never Be Angular"

LANSDOWNE PLAYHOUSE

On Wednesday, October 1 a new legitimate theatre, proudly styled the Playhouse of Toronto, will ring up its curtains on the World Premiere of Cock-a-Doodle-Andy, a sparkling, witty comedy by the celebrated Irish dramatist, Sean O'Casey.

As is the case with the Crest Theatre, the Playhouse is a former movie house—the Lansdowne Theatre, at the corner of Bloor and Lansdowne.

Unlike the Crest, the Lansdowne was itself a reconditioned legitimate theatre, possessing a stage as good as, or even better than, that of Hart House Theatre. Before the days of its artistic suicide, the Lansdowne was a repertory theatre under the management of the late Joe Carr, and for a time housed the Ken Sabel Amateur Hour.

When it was converted into a cinema, the stage was left virtually intact, a fact which has saved the present management a great deal of money in costly repairs. These savings have been used instead to completely renovate the auditorium; the number of seats has been reduced from one thousand to 904, thus ensuring overall viewing comfort for the Playhouse's patrons. Batteries of sleek ellipsoidal spot lights have been installed at the front and sides of the auditorium. The walls and proscenium arch have been painted two different shades of grey. A refreshment counter will soon be installed in the foyer.

At present, the Playhouse is being run by a board of investors, presided over by Michael Sandler. Ruth Francis, who last spring appeared as Andromache in the Hart House production of The Trojan Women, is the secretary. The main-springs of the venture are the two producers, Glen Frankfurter, and Lea Peterson, a writer, whose many radio and television dramas have earned him a highly enviable reputation.

Peterson attempted to get the rights to Cock-a-Doodle-Andy five years ago, while he was connected with the now defunct Jupiter Theatre. However, O'Casey was interested in having a New York production, and so for the time being the matter was dropped.

In New York, several plays by the Irishman, including Purple Dust and the semi-autobiographical Pictures in the Hall-Way, were presented by the Broadway team of Paul Shyer and Howard Gottfried. Encouraged by the success of these productions, O'Casey released the rights of his comedy to Shyer and Gottfried.

Following this decision, both Frankfurter and Peterson got in touch with their New York counterparts, and convinced them that it would be to their advantage if they had a trial run in Toronto prior to the Broadway opening, as they could then tighten up the play before it came under the withering fire of the New York critics.

And so it was agreed that Cock-a-Doodle-Andy would have its World Premier in Toronto. Paul Shyer spent part of the summer in England, discussing the forthcoming production with the playwright. Philip Burton was engaged to direct the all American cast, and Lester Polakov, who had worked on Mrs. McThing and Member of the Wedding, designed the sets.

Following this production, the Playhouse has scheduled Ray Lawlor's Summer of the Seventeenth Doll, which was first performed in Australia by Elizabeth Society. Sir Laurence Olivier was touring at the time, and was so impressed with the play that he arranged a London run for it. Last year, The Summer of the Seventeenth Doll ran in New York, receiving wide critical acclaim. It will shortly be filmed by Hecht-Lancaster Productions.

The Playhouse Summer is directed by Johnny Griffin, who was responsible for the very successful Jupiter Theatre Lady's Not For Burning in 1952. Casting for the production began last Thursday.

Negotiations are now in progress for other Broadway shows, including possibly The Threepenny Opera. Peterson and Frankfurter hope eventually to produce more Canadian plays, as they have found (surprisingly enough) that Canadian plays are good box-office. Peterson's own Old Man's House will receive its premiere shortly after the new year.

Once it is established, the Playhouse will be rented out to various dramatic groups, and there are plans afoot for exchanges with Montreal groups in the very near future.

As in all ventures of this kind, the success or failure of the Playhouse resides in the audience. But even the fact that they are far out of the main stream of Toronto's theatrical channels does not affect Peterson's optimism.

"Recent developments in Toronto theatre show that playgoers are more willing to travel further afield than they would have four or five years ago," he says. "Without this fact, neither the Crest, the Dixie Music Fair, or even the Royal Alexandra could possibly survive."

Rowland Pack Conductor Of Glee Club

Rowland Pack, prominent Toronto musician, has been appointed this season's conductor of the Hart House Glee Club. Mr. Pack is probably best known as a former principal cellist with the Toronto Symphony Orchestra, from which he recently resigned in order to devote himself to other activities, including the direction of a madrigal group, as well as the Glee Club, where he is replacing Ward McAdam.

Now in its 25th year, the Hart House Glee Club provides members of all faculties the opportunity to meet on the common ground of vocal music. Freshmen are especially urged to take advantage of the excellent opportunity of participating in one of the university's outstanding organizations. If you, or anyone else, think you can sing, come on out and learn the terrible truth about yourself either Tuesday or Thursday at 5 p.m.

From the opening weekend at Caledon to the final Sunday Evening Concert, the members do nothing but enjoy themselves. And this year, for a membership fee of only one dollar, they will be able to travel to Rochester, possibly appear on television, get rave reviews from the press, (including the Varsity!), and let their scrooping be heard across Canada on the CBC's annual Christmas broadcast.

The value of the Hart House Glee Club as a pleasure-giving organization cannot be overestimated. Therefore, if you've ever thrilled to a rousing chorus of "Sur le pont d'Avignon", and have always wanted to add your voice to it, why not come out?

Rowland Pack, noted Canadian cellist, who was recently appointed conductor of the Hart House Glee Club. ➔

Fall Convocation in Canadian Art

Four Canadians and several Americans will inaugurate the Fall season at the Art Gallery of Toronto.

The Canadians (a sculptor, two painters and a designer of stained-glass) are now exhibiting in the upstairs gallery. The Americans will be displayed in the Karolik exhibition—a private collection of 19th century American art which opens Oct. 4 in the main galleries.

For the commercial galleries, fall has been under way for almost two weeks now. New exhibitions are due to open all over town next week-end, but of the present shows two are of particular interest.

At the Laing Galleries until October 3 are the recent paintings of Quebec's big two—Paul-Emile Borduas and Jean-Paul Riopelle. And at the Greenwich Gallery until the same date is a collection of contemporary Japanese wood-blocks. Both are outstanding exhibitions and would make news anywhere.

Coming up at Laing's is another must, the paintings and watercolors of David Milne. Scheduled next at the Greenwich is an exhibition by one of that gallery's regulars, Michael Snow.

The Gallery of Contemporary Art, now showing Tom Hedrick's summer paintings will put on view after October 4 another collection of primitive sculpture.

The GCA, opened two years ago with one display of ancient Toranese sculpture and finished the spring season this year with another, even more extensive. However it's not South American art the GCA has this time, but South African.

Edmund Alleyn, Leo Mol, George Swinton and Marius Plamondon are the four Canadians exhibiting at the Art Gallery. Seldom or never seen before in Toronto they proved to have little to offer of great interest.

Swinton is a traditionalist who has failed to assimilate all his traditions. His religious paintings are unsuccessful when compared, as they must be to Rico Lebrun's; his poetic pictures are unsuccessful when compared to Chagall's.

Alleyn's paintings are more consistent in style and quality than Swinton's. But although they have a distinct character of their own, they bear a marked resemblance to the works of innumerable other tempered expressionists.

Plamondon's stained glass makes a fine display, although it is probably unfair to judge his work from these small models and excerpts from larger constructions.

Mol is a traditionalist in the regular sense of the word. His sculptures are sensitive, highly competent technically, and pleasing, especially the small nudes.

The exhibition of the works of Borduas and Riopelle is one that must attract everyone, initiates or connoisseurs.

Better known internationally as Parisiens, these French-Canadians living in Paris are proudly claimed by us as Canadians. This striking exhibition shows we have something to be proud of.

The works of teacher Borduas and pupil Riopelle bore some resemblance to each other about two years ago. Both used oblong patches of color to build up complex compositions. Riopelle applied his patches with fury and abandon, assembling the brilliantly colored terraces into explosive mosaics, seething with violent motion and suppressed energy. Borduas' feathered strokes were applied with more precision and sensitivity. The effect of his controlled canvases was more pleasing, more subtle, sometimes sentimental.

The works of both artists have undergone similar changes recently. But the results are markedly different. The scattered patches, the terraces, the feather strokes have condensed into larger areas of color. But Riopelle's paintings have become even more explosive and energetic, Borduas' even more precise and sensitive.

Riopelle's paintings, completely non-objective before now seem to bear some resemblance to objects of the natural world, whereas Borduas' works, which were before organic, hauntingly representational, are now completely and severely abstract.

Are You Beat?

Sunday in Toronto holds no terror for members of the U of T film Society. By special arrangement with the Lord's Day Alliance ten programs of outstanding films from all over the world will be shown Sunday afternoons at the Museum theatre.

The season's highlight will be "I Vitelloni", a film of the Italian beat generation that has not yet been shown at commercial theatres in Toronto.

Two recent American movies "The Killing" and "Viva Zapata!" will be shown. "The Killing", whose director has since made "Paths of Glory" is a taut crime story that follows each of its characters in turn up to the moment the crime is to be committed. "Viva Zapata!", written by John Steinbeck and directed by Elia Kazan is the story of a Mexican revolutionary hero. It stars Marlon Brando.

"The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari", one of the first of the so-called "avant-garde" movies, and still an expressionistic masterpiece, is scheduled for the Christmas program, along with a special Yuletide surprise.

Lovers of things Russian will find plenty in this year's program to keep their mind off the Blue Laws and East-West relations. "Battleship Potemkin" with its ocean-going revolution and "True Friends" from a less Marxist more idyllic period of Russian film making are to be shown in the regular 16 mm series. As well, a 35 mm colour print of "Boris Godunov", the Mussorgsky opera has been chosen to end the season.

One other 35 mm film will open the season—"Gate of Hell", a romantic melodrama set in Japan in the time of the samurai.

Memberships, at $5.00 each, fifty cents per program, will be on sale later this week in the SAC office Engineering stores, and the U.C. station.

SMC Curfew Rouses Complaints

Verbal complaints continue over the new curfew rules in the St. Michaels' College men's residences, a spokesman said last night. The curfew requires all residents to be in by 11 p.m. every week night, unless permission is previously granted by the prefects to be out later. However, students are accepting the rules requiring freshmen and sophomores to rise at 7 a.m. and have breakfast at 7.30, and the juniors and seniors fifteen minutes later, without much complaint, the spokesman said.

The only action on the part of the residents remains verbal. Last week's threats and decisions to move out have not as yet materialized.

Less than two or three students are expected to leave residence and live elsewhere.

Feeling is that the 11 p.m. curfew will not be too difficult to put up with, provided that weekends remain unrestricted, said one SMC resident.

Foil Kidnap

Four Engineers tried to kidnap Victoria College sophomore president Norm Williams last night — and failed.

The Engineers knocked on Williams' door at 11 p.m. last night and asked for information on the Vic Bob Revue. "They didn't look like artists," Williams said, so he asked them about their courses.

When the "artists" couldn't answer, Williams closed the door, and the four drove away.

Williams avoided another kidnapping attempt last week by changing his name.

Reid, Joyce Pace Attack In Blues' 26-20 Victory

penalty nullified the score. John Sloan skirted the right end from four yards out to even the score. Bill Mitchell's convert put Western ahead.

Blues regained the lead late in the quarter on a nice bit of play by Reid. He grabbed a high pitchout from Aston and raced 10 yards around the end.

Wally Adams' convert try again went wide, leaving the hosts with a 12-7 lead at half-time.

In the second half, Blues took up where they left off, and with the help of the goal-post, led 18-7 eight plays after the opening whistle.

Mustangs held the ball on their own 40, but slipped back to the 15 when Glenn Harding threw Cosentino for a 10-yard loss and Western was penalized 15 yards for rough play.

On the next play, Cosentino went back to pass and saw the ball squirt from his grasp after he hit the goalpost with his arm.

Blues' Gene Chorostecki hopped on the ball on the two, and Joyce carried off-tackle behind Thoburn and Hunter for the major. Adams' convert made it 18-7.

An exchange of punts after the kickoff, and Blues went 92 yards in 12 plays to increase their margin. Joyce again carrying off-tackle from the two. The convert missed.

Mustangs narrowed the score to 25-13 late in the quarter, mainly thanks to some fine broken-field running by Cosentino.

He started the march with a dazzling 41-yard run around the end, and finished it with a nine-yard dance. Mitchell's convert was wide.

The final period rose steadily to a climax typical of college football, and it was only a fine defensive play by Larry Joynit that preserved Toronto's lead.

Joynit's single in the third quarter made it 36-13. From their own 25, Mustangs took to the air to move play deep into Blue territory.

And oddly enough, it was a player who could not make Varsity that caught the two long passes. His name was Lorne Forstner and his pass-catching was slightly short of terrific.

Cosentino and Conacher carried play to the Varsity five, and the Little Train brought the score to 26-19 on an end run with three minutes remaining.

After Mitchell's convert, Blues took the kickoff and were unable to move the sticks. Joynit kicked to Roger Stewart on the Mustang 35.

A rough play penalty moved the ball to the Varsity 54, and on the first play Cosentino hit Pearson with an 18-yard pass as the minute flag went up.

Cosentino carried to the Blues' 30.

Five Mustangs scattered downfield in pass formation with one Don DalBianco—all by himself directly behind the goalposts.

But Cosentino, who had received great protection on passes, hesitated too long, and Joynit cut in front of DalBianco at the last moment to intercept the 40-yard aerial.

Varsity took possession on the 10, ran one play into the ground and that was the ball game.

Mustangs, when they took to the air in the last quarter, were a different ball club, and they give every indication of being better when they travel to Toronto again October 11.

Cosentino ran the team well, and as Western improved in the second half, Blues' two game weaknesses—pass defense and downfield tackling—became obvious.

Offensively, Varsity passed only seven times, completing two for 33 yards. But Joynit is Blues' chief passing threat, and Larry was still weak from a flu bout.

In Dick Risk and Lorry Stacey, Blues have a fine pair of pass receivers, and it would be wholly incorrect to call Varsity a team without a pass attack.

Friday, the ground plays went so well the air wasn't needed.

For Western, linemen Mitchell and Wayne Neal, along with Cosentino and Conacher, were the pick. Mitchell, particularly in the second half, rallied his mates to plug the off-tackle holes Blues had been running so easily.

Conacher, although overshadowed by Reid and Joyce, is still one of the league's best backs and he, too, is bound to get better rather than worse.

Varsity—Centres, Russell, Bruchovsky, Harding; guards, Hunter, S. Bell, Eytan, Johnston; tackles, Thoburn, Porter, Martin, Chryslak; ends, Risk, Stacey, Chorostecki, Baird, W. Sopinka; quarters, Aston, Joynit; backs, Pinkham, Brodie, Clusholm, Knowles, Rush, Adams, Dann, Reid, Burroughs, Joyce.

Western—Centres, Meads, Mitchell, Neal, guards, Partington, Edgar, Kindree, Barclay; tackles, Coups, Bradley, White, Humphrey; ends, Shaw, Pearson, Clark, D. Stewart; quarters, Turner, Cosentino; backs, Miller, DeBlanco, Shepherd, Sloan, Ewart, B. Stewart, Fominer, MacKenzie Poliziani, Reintjes, Conacher.

The other picture shows Gene Chorostecki nailing Lorne Forstner (78) for a four-yard loss in the third quarter. That's Lionel Conacher at the left.

When a little, whirling machine called Sputnik began racing through the sky, the Western world was stunned.

And when a big, charging bulldozer called Joyce started churning through the line, the Western team was stunned.

Mustangs had sent assistant coach Jack Fairs down to scout Varsity's intra-squad game on September 19.

For strategic reasons (one of them being Mr. Fairs), Joyce rode the bench during the Blue-White tussle.

Jack went home and reported to head coach John Metras:

"Backfield appears weak."

Whether or not Mr. Metras took that as gospel truth before Friday night's game is not known, but it's a sure bet he'll spend the next two weeks prepping his charges on the proper procedure to halt runaway tanks.

Had the Western coaching staff been on their hooves, and done a bit of checking on Joyce, his 210 pounds steaming past Mustang defenders would not have been a surprise.

With Royal Military College, Kingston, last season, Pete was No. 2 man to McMaster's Russ Jackson in the Ontario Intercollegiate Football Conference Hall of Fame for '57.

Joyce carried 92 times in the season for a total yardage of 679, including one 70-yard dash and ten touchdowns. His average was a brilliant 7.4 per carry.

His debut in a Varsity uniform was auspicious. And it came as a surprise to no one except Western Mustangs.

At the Lake Couchiching training camp, Blues' coach Dalt White had opined of his husky rookie.

"This guy will tear up the league."

Again for strategic reasons, Dalt had cautioned:

"But don't quote me just yet. Let's wait and see how he goes in the first game."

Well, coach, 12,593 fans saw, and all that were sporting blue and white colors liked what they saw.

Blues' flexible option play, which Joyce and Tim Reid ran to perfection (as did quarterback Brian Aston) appears to be a major cog in the machine.

Reid, glowed by the famed sophomore jinx last year, has regained the capacity that made him a unanimous all-star in his first year.

He and Joyce are similar in one outstanding way. When each is tackled, he's good for another three or four yards before the whistle.

And in Intercollegiate ball, as the past has shown so often, the extra three or four yards can be vital.

Whites Squeak Past Blues

The University of Toronto's Intermediate football team, the "Baby Blues", held their annual intra-squad game at Varsity Stadium Saturday morning. Bill Stevenson's "Whites" emerged with a 7-6 victory over John Sopinka's "Blues", in a hard fought match.

The "Whites" opened the scoring in the first quarter when Hunter, their quarterback, charged 70 yards on an option play for a touchdown. Reimer's convert was good.

Late in the half the "Blues" mounted their only dangerous threat of the game as they drove inside the 20 yard line twice in five minutes. Each time, however, the White defence proved equal to the task of holding them off the score sheet.

Play see-sawed back and forth in the last half until, with five minutes left, Dan Regan recovered a White fumble and went 20 yards for the score. The convert that would have tied the score was blocked, and hard as the "Blues" tried they could not break through again.

The emphasis was on defense as the two teams proved very evenly matched. Neither team's offense could make any headway against the stiff tackling and rushing of the defensive lines.

The Baby Blues open their schedule against the Ryerson Rams this Friday afternoon in Varsity Stadium.

Gaels Surprise Redmen Losing By 14-8 Score

MONTREAL, (Special) — McGill Redmen, behind a twin touchdown performance by ex-Varsity halfback Wally Bulchak, defeated Queen's Golden Gaels 14-8 in their opening contest Saturday.

Neither side struck paydirt in the first quarter. A muddy field plus strong defensive play limited action to mid-field.

At 2:20 of the second quarter a costly Queen's fumble on their own 11, and fine runs by Steve O'Farrell and Bulchak put McGill ahead 6-0. Charles McLaughlin's convert attempt was blocked.

Two incomplete passes and a field goal attempt by Ritchie that was far short ended Queen's threat for the quarter.

Brilliant runs by Joe Irvin, Dan Tingley and Bulchak, set up McGill's third quarter scoring. Irvin booted a single from the Queen's 32.

Dick Carr's pass attempt fumble on his own 20 gave the Gaels their first major. Mitch Wasik pounced on the ball on the Redmen one. Porter crashing through for the touchdown. Ritchie failed to convert.

In the opening minutes of the fourth, two booming punts by Thompson put Queen's ahead 8-7. Not to be denied, however, McGill roared back, Bulchak racing over for his second major. McLaughlin connected with the convert.

Shock Skulemen As Dean Decides Cut Out Jackets

Engineers were stunned and indignant yesterday after hearing that their beloved blue-and-yellow jackets are banned.

Engineering dean R. R. McLaughlin announced the move to School of Practical Science in a talk on standards of dress.

The regulation was a complete surprise to most Skulemen, although faculty members have pushed for a rule on standards dress for years.

Dean McLaughlin's speech was "rather forceful," one Engineer said yesterday. Also outlawed are jeans, khakis, T-shirts and bizarre sports shirts.

Engineers will now have to wear shirts buttoned at the neck and sport jackets, the Dean said.

But SPS men were hardest hit by the Skule jacket ban.

"This will wreck Skule spirit," one said. The jackets are "a symbol of Engineering, and they look very neat," another said.

Dean McLaughlin approached the Engineering Society Sunday night for an endorsement of the principle of "better dress at SPS."

The Society then drew up a letter to the Dean saying "we feel it would be impractical to set a standard of dress. Clean, neat appearance is all we can ask."

"With the gradual improving of the standard of dress we hope the engineering jacket will disappear from campus and be relegated to its proper place, such as rugby games."

Then the Dean began his round of classes announcing the new dress regulations.

Not all Skulemen have heard the new regulations. One Engineer estimated all freshmen and some upperclassmen had been contacted yesterday.

Two Clubs Fight For One Position In Old SMC Duel

An old and thorny question raises its head at St. Michael's College this year as two debating societies contend for the right to be the official college debates body.

Contenders in the battle are the Senate Club, denounced as "semi-fraternal" and discredited by St. Mike's SAC, and the Oratorical Society, a club with its membership based strictly on debating qualities.

History of the dispute lies in the background of the Senate Club, until three years ago the official St. Michael's College debating body and the only one authorized by the college SAC and the University of Toronto Debating Society to hold inter-faculty debates.

Two years ago, the club, which initiates members and requires recruits to "have something to add to the club," lost its SMC title primarily because it refused female membership.

Final blow came last year when the UTDU unanimously expelled the Senate Club and transferred the inter-faculty debating privileges to the Oratorical Society which has male and female membership.

The reason given last year by the UTDU for the expulsion of the "Senators" was that they had attended only about three UTDU meetings and had held only two inter-faculty debates during the year.

Meanwhile, the Oratorical Society, headed by president Peter Dembski (II SMC), has been granted off-campus debating rights by the college council and plans "an extensive series of inter-faculty debates with the aim of 'integrating' St. Mike's with the rest of the university."

Dembski said the Oratorical Society would try to hold debates this year with every college and faculty on campus.

He added that the Oratorical Society had not yet received recognition by the college as the official St. Michael's debating unit and would strive for this during the year.

Bob Carberry (III SMC), president of the Senate Club this year, was not available for comment. Dembski said he expected the "Senators" would make some sort of fight to retain their tradition-honored position in the college.

Meanwhile, the Oratorical Society is readying itself for the debating season with Oct. 1 set for the first classes in debating at the college and a general meeting for prospective members Oct. 3.

Campus CCFers To Hear Leader

The University of Toronto's CCF club kicks off its 1958-59 season today with an address by CCF house leader in the Dominion Parliament Hazen Argue.

He will speak to the club on highlights of the recent session of parliament in room 11, University College at 4.15 p.m.

After the talk, the club will receive nominations for candidates to fill the club presidency, vacated by the decision of Steve Lewis to attend the University of British Columbia this year. Elections follow tomorrow.

So far the names of Hubert Peacock (II UC), Jack Parnes (III UC), and Jerry Caplan (III UC), have been mentioned as possible nominees.

A spokesman for the CCF club said anyone interested in the CCF and not a member of any other political party is eligible to vote.

CCF National leader M. J. Coldwell will address campus CCFers Oct. 9 when he arrives in Toronto for the CCF provincial convention Oct. 10.

The club expects other speakers during the term will include Tommy Douglas, premier of Saskatchewan; David Lewis, CCF national president; and Stanley Knowles, vice-president of the Canadian Labor Congress.

PC's Ready For Election

Progressive Conservatives have just three weeks to nominate a leader for the Model Parliament.

PCs decided Monday to schedule elections for their parliamentary leader during the week of Oct. 20.

Possible candidates include ex-president Del O'Brien, club president Gord Ross, publicity director Dave Crane, vice-presidents Jerome Johnston and Max Rothstein, and club member Janet Kerr.

All card-holding PC club members are entitled to vote. Nominations should be submitted in writing to Joyce Walker, care of St. Hilda's College.

Lovely, lustrous Canadian originals that capture the enchanting delicacy of formal traditions . . . in precious silverware, the hallmark of gracious living. How richly silver reflects your own sense of style and good taste. Choose the everlasting charm of fine sterling or the enduring grace of silverplate. Your table will be far lovelier.

Much of the silver used by silversmiths for sterling and silverplate comes from Inco. Copper and nickel are also supplied by Inco in the strong nickel-silver foundation metal used in silverplate.

Although Inco is the world's largest producer of nickel, 13 other elements are also produced from the Sudbury ores—such as copper and relatively small quantities of precious metals like silver, gold, platinum and palladium. All of them have important uses in industry. That's how Inco metals serve the Canadian industries that serve you.

From October 6th to October 11th, Canadians will celebrate Silver Week when dealers everywhere will display their finest sterling and silverplate.

Fellowships Given Here

A pair of University of Toronto graduates each won $1,500 fellowships last week.

The fellowships are given annually by Union Carbide Canada Ltd.

George Atkinson, (Analytical Geometry) and J. D. Raal (Chemical engineering) were awarded the fellowships by the University of Toronto. Both are working towards their Ph.D.

The awards, open to graduates of Canadian universities, are granted on the basis of ability to conduct original research.

This year 64 students across Canada walked away with Carbide fellowships and fellowships aimed at supporting fundamental research.

Union Carbide pours $50,000 every year into the program, begun in 1954.

The bulk of the recipients of these awards are studying science and engineering.

The awards, the company says, are designed to help supply the country with trained researchers and engineers.

4:30 p.m. on the day before publication. Two announcements are allowed for special events. Only one item may be submitted for weekly meetings.

PC's Will Defend Frost After Liberal Challenges

Conservatives officially accepted a Liberal challenge Monday night — and went one step further.

The predicted move came after a week of name-calling and challenges by spokesmen of all three campus parties.

Liberals started the ball rolling by offering a topic for a Conservative-Liberal debate — "resolved that the Frost government is aged, incompetent and irresponsible."

As Tories sprang to the defence of their provincial premier, CCF spokesmen charged Liberals and Tories were planning to "officially combine forces."

Monday night Conservatives declared themselves "willing and prepared to defend the record of the Frost Government," and suggested the CCF be included in a tri-party debate on the topic.

In an additional statement late last night, Conservatives said they were "gratified with the results of two Tory-won by-elections."

These two victories demonstrate conclusively that the Progressive Conservative government under the leadership of John Diefenbaker has the continued support of the great majority of Canadian people," the statement said.

Frank McGee (York Scarborough) will speak to the Progressive Conservative Club in the Economics Building at 1 p.m. Thursday.

Mr McGee has been a Member of Parliament for the last two sessions. He was a member of the Public Accounts Committee investigating the National Printing Bureau during the last session.

finish line

Some forty years ago, shortly after this century had turned prematurely old, H. G. Wells observed that "human history becomes more and more a race between education and catastrophe".

As the years after one war unwound towards another, succeeding generations of students took such prophecies very much to heart.

Talking a "great deal of nonsense at the tops of their voices about a "right to life", a "right to work" and especially a "right to education", our mothers and fathers floundered in and out of the doctrines of the day waving their self-important demands.

The answer to such demands was short, sweet and simple. Nobody has a "right" to anything. Work, education and life itself is a gift, and it's up to the individual to make the most of it.

But the problem of Wells' prophecy remains, in this country if in no other.

At present only 15 per cent of Canadian university students receive aid from governments in one form or another.

This figure compares despondently with other countries in the Atlantic community and tragically with countries behind the Iron Curtain.

In Britain nearly 80 per cent of all students enrolled at universities receive financial aid. In the United States assistance is given 47 per cent of the student group.

Estimates of the proportion of Russian students going through on government scholarships can only be vague, but reports say the figure tops 90 per cent.

More important than the lack of government scholarships is the waste of brainpower this, and other factors, produce. Only seven per cent of the nation's youth of university age attend institutes of higher education. Figures indicate 30 per cent have the ability to do so.

The National Federation of Canadian University Students and other independent organizations across the country are doing their level best to alleviate this wastage.

They don't ask that the government provide free education for every Tom, Dick, Jill and Harry who wants to attend university.

Rather, they ask that the government make it possible for an adequate percentage of the country's talent to learn their various trades and exercise their capabilities.

Their platform contains no high-flown phrases about the "right" to work and the privileges of the individual.

Rather, they concentrate on the problem which so disturbed Wells.

They are wise.

The time for shouting has long since past and the opportunity for action is slowly slipping away.

The threats our parents merely played with have grown into true and more terrible realities. For in the race between education and catastrophe, catastrophe seems to be winning.

Enrolments in Canadian Universities and with increased registration recorded in university

No final figures on enrolments have been reavey taken by the Canadian University Press indicarea but Newfoundland.

Memorial University student editor John MacGillivray said total enrolment on the island's sole university would be smaller than last year because of lack of space.

Final registration figures are unpredictable, he said, but there would be fewer students this year than last year's record of 1,134.

However, another Maritime university, University of New Brunswick, estimates there will be an increase of close to 10 per cent. UNB will probably have in the neighborhood of 1,500 students this year — last year they had 1,381.

In Quebec, only Laval University released registration, showing an increase of about seven per cent this year. An estimated 9,567 students will take classes at Laval.

Biggest single increase was registered in the faculty of Social Sciences, where there was a gain of 15 per cent. Law registrations dropped off 10 per cent in Canada's oldest university.

In Ontario the rapidly expanding Ryerson Institute of Technology saw another increase — from 1,950 in 1957 to 2,050 this year.

RIT started in 1949 the enrolment has multiplied by 10 times from its original total of 200.

Ontario Agricultural College expects an increase of 15 per cent, and the University of Toronto expects to add another 600 students to her total of more than 13,000 last year.

The Hungarians

A combination of factors—primarily lack of English—have been cited for the failure of about three-quarters of the 43 Hungarian mining students who came to the University after the 1956 uprising in their country.

The Hungarians, about half the mining faculty at Sopron University, took the lectures in English and wrote their examinations in English.

By contrast, the Sopron Forestry faculty, which moved to the University of British Columbia, took lectures there under their own staff and lived in a group, was 100 per cent successful in examinations last spring.

In Toronto one mining student who took applied geology obtained honors, two others passed without conditions, and nine passed conditionally and were required to write supplemental examinations.

The Ontario Mining Association, which issued with U of T a joint invitation to the Hungarians, will not continue to pay tuition and living allowances to the Hungarians this year.

Registrar J. C. Evans said when the results of the mining examinations were announced, that "we might have been kinder if we had been more cruel, and not allowed them to enter until they spoke better English."

He added, however, that those who had failed had spent a worthwhile year learning about Canada and democracy, and had learned better English than they might have if they had taken jobs.

Dr. William Szency, former Sopron official and now on staff at the university, said many of the students could not resume their studies without working for a year.

Students interviewed said they felt no resentment and had expected failure. They said they found they had to spend most of their time on assignments and had little time left to study for examinations.

The fact that examinations in Hungary were oral and while here they are written was also given as an explanation.

COMPARISON OF MINING

What's the matter with old

MONTREAL—McGill University students face an average fee increase of $100—the highest fees of any university in Canada.

Arts fees jumped $100 to $550, compared with University of Toronto's $380 for the same courses. Engineering fees jumped to $700 from $551—Toronto student engineers pay $546.

McGill medical students will have to pay $750 this year, a jump from $650. Toronto medical students pay $596.

Fee raises were announced by McGill last spring in the face of a half million dollar deficit.

Revenues from fees will reach $4,087,530 this year, compared with $3,390,006 last year. But this is less than 40 per cent of the budgeted expenditures of $11,108,566.

McGill's financial problems are further aggravated by lack of federal grants which are given to all Canadian Universities except those in Quebec. Premier Maurice Duplessis does not approve of federal sources financing education — a provincial responsibility.

The money is being held in trust for the Quebec universities by the National Conference of Canadian Universities — the distributing agency for the federal money.

The money was refused by McGill and her sister Quebec universities because the province's Union Nationale government has let it be known that provincial grants will not be forthcoming for any university which accepts federal money.

Quebec provincial grants to universities are not on a statutory basis but are left to the discretion of the government each year. This means these grants can be cut off at any time the government desires, and also that it is virtually impossible for the province's universities to make long-range financial plans.

The post-war realization of the necessity of education and the growing population of the country have forced most centres to steadily increase existing facilities.

The University of Toronto has already started a giant expansion program in which existing facilities will be doubled to handle an expected 25,000 students by 1962.

The Universities of British Columbia and Western Ontario and Laval are embarking upon extensive expansion programs and it is expected other universities will follow suit.

And those who didn't come back

MONTREAL (CUP)—Serious summer unemployment conditions have hit the University of Montreal, forcing many students to postpone or interrupt their university careers.

U of M. employment service head Marcel Cloutier estimates students are starting the academic year with from $100 to $200 less than last year to pay fees, board, lodging, and books.

J. K. Bradford, head of the University of Toronto's placement service said yesterday there definitely are people who could not return to the U of T because of lack of funds.

"We have had some who came in and said they couldn't." The university, he said, does not believe any student can work his entire way through college. But many students operate on "a very narrow margin" and lack of summer employment could well tip the balance.

He feared a possible exodus at Christmas of other students whose funds won't quite equal expenses.

Figures were not available. He felt that the situation was aggravated this year because the recession had created a large laid-off labor pool for temporary employment. In addition, he suspected that some strikers were taking temporary jobs.

First and second-year students were the hardest-hit, especially in engineering. One reason for this is that this group is near the category of unskilled labor on the whole.

...and what happened

A letter from University of Toronto student president Vince Kelly to Prime Minister John Diefenbaker outlining serious student unemployment brought three replies but no commitment for government aid.

Kelly's letter to Diefenbaker last June noted student unemployment was between 15 and 30 per cent. Other students were working for salaries much lower than usual, he said.

Eight per cent of the university population across the country would be forced to discontinue their education, Kelly warned.

The prime minister's secretary replied assuring Kelly the government was "vitaly aware of the important role of universities and of the serious financial problems facing the university authorities as well as the students."

"The government's policy with respect to financial assistance to education is under review," the letter said.

A letter from Labor Minister Michael Starr said the National Employment Service has conducted "an intensive campaign" during the past year to inform employers of the availability of university students.

"I can assure you of our very vital interest in this problem and our desire to assist all students in need of employment," Starr said.

General economic conditions and bad weather have meant that students work an average of a month less on their jobs than in past years, he said.

All students seeking work through the employment service are usually placed by the middle of June, he said. This year by the end of May there were still 600 students unemployed. At the beginning of July, a month and a half after the end of the school year, close to 100 students were still seeking jobs.

In past years the service has refused employers offering salaries of $40 a week—but this year had to take less because of the job shortage.

Many more students have asked for part time jobs at night and on weekends than in past years, Cloutier said.

Information gathered this summer suggested very uncertain prospects for McGill students too.

About a month ago, Roland C. Coleman, director of the McGill Placement Service, said 300 jobs were confirmed among the 1,100 students who applied to the service for summer jobs.

These figures should not, he said, be taken at face value. Probably a large number of the remaining students probably found jobs without notifying the service.

But, "it is one of the worst years since the war."

Dr. Clifford Knowles, university counsellor, said he had been interviewing from 10 to 15 students with financial problems daily for the previous three weeks.

He didn't know whether these students were a portent of things to come or "just the panicky ones."

"There isn't anybody who can tell you that," he said.

The Power of Nfcus Our Greatest Ally

Students striving to make their summer paycheques meet the cost of university education find their greatest ally in the National Federation of Canadian University Students.

Since last spring Nfcus has been applying pressure to the federal government for institution of 10,000 federal-provincial scholarships and bursaries for about $550 each.

Other relief asked by Nfcus is legislation to make tuition fees exempt from taxable income and improvement of the present unemployment insurance situation.

Nfcus asks that either students be exempt from paying unemployment insurance or they be entitled to benefits should summer employment be unavailable. Report cases indicate no student has ever been granted unemployment insurance.

Principal object for Nfcus however remains the scholarship plan. The $550 figure is based on average difference between a year's university costs and the amount the student and his family can pay.

Federal-provincial scholarships were suggested in order to preserve provincial jurisdiction over education outlines in the British-North America Act.

The scholarship campaign became airborne at the 21st Nfcus conference in Quebec City last October.

At that conference a resolution was passed stating every student meeting entrance requirements for Canadian universities is entitled to receipt of an adequate scholarship.

Following the resolution, Nfcus prepared a brief on education and distributed it to every member of parliament.

Nfcus president Walter Tarnolpolsky and executive secretary Andre l'Heureux obtained an interview with Prime Minister Diefenbaker and outlined the case for university assistance.

So far nothing concrete has come of the campaign.

This year's Nfcus conference meets in Ottawa next week and further efforts to increase aid to students will be discussed.

The HH Committee hopes to be able to estimate attendance this year from advance sales, and will hire a fourth band if necessary. "We don't intend to turn away people this year," Publicity Director Don Stevenson said last night.

"The Fall Dance serves a very real, need on campus," Undergraduate Secretary John Becker said.

About ten male or female sailors will be needed, he said. They should have had previous experience in sailboat racing.

The club plans four sailing meets in the United States along with competition against six universities.

Tryouts will be this weekend. The club sails fourteen-foot Nordbergs in Toronto Harbor.

Exact time and place of the inaugural meeting will be announced tomorrow. Those interested but unable to be present should contact the HH athletic office.

Soccer Blues Anticipating Successful Title Defence

Prospects have never looked better than they do this season for the Varsity soccer teams. With pre-season practices half over Coach Tommy Duncan is confident that his players will repeat their sweep of last year when they won all three Intercollegiate titles.

This year saw more players try out for the Blue teams than in many past years and for the first time Coach Duncan had to use a cut to get the squad down to a reasonable size. This happened last Friday when the squad was trimmed some thirty players.

Only five of last season's Senior team will be missing when the opening whistle blows. The two players who will be sorely missed are goalkeeper Brian Aldritt, who has graduated, and Eddy Csongradi, a star winger who ran into academic troubles and hence must sit out a year.

Two other players, forwards Clive Hodgson and utility defenceman Ulo Sarna have been unable to take time away from studies this year.

The credit side of the picture is much brighter. All of last year's starting defence will be returning. Both veteran full-backs Paul Avis and Doug Taylor will be back as will half-backs Roy (Cabby) Green, Ron Williams and Norm Shepherd.

This year will be the sixth season for three-time captain Williams. Ron had decided to quietly retire after last season and coach the Intermediate team but when training time arrived he turned out for "just one more year". This is the second time that Ron has "quit".

In the trio of Green, Williams and Shepherd the Blues have the finest half line in the Intercollegiate League and this is the main reason for the continued Varsity successes. With these three in command of a game the Blue and White forwards are continually being fed the ball while opposition forwards rarely get within hailing distance of the Varsity net.

Although the Varsity forward line scored some five goals a game last year, this year promises to be even better. At first it seemed that the loss of Csongradi would leave a hole on the Varsity right wing but so far Lloyd McKenzie, an Intermediate star last year, has shown every promise of filling the gap.

Candidates for the position

U of T Fencers Took Part In World Tourney

Over 200 competitors from 24 countries met last month at the University of Pennsylvania to decide the world foil, epee and sabre titles.

The Canadian team included Howard Tate, president of the University of Toronto fencing club, and Julius Alpar, Varsity fencing master and ex-coach of the Hungarian Olympic team.

Best performances for Canada were turned in by Tate and Abbey Silverstone, a Canadian studying at the University of Illinois.

In epee and sabre, Canada lost out early, with Italy and Hungary capturing the respective championships.

of centre-forward include Billy Webb, the pride of PHE, who has been the Blues' scoring champion for the last two years. Bill has only been out for two practices so far but a summer with the Navy appears to have kept him in good shape. Another returning star is hard-working Jim Duncan, who scores more goals with a well-trained head than with his feet. He ended last season tied with Webb for the scoring laurels.

It seems likely that inside-forward Emil Primorac will take up where he left off last season as one of the Varsity top play-makers. Several of last year's Baby Blues' forward line will be trying to make a place on the Senior attack and among the top candidates is Brian Michez. Brian carried himself well in a couple of late season trials which he had with the Senior team.

The newcomer who seems certain to make a Senior team berth is a freshman, Bruno Bertolin. He plays during the summer for one of the top National League teams, Toronto Italia, and although Bruno is one of the smaller players on the Varsity squad, he has one of the hardest shots. He is the main reason for Tommy Duncan's optimism.

Another bright prospect for a Blues' berth in Jim Watson, a full-back with a lot of playing experience in England, who has shown great promise in practices.

Until the Senior team is picked it is very hard to accurately judge the strength of the Baby Blues team. Several key players will be missing this year and their absence may be keenly felt. Centre - forward Peter Bracken and centre-half Cliff Littledale both have graduated leaving the team possibly weak down the centre.

Regulars returning to the team include the reliable full-back duo of Ted Jensen and Herb Hilgenberg. The player who seems most likely at present to inherit the key position of centre-half is SPS Intramural star Tim O'Leary.

Several players are competing for wing-half positions including veteran Steve Clarkson and newcomers Doug Grant, Vic Herde, Oscar Reinmann, Wilmot Tackoor and Dick Vanderzwaag.

The make-up of the Baby Blues' forward line is still very uncertain with many players being tried at different positions. A hustling freshman by the name of Bev Walker is ably filling the gap at centre-forward. Peter Casey and Stan Fraser are battling for the left-wing spot while some six to eight players are in the running for other slots.

Only one cloud hangs over the scene for Coach Duncan and that is the lack of good goalkeepers. Last year's Baby Blues' keeper, Vello Soots, has returned but he is the only net-minder in sight. This year he seems assured of the Senior job but the Baby Blues' net is still empty.

It is still not too late for any Turk Broda of the soccer field to come and have a tryout as a second 'keeper must be found by next Saturday in time for the opening game. Anybody interested should apply at the Intercollegiate Office for details as soon as possible.

Despite the lack of goalkeepers the coaching staff are agreed that the squad is stronger than last year and both they and the players are sure that all three soccer trophies will stay in Hart House for at least another year.

The players remaining on the squad after last Friday's cut are:

Goalkeepers: Vello Soots
Full-backs: Doug Taylor, Jack Hladun, Ted Jensen, Jim Watson, Herb Hilgenberg and Paul Avis

Half-backs: Ron Williams, Roy Green, Norm Shepherd, Oscar Reinmann, Steve Clarkson, Doug Grant, Vic Herde, Tim O'Leary, Wilmot Tackoor, Dick Vanderzwaag

Outside-forwards: Stew Bell, Peter Casey, Stan Fraser, Lloyd McKenzie, Boris Sorokiwsky

Inside-forwards: Bruno Bertolin, Jim Duncan, Peter Hamilton, Mike Mahon, Brian Michez, Guiseppe Parato, Emil Primorac, Syd Smart.

Centre-forwards: Bill Webb, Bev Walker, Chris Carr.

Friday night's "experiment" with Intercollegiate football under the lights must be termed a success, for two reasons.

First, the turnstiles clicked 12,593 times, which was greatly appreciated by the University of Toronto Athletic Association.

Second, a goodly number of fans expressed wholehearted approval of yelling and mellowing in the moonlight.

Including in the latter group were the customers who make a practice of staying away in droves for Saturday games.

Said one:

"I'd come every Friday night, but I won't come Saturday, I'd rather watch the pro games on TV."

But it was partly as a lure to such fans that the night game idea was produced in the first place.

That at least some of them — plus a better-than-average student turnout—were in attendance, made a few Hart House occupants somewhat happy.

UTAA financial secretary Phil Loosemore expressed enthusiasm at the result of the experiment.

"It was a beautiful night for football, and that helped a great deal. Student ticket sales are ahead of last year, and we're still selling a lot," he said.

A full schedule of night games may be some distance in the future, but it was an encouraging start.

Let's hope it wasn't just a novelty that will wear off.

AND VALE, BETTY

Mentioning our financial secretary brings to mind the departure today of a genial little lady who, for the past five years, has been Mr. Loosemore's right-hand gal.

By name Betty Perkins, she has been a pert and pretty addition to the athletic staff. Her Pepsodent grin and artful ad-libbing will be missed.

Best of luck, Betty, and when you own that oil company, we'll be dropping in for some free fuel.

Blues Start Preparation For Jaunt To McGill

On the heels of a hard-fought 26-0 win over Western Mustangs Friday, Varsity coach Dalt White sent his charges through a two-hour light workout last night.

Blues hit the pads again tonight in preparation for the weekend trip to Montreal and battle with McGill's surprising Redmen.

The Montrealers, currently tied with Varsity for the Intercollegiate league lead, are an unknown entity. They had been expected to defeat Queen's by more than a 14-8 margin.

Blues' assistant coach John McManus travelled to Montreal right after Friday's game here, and sat in on the Queen's-McGill tilt.

Included in McManus' report was the fact that ex-Varsity halfback Wally Bulchak played 60 minutes, and with two touchdowns was one of the Redmen's biggest threats.

Blues entrain Friday afternoon for the game which could give them undisputed possession of top spot in the young season.

Injury-wise, Varsity escaped virtually unscathed from the Mustang fray. A series of bruises caused some painful moments at last night's workout, but everyone is expected healthy for the weekend.

Steve Chisholm picked up a charley horse and Lorry Stacey a thigh bruise, but both worked out yesterday. End Ray Dunn reported back from Hershey Bears' hockey camp and turned out.

The lone absentee from practice was end Walt Sopinka, who took the night off to recover from a severe cold. Captain Curt Russell, also in the squeeze-squeeze category, practiced.

In the other game this week-end, Queen's travels of London for battle with the Mustangs, who should have no trouble disposing of the weakened Gaels.

Western expects Captain Ted Roman and tackle Tom White back in harness to bolster their line. Both missed the Varsity game.

Increase Value Rhodes Name Rotman For '58

The value of the Rhodes scholarships has just been increased from 600 to 700 pounds yearly.

The Rhodes Trustees announced that this increase will go into effect immediately and will apply to the eleven Canadian Rhodes scholarships awarded annually. The competition for the 1959 awards closes on November 1, 1958.

Canadian male students, preferably in their third or final year of university, unmarried, and between 18 and 24 years of age, are eligible to apply.

Application forms and particulars may be obtained from university registrars, the secretary of the Selection Committee in each province, or the general secretary for the Rhodes scholarships in Canada, 5 Rose-dale Rd., Toronto 5.

The Rhodes scholarships are the oldest scholarships in the English-speaking world. They were established under the will of the late Cecil Rhodes, who died in 1902, leaving his great fortune for this purpose.

Since this time 526 Canadians have been Rhodes scholars. The awards are tenable at Oxford for two years with a possible third year where unique opportunities exist for advanced work in both science and the humanities.

Some definite quality of distinction, whether in intellect or character, or a combination of these, is the prime requisite.

Among the eleven Canadian Rhodes scholars-elect is Harold H. Rotman, who placed first in the graduating class of 121 medical students at the University of Toronto this year.

He represented the University of Toronto in senior inter-collegiate basketball throughout his undergraduate years. He goes to University College, Oxford, where he will study Physiology.

OWN AVR AT LAST

U of T will get its long-sought original bookshow for the All-Varsity Revue this year.

An original production is ready and waiting—but the final word won't come from the Students' Administrative Council for two weeks.

First draft for the show was approved by the AVR Committee last spring, and writers Dick Dean and Stan Farrow polished up the play over the summer.

Now Bill Lord is ready to produce and design it on the word of the SAC.

The show is set in Rome and "it's a satire in connection with Canada", Lord said last night.

But "it is in no way similar to McGill's 'My Fur Lady'—we deliberately chose the one that wasn't like it", AVR Committee chairman Irv. Goldberg said.

Nevertheless the bookshow trio has hopes of another big success like McGill's famous musical. "We think it has very commercial possibilities, but everyone involved in a show thinks that", Lord said.

The show is "not large, but it's being staged differently than any U of T college shows so far", Lord said.

The two-act satire will have a cast of about 50, with eight leads, Lord said.

If the SAC gives a go-head, Lord hopes to start casting around the end of November, and go into rehearsals in December.

Finding an original bookshow for the AVR has been a problem at U of T for many years.

In 1956, after years of AVRs which were mixtures of college shows, Broadway's "Brigadoon" was produced. Next year "Finian's Rainbow" was a hit and Curt Reiss got initial approval for production of "Guys and Dolls" last year.

In one of the hottest disputes of the session, last year's SAC turned Reiss's plans down, backing the mixed acts from college shows.

The SAC said then they hoped this would bring original bookshows in the future. The scheduled melange, "New Faces '58", met mediocre reviews and average turnouts.

Vic Freshman Kidnapped

The kidnapping of a Victoria College freshman leader last night by sophomores brought retaliation in kind within barely 1½ hours.

Norm Williams, Vic sophomore president, who twice in a week foiled kidnapping attempts by students he thought were Engineers, was forcibly removed to an automobile after the traditional Vic "Hare and Hounds" chase last night.

Near the beginning of the chase, an attempt by the frosh to capture six sophomore executives on pain of custard pie in the faces of their leaders, John Woods, a freshman, had been carried off by sophomores.

Wood was one of seven "bob" leaders, elected by freshmen to lead them through initiation week.

Both students are scheduled to be returned sometime this week-end.

While the bulk of the freshman class left the traditional "Hare and Hounds" dance in pursuit of any six sophomore executives, Wood was persuaded to remain behind "to help with the sound equipment."

He was lured to a car and abducted.

Remaining "bob" leaders received custard pies in the face an hour later for failing to bag the required number of executives.

Shortly after the dance, six Vic frosh surrounded Williams near the Vic Field House with very few sophomores nearby. He had to be carried to the car.

He had previously evaded attempts to kidnap him by students he believed were Engineers, first by using another name at a dance, then by slamming his home door in the faces of two students impersonating arismen.

Defiant Skulemen Keep On Jackets

By JACK SEEDHOUSE
Varsity Staff Reporter

Tuesday and Wednesday both saw large numbers of engineers attending lectures and labs in their engineering jackets.

This came in the face of an announcement that the jackets were not to be worn to classes anymore. Dean R. R. McLaughlin of the faculty has been to classes each day so far this week announcing the new regulations.

When contacted last night by the Varsity the dean declined to comment at this time. He added, however, that he would be happy to make a statement next week after he has been to see all the classes.

In a letter to the dean, the Engineering Society endorsed the principle of "better dress at SPS," but said, "It would be impractical to set a minimum standard of dress, since some of the students have financial difficulties. A clean neat appearance is all that could be asked."

Engineers generally are not objecting to the idea of neater dress. But they are objecting strenuously to the ban on their jackets.

"I feel that an engineering jacket looks more than respectable with proper slacks and sports shirts, or with shirts and ties," said one second year mechanical engineering student. "There is nothing sloppy or slovenly whatever about this mode of dress."

"Neither the university nor the faculty is paying us to come, so this could hardly be called a business establishment. Hence the decision on what we wear should be our own, or at least a majority decision in a faculty plebiscite."

Dean McLaughlin's address said in part, "The types of wind-breakers that I think are objectionable are the advertising type, for example, 'Engineering' splashed all over them. I have asked the first year not to buy them. I ask you to put yours out to pasture where they belong . . . anywhere but on the campus and on the city streets."

Halfback Desborough Back With Mustangs

Neil Desborough, former University of Western Ontario halfback, has rejoined the Mustangs. The Varsity learned from a reliable source at press time this morning.

Desborough, 21-year-old graduate of East York Collegiate, reported for practice last night after being accepted in a post-graduate course.

He graduated in honor psychology last spring, and wrote supplemental examinations in August to improve his average for admission to the graduate study.

A veteran of Intercollegiate play, Desborough starred with the Mustangs for three years, and was a vital factor in their 1957 championship.

The 21-year-old, 168-pound speedster is expected to be in uniform when Western meets Varsity Blues here on October 11.

Argue Blasts Diefenbaker

Hazen Argue, leader of a decimated CCF party in the last session of Parliament, Tuesday laid before about 100 students here a general denunciation of the Progressive-Conservative government.

Speaking at the first open meeting of the campus CCF club, he accused the Diefenbaker regime of a Jekyll-Hyde transformation occurring between their first and second sessions after sweeping the Liberal party out of federal government.

He charged the Prime Minister with failing to alleviate unemployment as he had promised, failing to lower interest rates and, instead, increasing them through the bond-conversion program.

He said the government had done nothing about the national hospital plan Diefenbaker had promised.

He charged, finally, that the Tories were ruling with "a very arbitrary hand", and expressed fear that the nation had exchanged a Liberal oligarchy for a one-man rule.

Mr. Argue said that when Diefenbaker campaigned in his home riding of Prince Albert, Sask., he "dropped the Conservative label" and ran "just as Diefenbaker." His national campaign, Mr. Argue said, was run on the same basis.

The Conservative platform, before the PC victory, Mr. Argue said, was "fairly progressive". He said the many young members now sitting for the Tories had been caught up by this first-session "progressivism" of Diefenbaker and would now be suffering disillusionment.

Specifically outlining how the Progressive-Conservative government in its second sessions had failed to carry out its promises, he said Diefenbaker had promised "no one will suffer because of unemployment."

"Now," Mr. Argue said, "there is more unemployment than under the Liberals."

Mr. Argue said that party discipline among the Tories in Parliament was excessive and that if the Liberal back-benchers had been "trained seals", the Conservative back-benchers are certainly "seals-in-training."

Bissell: "Be Angular" Float Parade To Try

Theme of this year's Homecoming Float Parade is "How to be Angular", Blue and White Chairman Dave Pinkham told the Students' Administrative Council last night.

Pinkham also named Cherley Greco as producer-director of this year's Homecoming variety show. Greco produced last year's All Varsity Revue.

The show will be staged on the Thursday before Homecoming, scheduled for Saturday, Oct. 18.

Master of ceremonies for the show will be Blues' tackle Julian Porter, Pinkham said.

MARY MORTIFIED by the first Emmanuel College prank in years. This is how the Scottish martyr in the Knox College Quadrangle looked Tuesday morning. (See story on page four.)

charity

Ours is a genial policy of malice towards none and charity towards all.

So, respite their raucous howls of independence at the crucial moments of every football game, despite the fact that they have tried—and failed—to high-jack this paper more times than we can count, despite the fact that last Spring they stole our car, removed ignition system and wheels, and painted it a hideous, blind-dog yellow, despite all this and more—much more—we still have a sliver of sympathy for the Engineers in their hour of need.

And the Engineers deserve sympathy as they have never deserved it before.

Barely recovered from a forty-day deprivation of their staple diet, they were just struggling to their feet again when a second, more deadly blow hit them where it really hurt—smack in the middle of their pride.

The blow—the banning of the Skule jacket—seems as pointless as it is below the belt.

While there is certainly some justification for the outlawing of jeans, khakis, T-shirts and bizarre sports shirts, nothing very positive will be achieved by completely destroying morale.

Jackets have never detracted from the appearance of the average Engineer. Properly worn, they look both neat and, at times, handsome.

Besides this, jackets are worn consistently by Artsmen without any serious complaints—even in dignified corridors of Trinity.

Dean McLaughlin's decree is apparently based on the entirely tenable thesis that "manners maketh man".

However, we have always been of the opinion that "brains and study make Engineers" regardless of whether their bodies are draped in jackets or bikinis.

It seems that the Dean's efforts to improve the standards of the institution under his charge could be directed into more profitable channels.

The Engineering jacket, like the stripe on the skunk's back, has always been one sure way of recognizing a potentially dangerous animal.

Yes -- Class of '26. Why do you ask Crowe: Jim or Harry?

Dear Sir:

Harry Crowe of United College, Winnipeg, and John Dieffenbaker, Parliament Hill, Ottawa, have rarely agreed on many matters politically or philosophically, but somehow we suspect that to-day they both agree on the vital need for a Bill Of Rights, not legislated by act of Parliament, but rather by amending the B.N.A. Act in order to make such a bill an integral part of the constitution of our country.

As we see it, Professor Crowe's dismissal from his post as professor of history at United College for writing a letter to one of his colleagues, which the Board of Regents at the College intercepted and condemned because of Crowe's "attitude towards religion and his colleagues on the staff (of the College), is a clear-cut case of infringement of academic freedom and academic tenure". It seems to us that according to the principles of democracy, any man or woman in this country has the prerogative—nay, the obligation—to speak out against any person or any action which he deems incompatible with his own beliefs. Surely democracy is nothing if it is not freedom of speech.

We are pleased to note that many of Professor Crowe's admirers in Winnipeg, both students and teachers, have refused to accept the action of the board passively. We would like to think that if a similar action were taken on our own campus, we too would raise our voices in protest.

We believe that until a Bill of Rights is added to our federal constitution, as well as the constitutions of each individual province (such as has been done in Saskatchewan), we can expect more stories like the one of Harry Crowe.

U. of T. CCF Club.

New Fourth Party?

Dear sir:

Dis-illusioned, disgusted and dismayed with the present state of soi-disant campus politics, certain of us have presumed to rend the veil of mediocrity once and for all.

In a word, we contemplated the foundation of a fourth party, the Social Revisionists. Our patience with men of straw and blow-hard demagogues is at an end. The pomposity of the youthful jackanapes who have hitherto posed and pranced in public gaze is calculated to try the strongest stomach. It has succeeded admirably.

Our strength does not lie in vituperation and verbiage alone. We aim at an harmonious marriage of thought and action.

We "love a good, well-ordered liberty as well as any man" but we realize that grave ills require strong remedies. We seek to restore to mankind those priceless gifts now in jeopardy—his sense of humor, his sanity and his common sense. As for those asses who would bray that we have no platform, let them prick up their ears in haste, for one is forthcoming:

"Though the mills of God grind slowly,
"Yet they grind exceedingly small."

Aston At Quarterback For Blues At McGill

Halfback Dave Creswell will be in uniform and Brian Aston at quarterback when Varsity Blues take to the Molson Stadium turf against McGill Redmen Saturday.

That was the word from training sessions as Coach Dalt White put his charges through their last heavy workout last night before entraining for Montreal tomorrow afternoon.

Creswell snapped a leg muscle in his first hour at the Lake Couchiching camp last month, and has been slowly working his leg back into condition.

He practised in uniform last week, but stayed clear of actual contact until Monday. A speedy back, Creswell stands out mainly on defense, but can carry his load offensively as well.

Aston appears to have earned the quarterback slot from Larry Joynt, whose height and ball-sense make him a tower of strength at defensive safety.

In the past couple of years, Blues have gone mainly with a two-pivot system, but with Aston showing improvement every time out, Coach White has decided to go along with the OCE student.

Varsity will be at full strength for the McGill tilt. Halfback Steve Chisholm did not don the pads for last night's practise, but will be ready Saturday.

Chisholm suffered a charley horse in the Western game, and was the most "serious" casualty of that bruising affair.

McGill has not been so fortunate. Their big loss came when import halfback Carl Hansen suffered torn ligaments in his knee and was sidelined for at least three weeks.

Coach Bruce (Bones) Coulter replaced Hansen with Joe Irvin, and he was one of the standouts against Queen's last week.

A second major loss came in the Tricolor game when guard Al Brackvelt, Redmen's most valuable player last season, was injured.

Brackvelt, a 5'10" 185-pounder, is expected to miss the Saturday game. Otherwise, McGill is healthy, although their performance against Queen's caused concern in the Quebec town.

Have Varsity Co-eds "Got What It Takes?"

By PAM HILL

St. Andrew's Golf Club will focus attention on the annual women's interfaculty golf tournament today at 2 p.m. This event is usually "slicely" amusing—might make for a "beady" break from lectures!

The softball league this year is made up of teams from Victoria (I & II), PHE (I & II), P & OT, St. Hilda's, UC, St. Mike's and Meds. It's a little late for the World Series, but there's always next year, so give it a whirl.

Over 700 freshies were put through a 120-foot swimming test and a brief flexibility workout last week. The results were disappointing, although the potential is there.

Why aren't women more fit? And what would similar testing of all co-eds reveal?

Back in high school, physical education was compulsory, and tests prove that muscular endurance and physical condition improve each year.

But at college, in the first place, physical education is not compulsory beyond first year. Secondly, only 25 per cent of the women make up the athletic program (as opposed to 50 per cent of that lesser sex).

SAC at a glance

Besides formally installing themselves, the Students' Administrative Council last night:

—listened solemnly while new SAC chairman Jerry Case told them not to spend the year chasing their own tails —decided to appoint a committee to investigate possibilities of a needy-student loan fund —learned much later such a fund already existed —acknowledged Ken Wyman as temporary University College representative —discovered the forestry rep was Donald Dixon, not Dix —stood by while John Swan closed nomination on his own appointment to the Student Services Commission

—gaped when Meds rep Bob Lee mentioned possibilities of mixed swimming in Hart House —applauded when Pharmacy rep Irv Goldberg announced the Pharmaceutical Society had donated $50 for furniture in the Settlement House —straightened their ties while president Vince Kelly outlined their importance and responsibilities.

Quebec Storm Gathering As Student Ring Closing.

MONTREAL—The wildcat University Action League is on the move here.

After one triumph over the elected presidents of the province's six universities, the League is reportedly trying to set up organizations on all campuses in the province.

The triumph came when the League was invited by Quebec Premier Maurice Duplessis to discuss the province's educational problems at a private audience.

The Quebec Association of Universities—made up of the six student presidents—had tried for eight months to gain a similar interview.

The Association had prepared a detailed brief outlining the financial problems of the universities.

They had asked since January for an interview with the Premier to discuss the findings and recommendations of the brief. They were virtually ignored.

Refusal by the Premier to see the elected presidents touched off a one-day boycott of classes in five of the province's six universities.

Three University of Montreal students went to Quebec City to protest in person. They tried to see the Premier. He did not acknowledge their presence.

They stayed in Quebec for eight weeks, calling at Duplessis's office every morning.

The Premier called them "ill-mannered children."

Last spring following failure of the student presidents to make headway in their campaign, a group sprang up calling themselves the University Action League.

They said in their manifesto they were anxious "to improve student conditions with respect to the rights and duties of each and every one."

The newly-formed League drew up a brief on education which members of the Association claimed closely followed that submitted originally by the presidents last January.

The League brief however did not mention anything about statutory grants—which were recommended by the elected student leaders. The Association said the existing grant system was irregular and erratic and inadequate.

Two weeks after the League's brief to the Premier had been sent, League members announced the Premier had asked to see them—even though they had not asked for an interview.

The Association protested vigorously against the Premier's action. It charged there was collusion between the League and Duplessis's Union Nationale.

The Association pointed out that the brother of one Cabinet Minister, the brother-in-law of another Minister, and the Union Nationale organizer in Bagot were among League members.

League president Camille Moreau, they charged, was an Duplessis-party organizer in Bagot and also a regional president of Jeunesse de l'Union Nationale—a party youth group.

Despite protests the Premier saw the group. He promised a loan system for students, but made no promise of increased scholarships recommended in the brief.

Before the Duplessis interview, Association secretary Bruno Meloche, invited the League to attend a meeting of the Association to discuss whether the League should meet the Premier.

The League did not attend the meeting. They were unable to raise a quorum—percentage of their number necessary before any decision could be reached.

In August there were only 80 League members—50 of them from the University of Montreal. They said they would send a representative from every faculty in every university to meet

THIS IS MAURICE DUPLESSIS, the premier of the Province of Quebec, leader of the mighty Union Nationale, Canada's strongest single political hand, and the provincial leader who has stood adamant on forbidding the universities of his province to accept federal grants to education.

Legend . . .

QUEBEC ASSOCIATION OF UNIVERSITIES is an informal federation composed of the elected student presidents of Quebec's six universities. The ASSOCIATION tried for eight months to gain an interview with Premier Maurice Duplessis.

THE UNIVERSITY ACTION LEAGUE is an independent student group formed last spring after the Premier's refusal to see members of the Association. The UNIVERSITY ACTION LEAGUE submitted a brief to Premier Duplessis, and within two weeks was granted an interview. Nick Asimakopulos, president of the McGill University Students Union, charged there was "a singular sympathy" between Premier Maurice Duplessis and the League.

Trinity Debaters Down Rights Bill

The proposed Canadian Bill of Rights was rejected by a two-to-one vote before a house two-thirds composed of freshmen at Trinity's convocation hall last night.

Almost 100 students saw the Trinity College Literary Institute debate the motion, "Resolved that this House supports the Diefenbaker Bill of Rights."

Before the debate, chairman Harold Davis took the oath of the freshmen to be loyal "by great Gee Whittaker".

Speaking for the ayes, Jeremy Johnston cited the 1945 expropriations and attempted deportations of Japanese-Canadians "without any legal basis whatsoever." He said the bills would be a "shield for the weak and unprotected."

Michael Coke, also supporting the motion, declared the Bill "presents freedom in its truest light."

Leading the opposition, Richard Wilson regarded the bill's terms "too broad to stand up in court." He found the Bill "not only unnecessary, but also detrimental."

Doug Grant felt the bill "would fail miserably in its purpose," and reminded the house "by defining rights, we do not safeguard them."

Of the many speakers from the floor, Patrick Wooten thought the bill "not just inadequate, but positively frightening."

Roger Kirkpatrick said, "liberty is like a flower; let us not press it to death in some government tome." Keith Hollett said one purpose of the bill "is to focus public opinion on fundamental rights."

After division, the 100 debaters unanimously elected Prof. C. A. Ashley honorary president. Frank Dicum and Tom Drewbrook were unanimously elected to the constitutional committee.

Tory Attacks Dulles Policy

Frank McGee, Progressive Conservative Member of Parliament for York-Scarboro, yesterday said Canada should not support recognition of Communist China in direct opposition to United States foreign policy.

He was speaking to the campus Conservative club at a noon-hour meeting. About 60 were present.

Mr. McGee chose to have a discussion meeting rather than give a speech. He was compelled by questioners to stay almost two hours after the meeting ended.

The reference to Communist China answered a question from the floor asking how Prime Minister Diefenbaker could advocate a foreign policy for Canada completely independent of the U.S., and yet support them in the United Nations in opposing the recognition of the Communist government.

Mr. McGee said Canada has its own views on foreign affairs. Canada's foreign policy is exactly what the Canadian government feels it should be.

Mr. McGee then asked where the West would find itself if it decided to buck the United States and the Soviet at the same time.

Commenting on a charge by CCF leader Hazen Argue that Conservative back-benchers are "seals-in-training", Mr. McGee said if this was true in the past, it is hardly so now. This, he said, is due to the committee program which the PC government is operating.

"The fact that there is now activity for idle hands will perhaps make us less apt to be called 'trained seals'," he said.

Answering another question, he said, "One cannot vote for patronage any more. It no longer exists in Ottawa, anyway."

Many in the audience sprang to their feet at this.

When Mr. McGee could be heard again, he said: "There is one hell of a lot less patronage (now) than there was under the previous administration!"

Asked his opinion of the Canadian Bill of Rights, Mr. McGee said his personal view had not yet jelled. However, he said the opposition's fears that such a bill would create difficulties are largely without foundation.

Big Meds Group Helping Students

By Susan Breslin

equipment and instruments etc.

Through CAMSI's efforts 20 years ago, facilities were established across Canada to test students for tuberculosis and other diseases. And the organization was one of the guiding lights in establishment of Dominion-Provincial bursaries.

The Canadian Internes Placement Service acts as a clearing house for both hospitals and internes, and the Summer Employment Bureau attempts to find both medical and non-medical summer jobs for students.

The association will place fourth-year medical students with a general practitioner.

It will arrange for fourth-year students to live and work with a general practitioner for three weeks. Last year 25 per cent of its eligible members took advantage of this service.

This year, for the third time in its 20-year history, CAMSI's executive will operate from Toronto. Next October members from across the nation will gather here for a gigantic annual conference to discuss and plan for the year ahead.

Before that happens, Toronto's executive has a stiff schedule ahead.

It will attempt to increase and standardize the pay of internes in Canadian hospitals; to widen the choice available in hospitals for prospective internes; to establish a summer exchange programme with medical student organizations in the United Kingdom and Scandinavia.

In the alphabetical vocabulary of the organization-minded student, strange-sounding names appear with remarkable abandon. The enthusiastic student partisan often becomes lost in a welter of committees, exchanges and goodwill missions.

Amid the confusion, one little-known student organization has modestly acquired an impressive array of achievements.

The Canadian Association of Medical Students and Internes, affectionately known as CAMSI, has little more than an abbreviated name in common with other student organizations.

While their national and international counterparts scramble for publicity and funds, the 3,700 members of CAMSI quietly go about the difficult task of achieving their aims in relative obscurity.

But among those who know, CAMSI has become a name to be reckoned with.

CAMSI was born in Winnipeg in January, 1937, at the first National Conference of Canadian University Students. Representatives from U of T, McGill, University of Western Ontario and Queen's attended the first national CAMSI conference in Toronto in March, 1938. The first national president was P. F. McGee, now chief of Orthopedics at Toronto's St. Michael's Hospital.

The biggest feather in CAMSI's cap so far has proved a boon to all Canadian students. Through a brief presented to the last Canadian government, CAMSI asked for — and got — a $200 increase in tax-exemptable income allowance for students.

This year CAMSI will approach the Conservative government for an additional increase. Members hope to obtain legislation for tax-exemptions, totalling $1,500 per student, as well as additional legislation to provide special exemptions for married students.

CAMSI offers its members an insurance policy featuring the lowest rates in North America. It publishes the "CAMSI Journal", which airs and discusses the problems of its members. It distributes films to medical schools across Canada. It operates co-operative stores which offer members discounts off medical books,

Ideas, Experiments, And Study A Vision For Extension Head

By Liz Binks
Varsity Features Editor

Some 12 years of experience with jet aircraft may stand the university extension department's new director in good stead as he prepares this Fall to help launch one of education's many flights into the unknown.

Because, with a staff of 300, an enrolment that will probably exceed last year's 21,000 and a curriculum of about 200 courses, Dr. David Carleton Williams will need a deft touch at the controls.

The greying, vigorous psychologist is the first full-time professor to assume the department's directorship since its founding in 1920.

A BA graduate from the University of Manitoba at the age of 19, he took his MA and PhD at Toronto, served as an RCAF pilot during the war, later conducted a $100,000 survey for the air force, chaired a committee of the Defence Research Board and is a past president of the Canadian Psychological Association.

He also worked for The Varsity—in one of its noblest traditions.

"I used to submit horrible anonymous doggerel for Champus Cat," he admitted.

In assuming his new position, Dr. Williams is relying as heavily on experimental methods as on past experience.

"The function of university extension is primarily to project the university into the adult community," he said. "It performs this function through the ever-widening field of communication."

"Years ago this meant a professor travelled over well-nigh impassable roads to deliver his one-hour lecture to a small community. Now if he wishes, the professor may take his own car along modern highways and deliver that lecture several times in a week." "And as we once depended on roads, so we may well come to depend on a medium such as television," Dr. Williams said, although he admitted the word was enough to spark a flaming controversy in many academic circles.

The new director sunk deep into his easy chair before continuing.

"TV as an educational means could serve as a bulwark to preserve the community of scholars rather than a force to cheapen it if it is controlled properly," he said. "And the extension department, which is less bound by tradition and more open to experiment than the main university body, is the logical place to try it."

"Television can never hold the same advantages of a seminar class," he said. "But if we harness it to our purposes, it can be made to relieve some of the immense pressure which education is doomed for—and it may have to!"

After a year of running one of the university's first inroads into educational TV, Dr. Williams spoke with some authority.

Last year he directed a new CBUT series "Live and Learn", 12 half hour programs under the subtitle "Psychology of Learning".

It was enough of a success to be continued this year and Professors J. N. P. Hume and D. G. Ivey of the Physics department will handle a second series, "Focus on Physics".

Recent collaboration with the University of California has produced a unique filmed lecture series on space technology which will be shown here this Fall as well as at Carleton and McMaster.

"It's about as far from current space ship adventures as you can imagine," he said. "It's crawling with equations!"

Has the current Sputnik scare and ensuing cry for more education left its mark on the extension department?

"It has actually had more effect on the public than on universities," Dr. Williams replied. "You see, this is an old cry with universities—now the public is beginning to realize they were right."

"But the value of an extension department is that it can bring direct to adults what they could previously get only second hand through their children. And there is a wealth of material here for them to explore."

The department, he explained, offers correspondence courses which attract students from all over the world, business courses with or without a certificate, BA courses which take six or seven years to complete, and tutorial classes for individual courses in the humanities.

DR. DAVID WILLIAMS, University of Toronto's new head of extension, who sees in television, "an educational bulwark that could serve as a means to preserve the community of scholars."

THE VARSITY a special report on: QUEBEC

The cycle of power in the province of Quebec varies little in intent from those cycles seen in the turbulent Latin states of South America. A popular leader, bubbling with pledges of morality, rises on the crest of public indignation against the existing regime.

The main difference is that in the Province of Quebec, the political struggles of which have always been a source of interest in this country, operates within the context of the democratic framework.

Thus all its manoeuvres must bear at least a superficial resemblance to those in the neighboring provinces. Direct strong-arm methods cannot be used because of the danger of federal sanctions. But one must not think that a variety of strong-arms methods do not exist.

When Premier Maurice Duplessis rose to power in 1936 he probably had no idea he would be de-throned just three years later. The triumph of the Godbout government at the polls in 1939 showed that popular platform appeal alone was not sufficient to guarantee election.

From 1944 until the present the government of the Union Nationale has remained in power. The lesson of 1940 was well learned; Premier Maurice Duplessis has to be told only once.

Elections are of course bought wholesale. No one subjected to the various elements of the Ontario press with an axe to grind could have missed that.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier proclaimed that all elections are mass bribes — but even he would have been shocked by the blatant demands of support for the local party candidates on the guarantee that roads, factories, bridges, or schools would be the compensation.

And Laurier would probably dismiss as impossible the buying of votes by even more direct methods — painting barn roofs in anticipation of political support, the wholesale importation of washing machines, nylon stockings, tractors (but of course these are reserved for only those able to swing many rural conferees' votes), and many other assorted and necessary items of living.

Laurier was wrong. He did not live to see the immediately pre-war and post-war periods in provincial politics. He probably never met a Three Rivers lawyer called Maurice Duplessis who was soon to control the most potent electoral machine ever seen in this country.

Even Maurice Duplessis with his infinite talents could not hope to give everyone a washing machine, though there seems to be little doubt that he would if he could.

The Union Nationale must operate through all the people, and there must be some weakness besides greed by which political movements can survive.

And of course the Union Nationale found it. The weakness was ignorance, and since the Union Nationale rose again to power, wholesale exploitation of the electorate's relative lack of any education has been the order of the day.

Base cant springing from their unique position and the desire to maintain Quebec a Catholic country has been used. Inborn prejudices against English Canada were exploited at opportune moments — the black English Protestants of Ottawa, Ontario and St. James street were painted as a dire threat to every man, woman and dirty-faced child.

Ignorance is not infinite. To maintain respectable schools had to be built; to permit French Canadians to take over those positions monopolized by English-speaking Canadians, universities had to be added, universities which would teach the liberal arts, the pure and practical sciences, and then inevitably the social sciences.

And with the disappearance of mass ignorance there came enlightenment on a much larger scale than had ever been witnessed. It was time for a consideration, and such a consideration spells doom for a system based upon blind faith.

Parochial schooling, with its guided and stringent curriculum, had lost its absolute sway. Freethinking forces which might find themselves out of tune with the status quo might raise voices of protest.

In reaction to this frightening possibility the leaders of the Union Nationale fast lost their ideas about the treasured ideals of higher education. Iniquities of a system are soon brought to light by an educated electorate.

The provincial government in Quebec cannot afford to subsidize every prospective university student. University graduates cannot be bought by washing machines or swayed by unsophisticated sophistry.

So a question of political philosophy — how may a government maintain power within the superficial framework of democracy? — becomes entwined in the fortunes of an anomalous group known as the University Action League, and the fortunes of four student editors vaguely looking for a medium in which they freely raise the strident voice of protest.

Publish ... And Be Fired Four Student Editors Out

Three Canadian student editors have been fired from their posts and barred from their universities for publishing their opinions.

A fourth editor is "on trial"—if he does not toe the line he will also lose his job.

Jean David and Normand Lacharite—co-editors of the University of Ottawa's Lo Rotonde—were fired following a special issue last February in which they sharply criticised the university.

Last year's editor of the University of Montreal's Quartier Latin, Julien Aubert, was not formally expelled—he was told he would not be accepted by any faculty in his university.

The fourth, Jean Claude Lebel, editor of Laval's Le Carabin, is holding his job by the skin of his teeth.

Lo Rotonde's special issue, the 25th anniversary of the paper, contained attacks throughout on the "paternalism" of U of O.

Many aspects of the university were criticized in the issue, especially the Oblate Fathers who run the bi-lingual institution.

Justifying the attacks, Lacharite says:

"If the two students excluded from the University, (the David) criticized the 'paternalism' of the Oblate Fathers and underlined certain problems, it was to demand a more adult university, run in a spirit equal to its immense maternal expansion.

"That does not seem to have been recognized," he said.

Aubert's departure from university journalism was not as direct. There were reports he might take legal action against the University of Montreal for their decisions, but Aubert himself has made no move in this direction.

A stern and consistent critic of Quebec Premier Duplessis, Aubert made no secret of his dislike for the government influence on the university.

Examination results revealed Aubert had missed one subject, which would have normally prevented him from resuming editorship of Quartier Latin.

However, several members of the U of M Student Association speculated that special measures might be taken to allow him to take his post again.

Word from university officials rules this out. Further word to Aubert ruled him out of the university.

His letter of resignation appeared in Quartier Latin this fall giving "personal reasons" as the cause of his "retirement".

Aubert is reported to have privately told friends he was "obliged" to give up his post on the paper in this manner.

Lebel, still continuing as editor of Le Carabin, faces an uncertain future.

Officially he has no restrictions on his editorial policy, but university officials have warned him he must not step out of line.

"I would be expelled if they don't like the job I'm doing," Lebel explained.

Lebel's editorial policy last year was also severely critical of the Duplessis government. He also criticized several university staff members for their stand on the boycott of classes in five Quebec universities last March.

Until now the university papers in Quebec have been the only papers with the exception of Montreal's Le Devoir which opposed the Duplessis regime.

Other papers, both Conservative and Liberal by tradition, have either given full support or abstained from comment on matters of provincial politics.

Supported by the universities and not by commercial advertising or large printing contracts, the university papers have usually been able to say what they liked in the field of provincial politics.

Les Trois qui ont essayé de faire une révolution.

sickness unto death

A single sudden defeat will bring a man deep humiliation. Such a grief will perhaps prompt deep soul searching and a long process of humiliation, but it will not maim.

Of a different order is a series of seemingly insignificant irritations and encroachments. Men continually harassed will lose their sense and balance as an all-pervading guilt shadows their every action.

They take their lot bit by bit and do not fight against minor humiliations. And soon they find they have no soul; their ideals and integrity have been killed.

The latter case is the order of the day as far as the public actions of six Quebec men and their colleagues are concerned.

For years they have stood by and watched an authoritarian government steadily encroach upon their rights of academic freedom and self determination. They have not fought en masse or as individuals. The few who have raised querulous voices did so alone—and they are no longer around.

The six men are the rectors and presidents of Quebec's universities, men who have permitted the callous force of financial control by the provincial government to warp their universities.

Duplessis has seen fit to give McGill University about $900,000. The University of Toronto receives in the neighborhood of $11 million from the Frost government and is allowed to take grants from federal sources—which this year will amount to more than McGill's total income from Duplessis.

No university would dare argue with a man who might cut off such a tenuous life-line with one word. So there is not much opposition ever raised from the once-proud "old McGill."

McGill's situation is no different from that of the other universities—perhaps a little better.

This is why it is not surprising that the editor of the University of Montreal's Quartier Latin has been denied reentrance to the university. Such a stern critic of Duplessis is a detriment to the already uneasy relations between university and government.

When the university denied Julien Aubert the right to return to an education it also denied one of the bases of its existence as a university—the duty to seek out and declare the truth.

This insidious influence has spread to colleagues at the University of Ottawa. This institution, the principal bi-lingual centre of learning in the country, is run by reactionaries too solidified in their own complacency to examine their system, to consider improvements which might require a change.

Those who would cry out against inane dogma must be silenced. Those who would wish only to exist for truth must be humiliated.

McGill President Cyril James was so bold as to call a student strike a "mature" gesture; the University of Montreal's rector, Msgr. Irene Lussier, called it "useless and dangerous." Lack of declared opposition here must be interpreted as an attitude of approval.

But they would not say so, not in public. Word drifted down from the upper regions of both universities that the strike was adjudged a good thing. But not in public, mind you. A word of commendation to a colleague in a darkened ivy tower, no more.

So it is resolved into the classic struggle for power. The struggle against the old established authority, the government, is led from the universities, but not by the universities and their administrators.

It comes from students. From young editors who rebel, from elected representatives who state their case in public.

The ones are smothered, the others are circumvented by a group calling themselves the University Action League.

The honored tradition of education is now passé. Embarrassed existence is the ideal.

Quebec universities have sold their souls.

JG

And The Great Man

By John Gray

The Great Man wouldn't have liked it. In fact he wouldn't have liked it one cenny weensy bit — for a parish priest to step out of line like that.

It seems the parish priest wrote to the Three, congratulating them for the fine work they were doing, enclosing $10 to help with some of their expenses.

The Three thanked him for his kind words and contribution. Would he allow them to use his parish hall for a meeting? they asked. They would like to tell the people about the Great Man and what they thought of him.

No, replied the priest. Renting the parish hall like that would be "pas sage" — "not wise" — for a hospital was being built there. If he allowed such a meet, work would be stopped. Everyone was compromised by politics in the area, he said.

But the Great Man never found out about the little priest, and he will never have any chance of finding out.

But who was the priest? Who are the Three? Who is this awesome Great Man?

The identity of the priest will have to be discreetly avoided — politics you know.

The Three? Well, they are a group of three students from the University of Montreal. They wanted to see the Great Man. And of course, the Great Man was too Great to see them.

They camped outside his office for eight weeks, trying to tell him why he should help the university students, trying to find out why he had not bothered to spare some of his precious time for them.

At first the Great Man had paid no attention to their requests. He had other things to do than bother with a bunch of foolish kids. All they wanted was money and free education, he told himself.

The Great Man had run up against lots of problems in his time. None of them mattered much to him. The people who complained of injustice were obviously too naive for their own good.

So the Great Man occasionally picked his teeth, smoked his cigars, and tended to his own illicit business, and his mistress in the Chateau Frontenac.

Colorful fellow, is the Great Man. He's had quite a fascinating life. Not nice, but colorful, and so very clever!

The Three had lots of meetings last summer. They told the little people lots of things. And the Great Man was displeased.

The little people vote for the Great Man's men. The latter come around with washing machines for the little lady of the house and tell her nasty things about the Liberals and the nasty people in Ottawa.

There are lots of places where nice little bridges were built across troublesome rivers after the Great Man's men were elected.

And of course there are some places where the Great Man's men were not as lucky. In those nasty places there were no new bridges, no new factories. And the paved roads leading in from the other counties become dirt roads.

And occasionally the Three stopped at local restaurants for a beer. They were told the proprietors had had to pay several thousand dollars for their licences.

Not pay directly mind you — but make the application and then pay someone special to consider the application. Nobody ever pays the Great Man directly.

But the Great Man's men don't do too badly. And there are nice fine new roads seemingly leading to nowhere. And then, miraculously, the fishing lodge of a friend or Cabinet Minister is discovered at the end of a road at a private lake.

And when they were travelling the Three found broken men. Men who had said nasty things about the Great Man. Their businesses were closed down for strange reasons — some nasty people have reported it was the Great Man himself who gave the orders.

But of course the Three could never find anything solid, upon which they could operate legally.

This makes it hard for any of the Great Man's opponents. The opposition papers find themselves involved in libel suits when they try to get at the Great Man.

But then again, there's only one opposition paper. The Great Man is pretty strong, you see. There are lots of papers which used to be great — The Star and The Gazette — but they "don't bother" to comment on provincial matters now.

Losing printing contracts and "valuable friends" is not worth printing nasty stories about the Great Man. Isn't he a friend himself, after all?

There are occasionally outbursts by the younger members of the society — in the university papers, for example.

And this upsets the university rectors and principals because the Great Man is a friend (i.e.: a valuable ally) who gives money.

So the university editors are told they cannot return to any faculty in the university.

This of course is not to say the university press was muffled. Nothing of the kind. It's just that the editors have suddenly lost their qualifications for an education.

They aren't expelled, they're just as good as any other student. Just told they can't enter any of the university faculties — but not expelled, mind you.

As the Three were going around the province, there were a few professors with them, but this intimate association is not likely to last long.

The Great Man has an answer for "imprudent" professors like that — they are broken. It is dangerous for the universities to have reactionary, justice-believing professors like that.

Take the case of Father Levesque, who was head of the Social Science faculty at Laval. It was a shame that the Great Man and Father Levesque had to quarrel. But it was inevitable.

You see, Father Levesque believed in honesty and truth, and this is what he taught his students.

So a rule was passed limiting the dean of any faculty to a maximum number of terms as head of the faculty. The number by chance made the good Father ineligible to remain as dean.

All very strange, but the funny part of it is that the Great Man is very clever. He has always been a good public relations man — that's why students were given the promise of a loan fund this year.

He realized some of the people might vote against him if he continued to be nasty to those students elected by their representatives to seek university aid.

Just how it happened is not clear, but a group "sprang up" when it was evident the elected representatives of the students were getting nowhere.

There have been a number of suggested answers as to how it happened:

1. The Great Man sent word down from his great office to some of the lesser greats in his

Guide To Iniquity

Gay mad Montreal ain't what is used to be.

It's still far gayer and madder than Toronto, but it ain't what it used to be.

A couple of flag waving morality thumpers have taken a bit of the sting out of the old town—but it's still got lots more st'ing than the pride and symbol of rural Ontario. (i.e.: Toronto).

It all started last New Year's day, when Cardinal Paul Emile Leger told Montrealers they must forget their reputations as inhabitants of the most sinful and exciting city on the continent.

For months the girls appeared on stage with feathers up to their neck and less wiggle than a tortoise on a hot day.

They appeared discreetly, disappeared equally discreetly, and reappeared with one feather removed—until they got down to their shoulders. Then the shadow of the fiery Cardinal fell across the stage and the show was ended for the night.

But in Montreal they do have just feathers, which is slightly better than what we know here.

All the little ladies of slightly sinful intent meandering across the various and varied stages of Montreal are loosening up in their endeavors—so, it ain't what it used to be, but it's not really half bad.

Montreal's fraternity houses are no different than those in Toronto — so if you're heading down for the McGill weekend, take advantage of what is slightly new.

There are girls who dance, girls who sing; and if you can't get into our KCR, tell the Montreal doormen you're 25 and we'll believe you.

Assuming you can still see by the time you arrive, here's a few choice spots in which you can spend a few hours—and a few dollars:

(In all cases take taxis; they're cheap, and the chances are you may not be able to walk.)

The Panorama Room is a good spot to start from. It's on the top floor of the new handy dandy Queen Elizabeth hotel which has caused lots of talk in the town. It'll give you a good view of the town.

But if you venture to the Panorama Room for a drink and some sophisticated clenching on the dance floor, be sure to watch the elevator on the way down. It's very fast.

The last befuddled occupant who descended without a care in the world thought he was on Cloud Nine. He was afterwards discovered gaily singing the Marseillaise along Dorchester, hugging each and every lamppost under the impression that the Queen Elizabeth had the most attractive elevator girls of any hotel on the continent.

Still on the somewhat sophisticated level, you can go to any of the hotel bar and pretend you've just closed a giant deal on St. James Street.

Their so nice and stuffy... everyone in Montreal does this minor impersonation bit sooner or later, so don't be annoyed if the waiters regard you with that "you nasty commercial beast" look.

Dunn's on St. Catherine's provides smoked meat and noise, dancing girls or some kind of show and some more noise; and a separate little bar where you can partake of jive talk, "I'm-a-real-beat-generation-type" talk, or you don't have to talk. Even the hoods look like ad men.

Somewhere in the descriptions above the time slipped from early morning to first-drink-of-the-morning establishments

(The subject of blind pigs has been studiously avoided.) The last word from Montreal is that the gendarmes are being nasty about illicit drinking spots.

Lots of them sprang up last winter after the good Cardinal let off his steam and closed every decent place at the ridiculously early hour of two.

(The cops' theory is that they raid blind pigs until they find one that has cold beer on store. They stop there for the night after shipping the frate proprietors off in a paddy wagon.)

(So forget about the blind pigs.)

La Cave isn't too far and provides dancing for the eager spectators. Probably the most enjoyed spot in town by the regular clientele. Great effort at a Parisian atmosphere which doesn't fall entirely flat.

The Esquire Showbar is a combination of an instrumental Presley appearance and the local gymnasium. Hot, sweaty, smokey, very noisy, and rockin'.

Anything in that area is about the same.

After this you can head discreetly to Ben's for smoked meat. Everyone meets everyone in Ben's in the early morning.

The smoked meat is fair to middling, and if you want to do the right thing, stay away from the St. Lawrence Blvd. greasy spoons (where the smoked meat is good) and go to Ben's.

Fungoid...

For the sake of what people might say, both in Montreal and at home, stay away from the French Casino. It used to be great, but the owners have chased away the girl who used to appear with a bear-skin rug and nothing else. The rug used to be flat on the stage.

The Cardinal certainly wouldn't appreciate your passing to the other side of St. Lawrence and St. Catherine's. Your mothers wouldn't be too charmed either.

If you have time, drop in to see the game at Molson. St. Paul's.

It ain't what it used to be, but it's not too bad.

The Travellers, well-known group of Canadian folk singers, will appear with Pete Seeger and Sonny Terry at Massey Hall next Wednesday night.

A Night With Seeger

Pete Seeger, internationally famous folk-singer, will appear next Wednesday at Massey Hall. With him will be Sonny Terry (the harmonica-player in "Finian's Rainbow"), and the Travellers.

Seeger first became interested in folk music when he visited the Asheville, N.C. square dance festival in 1935, noting the communal "pleasures" which resulted from folk singing. Following this, he spent some time in the Library of Congress, studying American folk songs with Alan Lomax.

After the war, Seeger joined up with first the Almanacs, then the Weavers, with whom he remained until 1952.

At present, Pete Seeger and his wife are engaged in a two-year study project concerned with instrumental techniques in folk music. "Very often," he says, "you'll hear an old song played on an instrument for which it was never intended. And again, there's the matter of phrasing and shading. Those slurs of the guitar which punctuate a stop or a transitional point in a song are made by stretching the strings with the fingers in just a certain way—but it's a neglected technique."

To revive folk music to be played exactly as it was meant to be will carry along the genuine feeling of the song, and help the audience share it more fully.

Karolik Collection

With pomp, circumstance and a speech from the American Ambassador to Canada, the Art Gallery of Toronto will open its fall season tonight when the Karolik collection goes on view to guests and gallery members.

This collection of mid-nineteenth century American painting is remarkable. It should delight and amuse the general public, provide history of art students with an unprecedented chance to see paintings they've only read about, and perhaps arouse some interest in an under-appreciated period of American art.

Or, as one critic moaned at the press luncheon yesterday, maybe even incite some collector to do for Canadian painting of the nineteenth century what the Karoliks of Boston have done for American.

There are 136 paintings, originally collected by Maxim and Martha Karolik, now owned by the Boston Museum of Fine Arts, together with 14 paintings from the private collection of Maxim Karolik. Among the artists are Allston, Bierstadt, Bingham, Birch, Cole, Durand, Church, Rensett, Rubens Peale, Quidor, Sully, Mount, and Whittredge. The collection will tour the States, but this is the only Canadian appearance.

A quick glance around the four galleries and these pictures caught my eye; Thomas Cole's Expulsion From the Garden of Eden, Allston's Landscape With a Lake, Fitz Hugh Lane's seascapes, and John Quidor's Rip Van Winckle at Nicholas Veddar's Tavern. The exhibition deserves a much more careful going over.

When we look back, this period of American painting from the War of 1812 to the Civil War is sometimes overshadowed by the later nineteenth century trio, Homer, Eakins and Ryder. But in its own time this art was immensely popular; those were happy days when the artist was an accredited member of society. The American public bought their pictures in America, not in Europe as they did later. And the well-paid artist in turn contributed faithful representations of the life of the times. The dreadful struggle of the American artists to assimilate the vast developments of nineteenth century painting in Europe did not begin in earnest until after the period covered by this collection. To see the exhibition is to ac-

Cock o' th' North

"I am very, pleased Cock-a-doodle-Andy is having its premiere in Toronto. I hope it will make everybody laugh, everybody laugh, even if they don't understand the message. A good laugh is a d-n good thing for the heart and soul."

These were Sean O'Casey's own words on his beautiful tragic-comedy which opened at the Playhouse on Wednesday night. And his wish was fulfilled. Everybody did have a d-n good laugh, and perhaps more than one of them managed to get the message: that man must do his utmost to live a full life, even though he come in conflict with social conventions and the church.

In this case, the rebellion is led by the women, those creatures of the devil whose sole purpose in life seems to be tempting the saints. Loreleen, the daughter, whose scarlet dress bespeaks her lusty life of being sweet in the grass and reading "Ulysses"; Lorna, her young foster-mother, who wants to have a fling despite her puritanical old husband's wishes; and Marion, their helper, who follows them both to a place where "life is lived more fully than here."

Set against them are those who are slaves to money, or to dogma, or to convention.

First, there are Michael Marthraim and Sailor Mahan, who bear a striking resemblance to Captain Boyle and Joxer Dayley in "Juno And The Paycock"; Father Domineer, the priest, whose very name is suggestive; and his counterpart, Shanaar, a sort of Irish conjure man, whose Latin exorcisms both parallel and parody Domineer's Holier-Than-Thou epithets.

And of course, there is the Cock himself, symbol of man's freedom, perpetually at war with rigid, puritanical dogma and capitalism. His spell-weaving provides most of the humor of the play, completely confounding these pitiful creatures, whose only destiny is to die and die quickly, to make room for the new order.

The all-New York cast gave the play a slick, polished production, one which puts our own Canadian performances to shame. Will Geer and Ian Martin played the two old men with sleazy gusto. Paul Shyre was a very wise old crwthumper indeed, while Pat Malone presented an extremely powerful, if overly American, Domineer.

Gaby Rodgers, Rae Allen, and Anna Meara each gave exciting performances, particularly Miss Rodgers in the final act. Carroll Conroy gave a very moving portrayal of Julia, the paralytic, whose life is devoid of friends and hope.

Effective use was made of Lester Polakov's striking set, and the lighting, despite one or two blowouts, was brilliantly used. Perhaps the major disappointment of the show was the audience, which on Thursday night numbered less than a hundred—a serious condemnation of the Toronto theatre public.

Tiger, Tiger....

Harry Black and the Tiger (Odeon Carlton) is a tautly directed, crisply edited, colourfully photographed, but poorly scripted film that spends too much time on the lady and not enough on the tiger.

Director Hugo Fregonese herein shows himself to be a consummate master of suspense, irony, realistic detail and the skillful use of sound to create interest.

He opens his film with a gripping sequence very reminiscent of The Bridge On The River Kwai: a man-eating tiger stalks quietly in the short grasses of the Himalayan foothills. Above him the monkeys chatter nervously. The camera pans quietly to an Indian village now alive with the teeming frenzy of warning drums and horns. Silence returns. A woman hurries with her child up the village street. There is a chilling scream and the tiger flees with his kill back into the jungle.

Later during the hunt, Fregonese evokes sympathy not only for the hunter, but also for the tiger as the two nurse their wounds. His alternate cuts from the recuperating Sahib to the bleeding beast are a triumph in direction. He handles the entire hunt like a vast chess game which pits man against animal on the colourful board of the jungle. The combatants meet, separate, only to meet again until finally in a sequence of agonizing suspense the striped killer becomes a rug.

The director's principle asset is photographer John Wilcox whose lens vividly captures the realistic detail and colourful nuances of the hunt. His chief liability, however, is screenwriter Sydney Boehm whose script is a subtle, but often confused intermingling of two separate story lines: one, the tiger hunt itself; the other, a romantic triangle recounted by the use of long flashbacks which destroy the dramatic continuity of the central plot.

As Harry Black, Stewart Granger is a competent grey-templed, war-wounded Sahib. Christain, the woman between, is sensitively, but at times too demurely portrayed by Barbara Rush. Anthony Steele is suitably flat as the cowardly husband and wartime friend.

For interest, suspense, and colourful entertainment, this one is a sure bet. It is only to be regretted that screenwriter Boehm did not take a cue from Imperial Roman history and have the tiger get the Christian. Ted Schafer

New Revue

There's a saying in Montreal these days, to the effect that anything which Brian MacDonald touches turns to gold. Well, the director and choreographer of MY FUR LADY has teamed up with Roy Wolvin, the writing genius of McGill's famous Red And White Show, and have turned out what is probably the best intimate revue to be found anywhere in Canada.

Called simply: EP-TEMPO '59, and starring Joan Stuart, the sexy belly-dancer in MY FUR LADY, Sylvia Gillespie, a one-time regular with the Crest Theatre, Pat Holloway, Doug Chamberlain, and Frank Blanch, the show ranges from light comedy (Maurice Duplessis and all) through a monstrous parody of King Oedipus (including a disturbing new pronunciation of the name Laos), to a description of Montreal night life, appropriately called "Sur La Montagne Sammedi Soir".

After a celebrated quart of Montreal beer, Miss Stuart looks even more like Kim Novak, but can also act and sing. Her torch song: "Mother Ever Dear", is sufficient to convince anyone he's not in Toronto. Even if the show were not so catchy, the magnificent pace the Montreal company has lavished on it would still carry it across.

The show is housed on the second floor of the Cafe Andre (affectionately called "The Shrine", 2077 Victoria Street in Montreal, just around the corner from the McGill Union).

So, during the big weekend, when you wonder where all your Montreal friends have disappeared to on Saturday night, drop into the Shrine: our guess is, they'll all be there too.

Focus on TV!

LIVE AND LEARN, a CBC-TV public affairs program, will present "Focus on Physics", a series of twelve weekly half-hour broadcasts dealing with such topics as radiation, magnetism, electricity, and nuclear energy. The first instalment may be seen on Monday Oct. 6 at 6:15 p.m. following Metro News.

A television counterpart of radio's "University Of The Air", LIVE AND LEARN's science series will be presided over by Professors Patterson Hume and Donald Ivey, both of the University of Toronto.

"It is our aim," says Ivey, "to present an elementary view of modern physics, as well as a modern view of elementary physics. These programs are not specifically intended for physics students, although we hope there will be something for them, too."

Each show is designed for a relatively small section of the public which has little background in science, but is willing to learn more. "We can't discuss the principles of the hula hoop, for instance," says Ivey, "that would require a very extensive knowledge of physics. Besides, neither Dr. Hume nor I could ever demonstrate!"

Sir Kenneth Clark, chairman of Arts Council of Great Britain, will open the Canada Council lectures series.

His topic here will be Turner and the Truth of the Imagination. On October 9, in the Museum Theatre at 8:15 p.m., Sir Kenneth Clark, who has been director of the national Gallery in London and professor of fine art at Oxford, is known as a distinguished art critic, and author of such books as Landscape into Art and The Nude.

Angry Young Man

"Look Back in Anger" can hardly be blamed for creating the myth of the Angry Young Man. Wherever the myth came from, the play, now ending a week's run at the Royal Alex neatly lays it in its grave and gets briskly on with the business of being a simple, funny and forceful piece of theatre.

Jimmy Porter thinks and speaks in the clichés of the Angry Young Man. "There are no battles left to fight", he says. "Our fathers fought them all for us in the thirties and forties." But any attempt to build these statements up into a "message" of the play only buries its core in a thick layer of misunderstanding. Osborne is no Angry Young Man. He writes of Jimmy sometimes with ridicule, sometimes with compassion, but never with the idealization that would turn him into a spokesman for his generation. Jimmy is an immature failure, and the statements that readers of Osborne have built up into a poignantly fatalistic credo are the same kind of rationalization and excuses for personal immaturity that the immature of all generations fall back on. Jimmy is an AYM not because of historical forces but because of personal inadequacy. The AYM becomes an individual psychological phenomenon rather than an all-embracing sociological one. To carry the AYM badge becomes, on the testimony of his play at least, an acknowledgement of one's own immaturity in a generation as mature as any ever was.

If this is understood, the play is allowed to do its work unhindered. It is a simple, pointed story of how experience makes some and breaks some, how it creates or destroys the capacity to meet and fill needs in others. Jimmy's immaturity is just this failure to fill anyone else's needs. But his failure is not an absolute that can be taken as a comment on the state of things in general, for matched against it is his wife's eventual success. Because Jimmy is weak his experience of suffering has permanently retarded him. Because she is strong, his wife, when she finally experiences suffering matching his, can rise above it to answer his needs. The play falls neatly into two parts; Jimmy failing to meet his wife's need; she succeeding in meeting his. At the bottom of it all is her strength and his weakness out of which experience creates in turn maturity and immaturity.

Suffering aside "Look Back in Anger" is a very funny play, ranging from sardonic quips to a song and dance music hall routine, and the cast gets it all at a breakneck pace. As Jimmy, Kenneth Haigh completely dominates the production. He maintains a fine balance between the bombastic rebel, full of biting epigrams, and the pathetic child, between the likeable and the insufferable. None of for either Mr. Baxter or one of his co-sponsors.

The judges for these awards are this year, Cleeve Horne, Fred Finley and Martin Baldwin, director of the gallery.

The society has received the J. W. L. Forster Award of $100 annually for some years.

OSA Gets Subsidies

The annual exhibition of the Ontario Society of Artists, 87 years old and hoary with prestige, will this year become Canada's most popular exhibition, as far as the artists are concerned. Some $5,100 is now available annually for purchase of paintings exhibited with the OSA.

The Art Gallery of Toronto announced yesterday the creation of a joint Canada Council-Art Gallery of Toronto purchase award for Canadian paintings. The money will buy one or more paintings from the OSA show for the gallery. The choice rests with the Gallery's Purchase Committee.

The OSA have also been presented with $3,000 a year from the Baxter Foundation, recently set up by W. H. Baxter of the Baxter Publishing Co. The money will be awarded to three artists, and the pictures purchased

Jazz In Chelsea

Those who prefer their jazz packaged in burlap will be pleased to learn of the opening, last Friday, of the Chelsea Jazz Club which is located in the basement of 1110 Yonge St. Open on Friday and Saturday nights, it attempts to cater to both poet and peasant by providing music to which one either dances or listens (or both). The decor consists of a concoction of bamboo, straw-matting and burlap assisted by the floor which erupts at carefully calculated intervals. Warmth of atmosphere and a certain individuality has also been established through subdued lighting and a series of greatly enlarged photos of famous jazz musicians. Unfortunately the problem of noise seems to have conditioned the rather subdued music of the opening night—that is until 1:30, after which some genuinely exciting sounds emerged. At the moment tentative plans are being made to also utilize the room for degenerate and off-beat drama productions. By the way, memberships are still available—especially for the college student to whom the management wishes to cater.

P.S. No alcoholic beverages.

P.P.S. Don't forget the big doings at Massey Hall this Friday—a truly great show in the traditional Stan Kenton style.

the other performances was quite as virtuoso, but Haigh, Diana Hyland, and Al Muscari, who have the stage to themselves for most of the play were a beautifully integrated trio.

The set was unobtrusive and very helpful in creating the atmosphere, but then with contemporary playwrighting what it is, the set designer must by now be able to suggest seedy frustration with his eyes, shut.

A 33 - 6 ArMcGilledon - Benny

It is only when I receive my copy of The Varsity by parsley post which is unlike me inasmuch as it is more often upright than wrong though I am not even that if quite, that I realize it is time.

Because I am not realizing this factlet earlier I botch up my old buddy Sunny John Brooks who informs my adoring public that I am reappearing on the scene last Friday and when I do not make my scheduled apparition little Brooks is being so flooded with complaints that he is swept away on the current of protest while a torrent of pointless babbles streams from his frothy old mouth so that he is appearing to be a fine froth of a boy which he is something else than in fact.

But it is not the business of old

Benny to worry about whether he puts Sunny John into dire straits or even if he wears a jacket at all. Mine is a higher calling. In fact I am probably the only male in the field, where all others are girls.

After I spend the summer peddling all the old Vicuna coats which The Varsity slips me while I am not looking so that now I am being back with a plentiful supply of shekels and a little Confederate for the real fishes on my campus. I am also well rested and thus my brain is quite sharp which may be partially the result of keeping my head to the grindstone which is after all much more effective than merely a nose, and who?

It is nice to see that my own

dear sweet Blues do not fail me and live up to my prediction that they will foal up the Horsies from Western U even though they do not have any advance knowledge of what they must do and so have to beat the Purples without even so much as a single rehearsal though they do appear in costume. I am so pleased at my Bluesers turning out to be such inspired troupers that this week I write a whole new Obscenario for them which they are following to the letter though they may be charged with misuse of the Queen's mails which is sometimes being looked upon as an offence involving moral turpitude but is still better than sitting on offence.

This game is beginning with a bad omen as the McGills who are this week's offering on the altar of Dalt White's ambition kick off and find that it's not a pigskin which they have kicked but a bucket full of red men who are being somewhat more than embarrassed. But this is the way things are going all afternoon and well into the night as I am counting my loot for which purpose I am spending the off-season growing extra toes which I believe to be roses but which do not smell the same by another name which is my usual method. The final reckoning after this wretched Ar-McGilledon is 33 for our little Blues and a piddling little 6 for the McGills which is only right insomuch as they fill only half a box-car on their way to the Shopsy plant.

Olympic team member, have started daily practices in the Hart House pool.

Varsity, who last season possessed one of the best all-round swimming teams in Canadian history, are defending champions of the Intercollegiate League.

Yorzyk and former coach Cresy McCatty have both expressed opinion that the 1958 edition will be even stronger.

LEAGUE III — PHE I, P.O.T., VIC II, St. Mike's B.

SOFTBALL INFORMATION

In Leagues 1 & 2 a home and home game series is scheduled with each team playing 4 games. In League 3, where there are four teams, the teams will meet each other once, and then engage in a single game league semi-final with the first and third place teams playing against each other and 2nd and 4th place teams meeting. The two successful teams will then play to decide the League 3 winner.

Because of the number of competing teams, games have been scheduled at the available fields on all days. This full schedule along with the shortness of the season, and the uncertainty of the weather make it imperative that all games be played according to schedule. Only those games which may be rained out will be rescheduled for the last week of October before the semi-finals and finals begin.

The game schedule for the following week will be in each Friday's Varsity. It is the responsibility of the Manager to see that all members of her team know when and where to play.

GENE CHOROSTECKI DALT WHITE CURT RUSSELL

"Stick" may Miss la bataille royale

McGill Redmen are expected to fill the Molson Stadium atmosphere with footballs in tomorrow afternoon's clash with Varsity Blues.

With an arm called Dick Carr and a pair of hands named Joe Poirier, it seems reasonable to suspect a passing attack from the questionable Redmen.

But Varsity coach Dalt White figures he has an answer. As a matter of fact, the coach pointed out last night, his Blues pass defence against Western last week was not as atrocious as some critics have made out.

"Sure, they completed passes, but I don't think our defence was that bad," said Dalt. "That long one behind Joynt was just a misjudgement of the ball on Larry's part, and one of those that (Lorne) Forstner got at the end was a pretty fair catch."

"And I think the interception (by Joynt in the last minute) proved our defence was pretty good. Larry was with him (Dal-Bianco) all the way," he concluded.

Despite the coach's satisfaction with his pass defenders, Blues placed a good deal of emphasis on it during practises this week.

And the way the aerial defence was working in yesterday's final practice before the McGill game, it appears Carr, Poirier and Co. may have some trouble with their guided missiles.

Unless Redmen sneak in an import tomorrow morning, the most threatening pass receiver will be Monsieur Poirier. Johnny Bennett, who held down the other end spot for McGill last year, has graduated.

Varsity assistant coach Johnny McManus, who scouted the Queen's-McGill tilt last Saturday, suggested that Blues' principal worry lies in Poirier.

"They've got other ends, sure, but no one to equal Poirier or Bennett," he opined.

Luckily for Carr and his McGillmen, a key person in Varsity's pass defence may not see action tomorrow. Veteran Gene Chorostecki is on the limp with a bad heel, and hasn't been at practice all week.

"Stick" suffered painful heel burns when attempting to patch some cuts after the Western game. Queried last night on the state of his bad heel, Gene replied:

"It was a pretty grim day." Chorostecki won't know until Saturday whether or not he will play, but Coach White said he will probably dress him anyway.

If the all-star defensive cog is missing, Walt Sopinka will take over, joining rookie Doug Baird at the defensive end positions.

Other defenders on the wing-line will be Mike Chykaliuk and Julian Porter at tackle, with Trevor Eytan at centre guard.

Steve Chisholm, Curt Russell, Glenn Harding and Paul Burroughs fill in the linebacker slots, with Bob Dann, Ian Knowles and Larry Joynt in the backfield.

Baby Blues Test Rams In Intermediate Opener

By DAVE GRINER

The Varsity Baby Blues open defense of the Shaw Trophy against the Ryerson Rams, in Varsity Stadium at 2 p.m. today.

The Intermediates are coached this year by John Sopinka, a former Toronto Argonaut and Montreal Alouette.

With only three holdovers from last year Sopinka faces a complete rebuilding job, and is not likely to get much co-operation from Ryerson in going easy on his new players.

According to Sopinka, Ryerson will probably be the team to beat if the Baby Blues hope to retain their title this year.

Back from last year's championship team are Barry Matheson, Tom Watt, and Doug Loughheed. All are expected to play a major part in the success of this year's team.

Matheson is a hard-running full-back and corner linebacker whose running really bowls the opposition tacklers over. Watt is a two-way guard, while Loughheed goes both ways at the end spot.

Matheson and Watt were elected co-captains of this year's team by popular vote.

Sopinka's job has been made easier by a flock of talented newcomers from high school ranks. Foremost among these are two boys from UTS — Dick Farr and Bill Kay, and a fast, strong tackle named Brian Bradstock.

Kay and Bradstock, both over six feet and almost 200 pounds, have shown themselves to be both fast and rugged in practice — an ideal combination at the tackle spot.

Farr is a triple-threat man. He can catch, run and pass. He is expected to fill the gap left by the injury to Johnny McMurty.

Everett Rush will be down from the Big Blues to quarterback the team in the opener. Understudying him will be Mike Innes, an Upper Canada College grad.

The rest of the league is somewhat of a mystery. Western always fields a strong team, but Queen's is not expected to be too potent.

Ryerson are always tough to beat, weak or strong. They play a rugged brand of football, the type of ball that their coach Teddy Toogood used to play for the Toronto Argonauts (way back when!!).

Death frightens me.

Yes, despite the male's supercilious opinion that he is afraid of nothing, death frightens me.

It has pervaded my brief newspaper career with sullen regularity, and it's not pleasant.

I have watched the broken face of a young mother as her infant son lay dead in her arms, victim of a runaway truck.

I have assisted in wrenching twisted steel from a shattered car to reach the dying people inside.

I have driven an ambulance at 90 miles an hour to hospital while a little girl on the stretcher cried: "I want my mommy," became silent, and died.

And I have heard the doctor tap on the glass panel of the ambulance, and turned to see the beads of perspiration drop from a tired face as he slowly shook his head.

Sobering thoughts, aren't they?

And particularly so on this the eve of the annual football weekend in Montreal, when horseplay occasionally throws caution to the winds.

Because each of those grim incidents mentioned above was the direct result of a split-second of foolishness that ripped the happiness from dozens of lives.

University students are happy, carefree people. They enjoy a good time, and a football weekend is the ideal opportunity for excitement and fun.

But there are moments when fun can become fatal and excitement expensive. I have lived through some of those moments in the past three years, and I don't want another.

Not on this football weekend in Montreal, anyway. Last year, I counted three incidents that could have caused serious injury or death to several people.

I will not go into details, because I know two of the people involved, and I know they are wholly repentant for their momentary folly.

And there were other incidents, the year before last, and the year before that. I'd need more than ten fingers to count them.

This afternoon at 5.15, several hundred Varsity students will board a special train at Union Station, travel to Montreal, watch a football game, have a ball, and return Sunday night.

I will be among them, both going and, I hope, coming. But if I see an individual circumventing the rules of common sense, and jeopardizing the safety of his companions, I will once again be racing to hospital in that ambulance.

I will once again be tearing frantically at the smashed automobile, and once again standing helplessly as the young mother stared unbelievably at her dead baby.

We can go down to Montreal today, and we can probably get away with the accessories common to football weekends. And if we behave ourselves, John Law will understandingly turn the other cheek.

But before we go, let's think for a moment of the little girl, the smashed car, and the baby boy.

And let's follow the rules of common sense that can make it a truly enjoyable weekend.

FROM THE BLUE ROOM

The football Blues have been having difficulty with a pesky, little ex-Western Mustang . . . Dave Langhorne, a 1957 UWO grad now at OCE, has been appearing at practises . . . Coach Dalt White even had to usher him off the field one evening . . . However, as assistant coach Jack Kennedy puts it: "He can't learn anything Metras wouldn't discover in the movies!" . . .

Last weekend, only 3,000 students sat in on the Queen's-McGill game in Montreal, although McGill's 7,000-plus students can get in free . . . Officials expect 600 to make the trip from Hog Town . . . For those non-party types, the all-star hockey game will be on TV from Montreal Saturday night . . .

John Sopinka's Baby Blues get their first taste of play this afternoon at 2 . . . Ryerson Rams are the Varsity Stadium visitors . . .

Ex-Argo John rates his club an unknown quantity, and says of their chances: "We'll soon know." . . . He kept his club out for a hefty, 150-minute workout last night . . . Good luck to co-captains Tom Watt and Barry Matheson and their fellow Rinkies . . .

Had a visit the other night from an old buddy called Butch Powell, former sports editor of the Western Gazette . . . Now a budding barman down at Osgoode, Butch spent the summer chasing around darkest Africa . . . almost became a Canadian war correspondent in Lebanon, too . . .

And how about Jim (Toronto Star) Proudfoot's comment on a little gent so familiar to us all: "Queen's university has retired Ron Stewart's sweater, number 75, Ottawa Roughriders has apparently retired him, too."

Gals, The Crystal Ball Shows...

By SHARON MILGRAM

(PHE) with a high score on the "hidden hole"

Although the golf tournament has now been completed, don't despair! Don't give up hope! There are still a great — and I do mean great — number of sports of which the femme fatales of our campus can partake.

Gazing into my crystal ball, which is stored next to my softball, basketball and tennis ball, I see Cupid diving into a pool trying to catch a softball.

Checking into my sports data, I interpret this vision as follows: Cupid represents the Archery Club which will, in the very near future, choose an Intercollegiate team. Spots on the team are still available, so if you are interested, practises are being held daily at Varsity Arena at 8 a.m. and 1 p.m.

The pool into which Cupid is diving is the one which is rapidly filling up with swim teams from the various faculties which are entering the swim meet scheduled for October 22.

A softball, the last object in my vision, is quite clear. It simply means the women's softball league will begin at the start of next week.

Golf winners reported, vision interpreted, and immediate sports mentioned — seems to be all for today.

SMC Holds First Party, Woman Theolog Speaks

The first major event of the Student Christian Movement season takes place in the East Common Room of Hart House, Wednesday October 8. It will take the form of a welcoming party featuring as special guest Dr. Ellen Flesseman, a Dutch theologian of the University of Leiden.

Dr. Flesseman is visiting for the third successive year SCM organizations in various Canadian universities. She has a doctorate of classics from the University of Amsterdam and her doctorate of theology from Leiden University. Besides lecturing at leading theological seminaries, Dr. Flesseman is member of a study commission of the World Council of Churches.

All students are welcome and a special invitation is extended to freshman and overseas students.

WILDCAT...

The Premier. These promised delegates were not present at the meeting.

The Association charged the League was in no way representative of the student bodies, that it had no right to meet on the students' behalf.

Until a few days before the Duplessis meeting, it was charged, the League president had never heard of Sir George Williams College in Montreal.

The League at no time claimed to be elected student representatives. They identified themselves as a "social club" trying to help students.

There was no reason the premier shouldn't see them, they said. They had just as much right to see the Premier as any other group.

The League charter does not align members with any political party. That many of their members are connected with the Duplessis Union Nationale is "not important", they said.

Said McGill Student Union President Nick Asimakopulos: "We may quite readily infer a singular sympathy between the Union Nationale and the University Action League."

The Duplessis — University

Action League interview was the final straw for many Association members.

Their battle to try to solve the universities' problems has been an uphill struggle. Duplessis took more than a month to answer their requests for an interview. He said he would study the brief.

He would not have time to grant the interview, however, because of "parliamentary duties" and heavy duties "in the administration of our immense province."

Further requests for an interview failed and the one-day boycott of classes was held.

Association members were "astonished" to learn of the proposed meeting between the League and Duplessis.

Before it took place they predicted some concessions would be granted by Duplessis. Granting the League's fewer requests would allow Duplessis to "take the easy way out," they said.

It is also believed League members may try to set up a student paper. The existing student papers in the province are not favorable to Duplessis or the Union Nationale.

Toronto Students Head Medical Student Body

Six students from U of T's Faculty of Medicine will head 3,700 members of a national student medical association this year.

The U of T Medical Society approved a slate of candidates Tuesday night to head the Canadian Association of Medical Students and Internes.

Members of the newly-elected executive are: president, Jules Harris; vice-president, Bill Davison; secretary, Jean Shkimba; treasurer, Basil Orchard; public relations director, Peter Brawley; Ross MacLean will direct a CAMSI sub-committee, the Canadian Internes Placement Service.

Harris will leave for Ottawa next week as an observer for CAMSI at a National Federation of Canadian University Students conference. He will attend the annual CAMSI conference in Edmonton from October 13-15 with Davison and Orchard.

"CAMSI is probably the most effective student organization in Canada," Harris said last night. "It's accomplishments have benefited not only medical students, but all Canadian university students," he said.

Dance, Man

Toronto students tramping through Montreal tomorrow should take in McGill's traditional football dance.

Dance will be held in the Sir Arthur Currie Gymnasium on Pine Avenue.

The "name" band begins to play at 9 p.m. and swings through 'till 1 a.m.

Fourth Party Will Try Model Parliament Entry

A new political party will definitely make its appearance at the next University of Toronto Model Parliament.

T. G. Drew-Brook, who last week announced his intention of founding a new party, said last night he would definitely apply to the university's Caput for approval.

Called the "Social Revisionists," the new party is a reaction against existing political parties and the "flat-footed seriousness" with which they regard their "tinsel triumphs" in campus politics, he said.

Drew-Brook says he hopes for Caput approval and for a measure of cooperation from such officials as U of T President Claude Bissell.

"Everyone has been crying out against conformity, and our aim is to be as non-conformist as possible," Drew-Brook explained last night.

The "Social Revisionists" would try to corral the "sense of humor vote on campus," he said, by the rebellion against the established parties.

Main objection to Liberals, Conservatives, and CCF is not their policies but their attitudes, he said.

First idea of the new party came to co-founders Drew-Brook and Victoria College's R. W. Reid after last year's Model Parliament.

"It was just another example of what we thought was a manifestation of tawdry undergraduate liberalism."

"I have too much faith in humanity as a whole and university students in particular to think the majority of them believe in campus politics."

The movement would stay within the bounds of good taste and good conduct, he said, but would avoid the "grotesque seriousness" characterising other campus parties.

Drew-Brook said he could see no objection being raised by the Caput (the university's ruling body) or the general body of students.

General character and policies of the new party have not yet been settled—they depend upon those who show interest in the group.

"We can be fascist if fascists join, or we can be socialists if members want to be socialists," he said.

Plans for House action if they were elected would be to parody the other parties in the house, he said. They would probably try to pass a bill of attainder against the leader of the CCF, he warned.

Sportswise

The Varsity Blues moved into first place in the Intercollegiate Football circuit Friday to highlight a good weekend "sports-wise" for U of T.

While the Blues were trampling the McGill Redmen in Montreal U of T golfers were burning up the turf in Kingston to take the annual Intercollegiate golf tournament.

The one blot on the winning picture was the Baby Blue game Friday afternoon, when the intermediates took an 18-0 shellacking from Ryerson Rams in Varsity Stadium.

The Blues never looked back Saturday. They had racked up a 20-0 lead before the Redmen hit the score sheet.

The Redmen fought back for two touchdowns, and then the Blues countered with two TD's and a field goal.

Leading the scoring for Varsity was veteran Tim Reid who charged over McGill tacklers for three majors to boost his season's total to five.

On the Western front, the Mustangs trampled and jumped all over the ill-fated Golden Gaels from Queens University.

The smallest crowd in Western's history had lots to cheer about as the favored Mustangs lived up to their pre-season claims by swamping Queens 46-16.

Touted as the Blues' main competition this year, the Mustangs bounced back from the defeat the Blues handed them last week, showing none of the ill-effects of their 26-20 loss in the opening game.

The Mustangs bounced in for two fast majors in the first quarter, and never looked back for the opposing Gaels after that.

The loss to Ryerson was a big blow for the Baby Blues in their defence of the Shaw Trophy.

With only three holdovers from last year, John Sopinka's intermediates had an uphill fight all the way against the rugged Rams.

TIM REID

...and Otherwise

By MARK NICHOLS

Football weekends are a great deal more than watching a football game.

Sure, you sit in the stadium—in Montreal it is Molson Stadium—and shout off your head for Reid and Joyce and "Stick."

You squint into the sun and watch the men in blue and white all over the green and shout your head off.

Beyond the further ranks of bleachers where McGill sits yelling, you let your eyes wander now and then on the sky-line of Montreal. Pigeons flutter through the shadowed bowl where the athletes war, and the air is full of many hundred yelling throats.

When Reid cuts loose the way he does, and bounces off the redmen like he is rubber, flies down the field like an indestructible machine and brakes himself on the other side of the white lines, your heart is full of something that comes out in wild, full yells. It leaves you hoarse for days.

And maybe, in a way, this is what a football weekend is. And, maybe, all it should be.

But it's more. Perhaps it is what you will never forget.

Maybe it's the way the sun warmed the coat of the girl that sat beside you at the game. The way the wind stirred her hair. As simple as that.

Or was it the old Frenchman who found you wandering in the early light of Montreal and accosted you where the new sun was lighting the sky gold behind Dominion Square...

"I've seen you college boys come, year after year," he said with sadness. "And I've always liked it. For forty years, I've seen it. This big game. You boys and girls in d' streets."

The streets that are gray and cold in the early morning after the long trainride through the crowded, drinking night.

The old man's face is lined with years and failure and you think—perhaps he is glad to see us come and be happy.

"Can you spare for an old man the money for a meal?" and you dig sadly in your pockets.

Or was it earlier than this—standing in the packed mass in Toronto's Union Station, singing.

22nd Nfcus Meeting Starts Confidentially

By DOUG. MARSHALL

OTTAWA (Oct. 5) — After finally settling its own internal problems last year, a sounder more confident National Federation of Canadian University Students kicked off its 22nd conference here today with an international goal in view.

Addressing a symposium on international affairs, Nfcus president Walter Tarnopolsky said some support should be given students in Iraq, Algeria and Cuba.

Despite difficulties in separating students from political issues, and pointing out that Algerian students lost French scholarships because of French-Algerian trouble, Tarnopolsky said Canadian students stand to lose by ignoring such issues.

He also pointed out that the last four Cuban Student Union presidents have either been killed or imprisoned by the Batista government.

"For our own self-preservation," he said, "we have to show support or abdicate the role we have been playing."

Students in countries under colonial influence will be tomorrow's leaders," he said.

Opposition to Tarnopolsky's policy came from the Ottawa representatives of the Canadian Engineering Institute. G. Luke told delegates that interference in the internal problems of other countries are not in the province of Nfcus.

Protests against such actions as Tarnopolsky cited should be made through Canada's external affairs department, not through Nfcus, he said.

Prime Minister John Diefenbaker will address delegates Monday night and is expected to reveal government policy on the national scholarship plan supported by Nfcus.

The five-day conference will go until Thursday. One of the highlights is expected to be a symposium on the stand of students in politics and their obligations and rights in this line.

Research director of the Canadian Labor Congress, Eugene Forsey, will address delegates Wednesday.

And This Is Work?

A specialist in alcoholism will spend the next two years in Toronto researching for "a cultural history of drinking."

Dr. E. M. Jellineck, former consultant to the World Health Organization, is in Toronto as an associate of the U of T psychiatry department and as a consultant to Ontario and Alberta alcoholic foundations.

Defining his research work here, Dr. Jellineck said:

"I am here to write a history of drinking customs, attitudes towards drinking, and alcoholism as a phenomenon. We have really made great strides," he said.

Addiction to alcohol depends upon cultural patterns, social structure, and often a lack of solidarity, he explained.

"Alcoholism is in the bottle, and not in the man. But I have seen either factor predominate," he said.

Highest rate of alcoholism is among the French, with the United States following second, he said. Canada's alcoholic rate is far behind in the list.

Dr. Jellineck had sharp words for the trends in beer and alcohol advertising which tend to influence drinking attitudes: "How else can one become a man of distinction?" he asked.

Profs Brave Cameras In TV Lecture Series

By LIZ BINKS

beginning to settle into a routine.

When Dr. D. C. Williams' programs last year on the Psychology of Learning were deemed successful enough for a second run, the university Television Committee appointed Professors Hume and Ivey to carry it on in another vein.

Under the sub-title Focus on Physics they are attempting, in a total of six hours, to put physics into perspective for the general public, to enable people to understand better what scientists are doing and to read more intelligently about their work.

Their first program is tonight at 6:15 and launches the half-hour shows which will continue Monday nights until December 22.

"The series is not intended as a stunt show to demonstrate the wonders of science," Dr. Ivey said.

"Indeed, we are trying to minimize the so-called 'wonders' as we feel they are the fastest possible way to start misunderstandings."

"Sputnik, for instance, was not so much a scientific breakthrough as a major engineering feat," he said. "This is something else we hope the program will do—explain where physics ends and technology begins."

The background music played its last chord and the TV cameras clicked shut. One of the participants in the show under rehearsal, a grey-haired U of T professor, gave a triumphant twist to the yoyo he had been playing with and watched gleefully as it flew out of his hands and across the room.

His partner stopped juggling a small red ball on a steel track, flopped on to the corner of a table and lit a cigarette.

The second dress rehearsal of CBC's Live and Learn series was over. For the professors involved, Drs. J. N. P. Hume and D. G. Ivey of the university's Physics Department, jangled nerves had calmed down just a little and their new roles as TV stars were

Liberal Challenge Against CCF Now

The U of T Liberal club last night hurled a challenge at the campus CCF club to a debate on the topic "Resolved that the world has no need for socialism."

At the same time campus Liberal president Jim Doris (IV SMC) torpedoed chances of a massive three party debate on campus.

Doris said a tri-party debate would result in nothing but political speeches. "We hope there will be an actual debate" he added.

Said Doris: "The socialists on campus have at long last shown some faint indications of interest in campus politics."

At the same time he blasted

CCF'er Jerry Caplan (III UC) who several days ago charged that campus Liberals and Tories planned to combine forces.

The CCF spokesman flung his charges early last week after campus Liberals and Tories had challenged each other to a debate. It was suggested at the time that the CCF party be represented in the proposed debate.

The Liberal president said that at no time did his party intend to back away from a debate with the CCFers. "But," he said "we challenged the campus Tories to a debate that was intended to be a purely formal one." He clarified his stand by noting "a formal debate is a debate between only two parties."

"We sympathize with the campus Tories in their monumental task of attempting to defend the actions of the Frost regime in a debate that 'the Frost government aged, incompetent and irresponsible,'" he said, "but we have absolutely no sympathy with the socialists in their even more monumental task."

The campus Liberals will kick off their activities Tuesday with a meeting in room 25 of the "little red schoolhouse."

Tories Dispute Argue's Charge

David Crane, publicity director for the campus Conservatives, yesterday denounced the statements made by the speaker at a CCF meeting Tuesday as "simply not the case."

Crane said, "The statement made by Hazen Argue that 'the government has done nothing about the national hospital plan that Diefenbaker promised is incorrect. What he says is completely false.'"

Argue is the CCF House Leader in Ottawa. The charge Crane referred to was one of several made by Argue.

"Mr. Argue seems to know little about the actual legislation," Crane said. "The initial legislation was passed by the Liberal administration in 1957 after much pressure from Ontario's Premier Frost."

"In the early part of the session following the June 10 election, the Conservative government amended the Liberal legislation and speeded forward its operation," he said.

"The legislation comes into effect January 1, 1959, fully six months ahead of the date originally planned. The plan is administered by the provinces with the federal government providing subsidies to the provinces."

Comment on the proposed merger of the CCF with the Canadian Labor Congress came last night from campus Conservative leader Gordon Ross.

"I feel that the new labor party being formed — a mélange of the Canadian Congress of Labor, and the C.C.F. — presents a dilution of socialism, but that it presents a challenge to the Liberals," he said.

He said the socialist content in the new party will be weak, and in time it may develop into a radical party.

Close Applications Today For Dom-Prov. Bursaries

This is the final day for students applying for Dominion-provincial student aid bursaries.

University of Toronto Registrar J. C. Evans said last week applications for the type-B bursaries must be made through faculty, school or college offices.

All such applications must be handed in to the respective offices by today, he said.

Given annually in varying amounts to needy students, the bursaries are set up by the Student Aid Fund of the Ontario Education department.

They are awarded by Ontario government officials to students who are financially pressed and who can maintain a reasonable academic standing.

The bursaries are not scholarships—they are awarded more upon proof of financial need rather than examination brilliance.

Several hundred are awarded annually to University of Toronto students alone. They range in value from $50 to $500.

Aid Fund secretary Miss Florence Preston said she thinks a recently created loan fund will have little effect on the bursary grants.

However, she said, students in the first and second years may receive a slightly higher proportion of the bursaries than in previous years.

By Liz Binks

University has been in session just under two weeks and already sedition is in the air.

It greets you with an icy blast as you enter a coffee shop early in the morning; it hovers over the whispered conversations of small groups; it wags a finger of scorn at the nervous glances of campus politicians.

So far, it appears to have two faces, an undefined body and a dubious purpose. As yet it has no name.

It does not come from the engineers—they're busy with domestic problems. It does not come from the SAC—they revised their constitution last year and are going to follow it to the letter for the first few weeks anyway.

But in its present undefined and therefore secure — form it is threatening one of the university student's last bulwarks for making a fool of himself and enjoying it. It is threatening one of his last opportunities to be pompous under cover of intelligence; to be long-winded under cover of rhetoric.

It is a fourth campus political party and it is crying revolt to the sacred cow Model Parliament and the herd of well-established parties and campaigners who have followed its traditions to pasture for years.

Actually, we think it's a splendid idea in principle. Campus politics would not be harmed in the least by the presence of some shiny new planks in an old and sagging platform.

This new party may have something worthwhile to say. But let's hear them say it.

So far its statements of policy have taken two forms. One group might be called a protest party against what it terms the present "inane and dogmatic state" of university politics.

The other group, disclaiming any connection with the former, calls itself the Social Revisionists and with its aim "an harmonious marriage of thought and action" plans to restore man's sense of humor, sanity and common sense.

Fine phrases, these. It would be refreshing if one or both of the groups could come up with enough sensible ideas to gain support and turn protests into constructive criticism.

They have said nothing so far that is any less "inane and dogmatic" than the statements and those they are attacking.

And we are still waiting for the fourth party to emerge.

U of T Architects Praise City Hall

A number of U of T's architecture students and one former architecture student last week were unanimously in favor of the design for Toronto's new City Hall.

Every student called was enthusiastic.

"Toronto is making the greatest step it could ever have taken," said fifth-year student Gord Smeaton. "The design is new, different, exciting. I only hope our politicians don't make a mess of everything!"

A former student of architecture, Jerry Dawson, said: "This is what we need. Architecture is a sign of the times. At last we ourselves are constructing, so to speak, in the modern manner."

Another fifth-year architecture student, Grant Robertson, said: "It is a simple, beautiful conception. Obviously it is the best."

These comments were typical. All the students were certain this new building would influence architectural design in Canada immensely.

Most of those questioned felt Canadians are too conservative. "This will be a tremendous influence on Canadian architecture. It will bring more beautiful and hence better buildings," said one student.

Gar McGinnis, also in his senior year, said, "I like what I've seen. It cannot do anything but loosen up clients in Canada. Once they see this type of architecture they will want their buildings to look like it—to be built in the contemporary manner. This, of course, will be all to the good."

The current dispute in City Hall over the possible cost of the new building drew emphatic comments from U of T's architects. Asked whether City Council should modify, moderate, or otherwise change the design to keep expenses to the allocated $18,000,000, the architects said: "Definitely not!"

"They very definitely should not!"

"If they mess it up it will not be worth while."

"Toronto should be able to afford the new City Hall, even if it is considerably more than the $18,000,000. It is what Toronto and Canada need, and will do each a great deal of good."

The winning design for the building was chosen from among 540 designs submitted from all over the world. The winner: Viljo Rewell, a 48-year-old Finnish designer.

Architect Rewell's design wins first prize money of $25,000, as well as a fee of six percent—or roughly $1,080,000. He will supervise construction.

Or was it the friendly card games on the train, or the sudden moment of rapport when four voices and a harmonica sang softly together in the darkened coach?

The lights of traffic streaming along Sherbrooke Street and you are alone with a quart of beer.

The sudden moment of fear when the policeman shoved you away from the red and white goal posts at the end of the game.

Or the exhilaration you can't define that made you want to laugh in the crowded streets where thousands jammed small rooms of frat houses, where music filled the night, where suddenly everyone was together and happy—McGillmen, Torontonians, Montrealers, American tourists — everyone from everywhere.

Or was it this: wandering in this crowded post-game night, wandering in the crowds of young people, watching their laughter but unable to laugh yourself because you cannot find who you want to find.

So when you walked alone in the night when all the others were happy and loving and dancing and drinking all you knew for sure was that this was what life is.

And in the scattering, moving, vagrant day and night, you had found the thing that is your country.

Gliding A New Feature For UofT Flying Club

Gliding will be a new feature of the U of T Flying Club's program this year, Mrs. Frauke Voss, secretary, said last week.

Both experienced pilots and beginners are to fly gliders, she said.

Flights will be held at Brampton, where the club has rented five of the crafts from the Brampton Flying Club.

A flight to Kingston during the Queen's football weekend and regular breakfast flights to Hamilton and Niagara Falls will also occupy the club.

The 42-member club with three women members operates eight planes from the Island Airport.

Mrs. Voss said the club offers an introductory course for anyone wanting his pilot's licence.

three little words

The big signs spell out a grim message: 94 this year, 89 for the same period last year.

The realization that the 94 and 89 signify the number of traffic fatalities on Toronto streets is more than a little depressing.

And this year there are more menaces than ever to contend with on city streets; Menaces which come close to accounting for the difference between this year and last.

The new elements in the fray are the city's cross-walks, the handy-dandy new-fangled signs springing up all over the city. To date three Torontonians have been killed and others have been injured because the the new cross-walks have not worked as the planners imagined.

A cartoonist's prank is reproduced in this column. Starting as a spoof of a controversial situation in which our city's elders have tangled tooth and nail, it has ended as a rather grim reflection of a miscalculation.

Traffic arteries in this city are to hasten mobile transportation. Getting to a destination in a car has become a matter of a whole day's planning in this city. It is time the city planners realized this.

Instead of adding their assuredly abundant brain-power to this problem, they have turned their talents to a fatal method to slow down traffic.

Motorists are not likely to spend their driving time looking for obscure signs and timorous pedestrians. They will watch for traffic lights, but the rest of their attention is devoted to the other cars on the road.

This attitude on the part of the city's drivers is of course not admirable—but it is understandable. The city planners have a lot to learn.

An anomalous group called Metro and a hot-headed band called city council are slinging mud about the cross-walks. With the august dignity and grace of amateur Ciceros they have accomplished nothing.

Three small words would end the fatal dilemma of the cross-walks and lay the way clear to find some other solution to pedestrian movement.

The words?—"Take them down."

The Purloined Letter

By JOHN GRAY

Few people had heard about United College, Professor Harry Crowe, or Principal W. C. Lockhart before last summer began its fitful existence.

Probably nobody really cared whether they ever heard about the three. United College was no different from any other small United - Church - guided - and oh - so - sparkling institution; Harry Crowe was a witty, skeptical professor; and W. C. Lockhart was a college principal.

"Somehow," Principal W. C. Lockhart received a letter written by Crowe to a colleague at United College. The letter, Lockhart says, was delivered with an anonymous note saying the letter had been found in the College's halls.

Exactly why it was delivered of several aspects of the management and staff of United College. It also had mention of the recent federal election.

Because the letter contained criticism of the college, it was immediately decided this was sedition. No account was taken that this was a letter to a private friend. No account was in this manner is not so vague.

The letter contained criticism taken that these criticisms might be justified.

Crowe was summoned before the august Board of Regents of United College. The wind-up was that Harry Crowe got his walking papers.

If Harry Crowe had stood up in class and advocated the overthrow of the College, with assassination of the Principal and staff as the order of the day, the case might have been different.

But Harry Crowe just wrote to a private friend. He aired his personal views, and he apparently has lots of them—that's most of his job.

Fire him, cried the Principal. Fire him, cried the august Board of Regents — but don't anyone ask why. That's too sor-did.

And fire him they did.

United I Stand

I am the very model of a modern College Principal.
My outlook is unorthodox but eminently sensible.
I make my colleagues show respect in accents pusillanimous,
And so I reap my just reward of votes that are unanimous.
It's necessary nowadays when planning for futurity
To check up on opinions as a matter of security.
By means not over-scrupulous but semi-constitutional,
I'm able to preserve my rights of action retributational.
In everything that threatens me I thus remain invincible,
And am the very model of a modern College Principal.

The art of getting evidence has methods immemorial,
So amply demonstrated by all rulers dictatorial;
I must say I agree with them when dealing with the critical Whose attitudes I do not like, religious or political.
Let each professor learn he may not differ with impunity—
If not United my way, then to Hades with all unity!
Knox, Wycliffe, Wesley, Calvin, Huss—I find them slightly sinister.

Let Luther mind his manners, too, when speaking of a minister!
For everything's unethical, immoral, indefensible,
When censured by the model of a modern College Principal.

Far be it from my purpose in a Christian Democracy,
To let my flock imagine me a monster of autocracy;
Of mutual protection plans I cherish one, and this includes
A way to save their letters from all hazards and vicissitudes:
We scrutinize the postmarks, and, abhorring systems sloppy, night
And day we work with photostats on someone else's copyright.
By this and other means we hope to nullify anxiety
That all may thrive together in an aura of propriety.
I strongly recommend to those whose Staff is unconvinced,
My very latest model of a modern College Principal!

On Jackets

Dear Sir:

Re the latest inane dictat at SPS: the ban on jackets. Admitting that, in the lower years these coats are perhaps an unnecessary badge of conformity, leaders have pointed out, they have been worn with pride and neatness.

Now sir, what has really happened here? Merely, I suggest, a regrettable substitution of the Dean's conformity — suit coats and ties—for undergraduate conformity.

The antics of the Engineers have long been a colorful if occasionally excessive part of the institutions tradition. Surely this latest move is a potentially dangerous threat to that tradition. And this just a week after President Bissell urged students to learn to think for themselves.

Or perhaps I am mistaken here; perhaps, by Deconal Edict, further restriction on sartorial taste should be imposed. Perhaps, for example, the Dean of Arts should prohibit the beards and Pseudo - Oxford accents which bud so profusely among our bright young MA's and PhD's.

On Politics

After reading the article in The Varsity of 26, September, titled Challenge, Charges Volley As Campus Party Blowup Sparks Mammoth Debate! I feel the time is ripe to tell our young men and women on the Campus what politics and political parties really mean.

The word 'politic' is from the Greek, politikos—a citizen. In other words a political party is a group of citizens.

Most of us, I am sure, will remember that in our homes there is oft a great diversity of opinion. So in Society (Latin, socius, a companion) there are to be found numerous ideas, and ideals, or as we may say, idealities (Greek, idea, to see) as to what constitutes perfect government.

Young men and women when they have reached the age when a voice to participate in the government of our country is conferred upon them should remember: first of all that they are Canadian citizens; that their fellow Canadians have an equal right to their ideas and ideals; that as Canadians it is their duty and their privilege to, in friendly and courteous manner debate, end by vote decide what is considered by the majority to be right.

Name calling and abuse have no place in politics or government in Canada. When one votes, or as a member of a legislative body enters the floor of Parliament he should remember that he or she is a Canadian, leaving all party animosities outside.

Restoration Comedy

The Beaux-Stratagem, presented by the University Alumnae Dramatic Club at the Coach House Theatre, displays again the charm of Restoration comedy. The author George Farquhar, is neither a Congreve nor a Goldsmith, but he does give us a "laughing comedy" that is well worth the theatre-goer's attention.

However, without speed or lightness, this play could be a bore, but fortunately the director, Molly Goldby, has succeeded in achieving these two necessary qualities in the overall production, if not with the individual actors.

Two adventurous men at an inn in rural England, a dissatisfied wife and her love-seeking sister, and the plot is easily predictable. Bring in a highwayman, an Irish priest pretending to be French, the innkeeper's daughter, the inn's chore boy — and you are set with the usual plot complications that end with the proper people being united in the most favourable circumstances.

Although the University Alumnae has moved from the old coach house to more roomy quarters at 200 Bedford Road, the movement was restricted in a play that demands room for high-jinks, flowing skirts and broad movement. Nevertheless, both the director and the actors made an admirable attempt to overcome this severe handicap.

The star of this production was Powell Jones as the Irish priest, dressed in a flowing black robe (made from a Trinity gown), beneath which he appeared to possess no legs, and glided across the stage with perfect control of movement. With an excellent makeup and a rubber face, he was the delight of the evening.

The set was by Molly Goldby and Martha Mann, who also designed the costumes. The play will run from Oct. 8 to 12. Admission is free, although voluntary donations are always welcome. Telephone: LE. 4-0836. Marielaine Douglas

A Tale Of Two Cities

A Tale of Two Cities (Odeon Hyland), spins for a third time Charles Dickens' immortal story of unrequited love, set against the violent background of the French Revolution.

The main burden of this epic falls upon Sydney Carton (Dirk Bogarde), the brilliantly alcoholic advocate, who forfeits his life for Charles Darnay, the erstwhile aristocratic husband of Carton's unattainable love, Lucie Manette (Dorothy Tutin).

A restrained Bogarde portrays skilfully, often movingly, a man's transformation from a cynical legal wastrel to a soberly free hero who, facing a death of his own choosing, says convincingly "It is a far, far better thing that I do, than I have ever done before; it is a far, far better rest that I go to, than I have ever known."

Paul Guers' weak performance as Darnay makes one wonder if such a sacrifice was worthwhile. Cecil Parker as Jarvis Lorry, the great-hearted banker, Marie Versini as the innocently bewildered peasant girl and Stephen Murray as Lucie's cell-shocked father, all turn in excellent performances.

Director Ralph Thomas works in some deliciously symbolic cameos of class contrast, but, on the whole, fails to transmit the full impact of this powerful tale. In contrast with the earlier British film productions of Great Expectations and Oliver Twist, A Tale of Two Cities is an honest and straightforward effort, without frills or fascination.

According to Dickens, this was "the best of times and the worst of times," however, this is not the best of films.

Evacuation

Dunkirk (Loew's Uptown) opens with film clips from 1940 newsreels; regrettably, director, Leslie Norman fails to follow through and allot the remainder of the picture's two hours and sixteen minutes to the documentary form.

Instead, Norman tries to incorporate a plot, which would have the viewer believe that the war at home between profiteer Richard Attenborough and patriotic newsmen Bernard Lee, was more bitter than the fighting in France and Belgium.

The screenplay is populated by stereotypes of all that's best in the old British army: the young subaltern true to the old school and the tradition of the stiff upper lip; the crusty sergeant-major with the heart of gold; the plucky little corporal (John Mills) who didn't really want his stripes; and the rest, they are here.

The story line, based upon two novels, "The Big Pickup" and "Dunkirk", is simple: corporal Mills finds himself guiding a squad of five men cut off from their detachment in the chaos resulting from the Belgian capitulation. Every move of his indomitable little band is followed in detail, and every cliché ever perpetrated about the British army is trotted out in the course of their long walk from the somewhat fluid front to the beaches of Dunkirk. This long sequence does, however, provide opportunity for Director Norman to make excellent use of old film clips illustrating the devastating "blitzkrieg" tactics used by the Nazi armies.

Eventually, the little group makes the beaches and there, by sheer coincidence, they meet good guy Lee and profiteer Attenborough who have arrived in one of the little boats of Britain. Everyone, of course, gets away except the luckless viewer.

Technically the film is jazz

bunch of the boys were whooping it up

Last Friday night Massey Hall was the scene of a significant jazz event: Stan Kenton's annual concert in the Toronto area.

Joe Rico, the well known Niagara Falls, DJ promoted the venture, and should be congratulated for placing the orchestra on the concert stage. The last two years the Brant Inn and Palace Pier have been the locations, forcing the inclusion of an excessive amount of commercial dance material.

The program was satisfying, offering a wide selection of arrangements, ranging from new Johnny Richard, Bill Holman and Marty Palek writings, to such perennial Kenton standards as Love for Sale and Begin the Beguine.

The majority of the personnel at this concert has played together for well over a year, bringing to the music a sense of technical perfection and a deft brilliance.

With the excitement of the written music, contrapuntal ensemble passages where subtle underlying rhythms form the groundwork for shouting statements of horns and complex linear themes of the reeds, was the outstanding impression of the Kenton sound.

The solo work punctuating and blending into the total sound was in many instances (Perkins on "Yesterdays") sacrificed, or at least marred by some distracting technical considerations. The acoustics at Massey Hall may be able to cope with even a vigorous symphony orchestra, and broken speaker cones may not disturb the concert public, but the bright fortissimo of the Kenton orchestra plays hell with the dynamics of the hall. The soloists were often hard to hear against a background of the orchestra, but matters were worse as the poor speaker system, in this day of Hi-Fi, killed much of the nuances of individual accents of the individual soloists.

In summary the concert provided a fully enjoyable evening, presenting a well rehearsed and exciting big band and the master of modern orchestral jazz: Stan Kenton. The desire or the inability of the soloists to deviate from the cool manner of playing, seemed obvious in comparison to the hard bop movement, but let us have all good schools of jazz as long as it is jazz, which the Kenton orchestra certainly was.

But glaring cameras and a rigid half-hour limit present atmosphere far different from the classroom's and the professors have a difficult task before them.

"We have no way of gauging reactions," Dr. Hume said. "We just have to go over and over the script, questioning every line, eliminating any technical words that aren't absolutely necessary."

"We can't go back and explain as we can in a lecture. Everything has to be as simple as possible and timed exactly. And if we don't agree on something—as often happens—we have to try and steer a middle course."

The professors talk to their audience rather than to each other during the program. With the aid of a moderator, the scene shifts from one to another as with a table of apparatus, a blackboard and a screen they put physics problems on the different levels demanded by a varying audience.

"We want to offer some clarification to everyone watching," they said. "The most inexperienced person may not understand the implications of what we are saying, but if he has grasped the essential facts, then we've done something."

Each program in the twelve-part series is complete in itself and subjects include motion, gravitation, radiation, atoms and nuclear energy.

As a television subject, the professor's explained, physics lends itself well—in many respects is better dealt with here than in the lecture room.

"The element of class discussion is not so vital in physics as it would be in English, for instance," Dr. Ivey said. "You don't discuss or argue in a laboratory. And many demonstrations which are really too small to be performed before a big class lend themselves naturally to TV."

But regarding educational television on an extensive scale the professors were not so enthusiastic. Both felt it will come eventually of necessity but will never be more than a supplement to university itself.

"Educational TV will not teach people things they can use it will provide more of a cultural addition to a man's background rather than qualifications for a job. If this kind of thing were going to work it would have happened with radio some time ago," Dr. Ivey said.

Both men made modest predictions of their show's success.

But despite the odd attack of stage fright and a few exhausting moments when props failed to perform properly, the professors confessed to a certain enjoyment in their new role as TV celebrities.

Dr. Ivey waved casually toward a toy train on his desk. "That's going to be used to demonstrate motion," he said. And between you and me, I haven't had so much fun in years!"

BLUES SCALP REDMEN

Reid Stars Gets 3 TDs

By JOHN BROOKS, Varsity Sports Editor

Montreal, October 4 — Varsity Blues turned with vengeance on critics of their pass defence and intercepted six McGill airmails during a 35-13 pasting they handed the Redmen in Molson Stadium here this afternoon.

Three of the interceptions set up Varsity scoring plays, and all were vital manoeuvres that stifled McGill's heralded passing combination of Dick Carr and Joe Poirier.

Redmen actually passed 18 times, completing 10 for 180 yards, but included in that was a 71-yard pass-and-lateral play that finished with Poirier scampering down the sidelines for McGill's first touchdown.

Offensively, Blues outplayed McGill in every category.

Tim Reid moved into undisputed possession of the league scoring leadership with a sparkling three-touchdown effort. He now has five in two games.

Varsity piled up 276 yards on the ground, with Reid and Peter Joyce collecting over half that total. In the air, Toronto passed 11 times, completed seven—three for touchdowns—and gained 176 yards.

Reid carried 10 times for 39 yards, and Joyce 15 for 124. Little Wally Bulchak was McGill's best ground-gainer, totalling the pigskin 12 times for a 51-yard total.

Steve O'Farrell ran the ball eight times for 19 yards, and that took care of all the yardage the hosts could gain on the ground. Total yards gained showed Varsity with 452 and McGill with only 250.

Reid opened the scoring with a 60-yard run down the sidelines after gathering in a short pass from Brian Aston, Captain Curt Russell took the only Redman between Reid and the goal-line out with a flying block;

On McGill's first play after the kickoff, Larry Joynt intercepted a pass intended for Poirier on the Varsity 48, and ran the ball to the McGill 48.

Dave Creswell, playing his first game of the year, carried the ball 23 yards to the 25 after another perfect execution of the option play. Four line smashes moved play to the 10, from where Aston hit Dave Pinkham in the end zone for the touchdown.

Walt Adams converted both Varsity majors.

It stayed 14-0 until midway through the third quarter, when Joe Irvin fumbled the ball while attempting to kick from his own goal-line on a third down.

Centre linebacker Glenn Harding hopped on the ball, and Reid crashed through the centre two plays later to make it 20-0. Adams convert try bounced off the post.

The rest of the quarter was all McGill. On their first play after receiving the kickoff, Carr hit John Moore on the Varsity 46. Moore lateraled to Poirier, who outraced Bobby Dann down the touch line for the score.

Charles McLaughlin's convert effort cleared the uprights, but was nullified by McGill holding on the play.

McLaughlin then cut loose with one of the longest kickoffs ever recorded in Canadian Intercollegiate play. The ball sailed from the McGill 45 to land some seven yards behind the Varsity goal-line, a distance of 70 yards.

Blues couldn't move the ball, and had to kick. Redmen advanced to the Toronto 15-yard line, from where ex-Varsity halfback Bulchak scampered through the centre on a draw play to make it 20-12. The convert was good.

From then until the final whistle, McGill only took the ball into Varsity territory once, and an interception stopped them that time and set up another Blue major.

Bob Dann hauled in an aerial intended for O'Farrell and ran it to the Varsity 48. Blues marched to the McGill 24, from where Aston connected with Creswell in the end zone to increase the margin to 26-13. The convert missed.

A call of pass interference against Poirier virtually handed Toronto their fifth major. Poirier lunged at Pinkham in the McGill end zone, and umpire Bobby Porter ruled it Varsity's ball on the Redmen one.

Once again, Reid slashed through the middle for the major.

Joynt intercepted a Carr pass just after the five-minute whistle to give Varsity possession on the McGill 48. Joyce carried 23 yards in two plays and Reid added another three to put play on the 23.

On third down, Adams toed the ball from the 30 with a perfect field goal through the posts for the final scoring points of the game.

Along the line, Julian Porter, Doug Baird and Walt Sopinka stood out in a defensive cause, throwing Carr for substantial losses on three or four occasions. Ian Knowles was another defensive standout for Varsity.

McGill's best on the wingline came from Ed Smith, John Mosher and Dick Hinton. John Moore — although not the liveliest player on the field — turned in some fine punt runbacks.

From the Blue room . . . Gene Chorostecki and Don Johnston did not dress for Varsity . . . McGill still missed halfback Carl Hansen . . . an estimated 7,500 saw the game, played under sunny skies

Ryerson Rams Ram Baby Blues

Short Scores 12; Farr Stars

By Dave Griner

The Ryerson Rams spoiled John Sopinka's debut as an intercollegiate coach at Varsity Stadium on Friday afternoon with a convincing 18-0 victory over his "Baby Blues."

The Intermediates were beat-in every department of the game by a fired-up Ryerson squad.

Ryerson opened the scoring in the first quarter when an attempted field goal by Hal Short was wide and rolled to the dead-line for a single point.

The Rams marched again in the second quarter as passes and runs took the ball from the Ryerson 27 to the Toronto 20 yard line.

On third down with eight yards to go, Ryerson dropped back for a field goal attempt—only to cross Varsity up with a pass that was good for a first down on the Varsity three yard line.

Jim Hilsinger bashed over on the first try, and Short converted to leave the score at 8-0 for Ryerson at half-time.

After a Ryerson drive had bogged down on the Varsity 30, Ryerson's Hal Short kicked a field goal. Five minutes later he intercepted a Rush pass and went 87 yards down the sidelines for a touchdown he converted himself. That effort ended the scoring for the afternoon.

Ryerson were led in their attack by three hard running backs. Dave Blue, Jim Hilsinger, and of course, Hal Short ripped large holes in the Varsity wingline all through the game.

Dick Farr was the pick of the Varsity backs by a wide margin. He toted the ball 29 yards in 12 carries, took three passes for 30 yards, and intercepted one Ram aerial.

Along the Varsity line Casey Wood, immobile and immovable, battered the Rams regularly and consistently.

Varsity Golfers Take Tourney

After a drought of 11 long years, the University of Toronto's golf team finally won the Intercollegiate golf championship again.

Playing at the Catarqui course in Kingston last Saturday, the four man team of Witold Weynerowski, Bruce Brewer, Bill Lynch, and Ron Fletcher fired a combined score of 639 to defeat their nearest rivals, McGill, by fourteen strokes.

Weynerowski, the Toronto team captain was the leading player with a 77-77-154 over the tough Catarqui course.

Tied with him at 154 was a McGill player, Dave Pemberton-Smith who had rounds of 73-81.

Bruce Brewer, was second with 76-79-155.

Mustangs Win

LONDON (Special) — University of Western Ontario Mustangs bounced back from their 26-20 defeat at the hands of Blues a week ago as they shelved the luckless Queens Golden Gaels 46-16 Saturday in a one-way contest at Little Stadium in London.

One of the poorest crowds in Western history saw the game, which never saw the Gaels come within ten points of the ram-paging Mustangs.

Bob Miller and Lionel Conacher each carried the ball over the line twice as they led a seven-touchdown Western attack. Turner, Polizina and Pearson accounted for the remaining touchdowns.

Dave Skene and Mike Wicklow countered to put Queens on the scoreboard. A convert and a rouge accounted for the other two points.

Bill Mitchell kicked four converts to complete the Western scoring.

Western opened the scoring early in the first quarter and before the frame had ended the Purple Marauders had racked up a 13-0 lead.

Queens countered with eight points to Western six in the second session, but it was in a losing effort.

By the three-quarter mark the plunging, lunging boys from London had built up a 26-15 lead and in a sudden burst of glory they scored three majors and converted two of them to hang up a 20 point fourth frame.

Who's disgusting?

EDITOR'S NOTE: Every autumn the University of Toronto opens. Every year Sophomore students decide it is their duty to initiate those newly-arrived at the University. One veteran identifying himself only as MJN took down these comments:

"Disgusting," the matronly woman said standing in front of Diana Sweets.

"Screwy dames," a young man said, swung into his car and sped away.

"Grotesques," said a suave gentleman, took out a cigarette, lit it and peered across the street at the scantily dressed girls spreading down Bloor St. with bed pans in their hands.

"The Russians should see this one," said a young man to his friend. "They'd laugh."

They wouldn't laugh a god-damn bit," said his friend, they'd just smile to themselves inside knowingly. They'd know for sure that their day was coming a helluva lot sooner than they expected.

"How do they allow such stupidities," said the matronly woman, "And they're our university students, the cream of our young people: And they act like a group of kindergarten children. Less in fact. They haven't children's naivete or shyness. I've never seen anything so disgusting."

"Yeah," laughed the young man as he watched raggle-tagged dressed girls line up to pour their pots of liquid into a sewer. "That just about sums up what our education system's coming to in this country. The taxpayers keep giving the Universities dough and they keep on dumping it down the drain."

Look Magazine: "It is the duty of every Russian school child to acquire knowledge persistently in order to become an educated and cultured citizen and to be the greatest possible service to the country."

"Ah, the girls are just havin' a bit of fun," said a man with a huge smile. "They're just workin' off some steam. You know how it is." And he kept staring across the street at the girls in shorts.

"Well, I think they should be locked up." In my day we took going to University very seriously. Now it's just a big play pen where all the little 20 year old children gather and have fun.

"I don't think it was any different. Kids are the same all over the world you know that."

"Well maybe they are. But I still think it's disgusting."

Soph, Frosh, Kidnapped Then Returned To Vic

Two Victoria College students kidnapped Wednesday were returned safely to the campus over the weekend.

John Wood, one of the seven "Bob" leaders for the freshman year, and Norm Williams, Vic sophomore president, arrived in time for the Soph-Frosh Dance at Wymilwood Friday night.

"There were no hard feelings on either side," they said. In fact they enjoyed the whole affair.

Freshmen forced Williams into a car after the "Hare and Hounds" chase Wednesday night.

He was taken to lunch Thursday at the Thornhill Golf and Country Club dressed in khaki pants and T shirt—and was allowed to watch the World Series at a freshman's home.

His kidnappers brought him to North House the next morning, where he escaped with the help of a senior.

But the long arm of the frosh caught up to him within a few hours and he was taken away for the afternoon. His captors planned to return him to the campus at 8 p.m.

But Williams persuaded them that the appointed time was really 7:45. When they arrived on campus at 7:45 Williams, who had been untied, escaped.

He walked into the dance unnoticed, much to the dismay of frosh who had planned an "entirely different" entrance for their victim.

"It was very unorganized," he said. "Most of the time they didn't know what to do with me."

Wood was kept for 48 hours at a farm near Maple. A 15 foot chain ensured he would not escape.

He appeared at the dance, in time for the mock trial, wearing "long johns" and a miners cap.

His hands and feet had been attached to a plank.

"I was slung up like a slain deer," he said.

The charge? Insanity and co-operation with sophomores.

"I found the kidnapping well organized. They even had their watches synchronized," he said.

Will Probe Nfcus Books After Members Criticize

Toronto Delegates Spark Probe Diefenbaker Makes Brief Speech

By DOUG MARSHALL
Varsity Editor-in-chief

Ottawa, Oct. 6—CUP—After an ambitious launching for greener fields, the superstructure of the National Federation of Canadian University Students faltered tonight through its own fatigue.

In an emergency session, Nfcus voted 32-24 to appoint a special committee "to investigate in some detail" the audits and financial statements of the federations' administration.

The motion, moved by University of Toronto delegates, and seconded by the University of Montreal, arose out of "dissatisfaction" on the part of some universities with the financial and administrative commission's progress.

Purpose of the committee, made up of the student presidents of the University of British Columbia, Laval, Queen's, Alberta, the University of Montreal, and Dalhousie University, will be to examine financial books and audits to satisfy their curiosity, and enable them to justify Nfcus expenditures to their own students' councils.

Speaking for the motion were UBC, Toronto, McGill, Ottawa, and Queen's. Dalhousie and Manitoba spoke against the motion. There were 17 abstentions.

Earlier in the evening, delegates were treated to a five-minute appearance by Prime Minister John Diefenbaker.

The Prime Minister assured the federation its proposals had always been received with respect—but said nothing on the subject of federal scholarships.

Mr. Diefenbaker was originally scheduled as guest speaker at the federation's banquet sponsored by the University of Ottawa. Other commitments prevented him making the fuller speech expected.

His place was taken by Mr. James Macdonnell, minister without portfolio. Mr. Macdonnell made no reference in his speech to the Nfcus education brief for federal scholarships.

The emergency plenary session was called after strong lobbying by some delegates this afternoon. Particularly dissatisfied with the conference, was the Queen's delegation, headed by student president Morton Low.

Other causes of dissatisfaction were the three commission themselves. Delegates said a committee of 30 people was too large to function efficiently.

Speaking for the national executive, Nfcus president Walter Tarnopolsky of the University of Manitoba said he appreciated discontent with time taken dealing with trivialities.

He hoped delegates would speed up matters by accepting executive proposals. He insisted that motions be put to the vote when no real discussion was necessary.

PRIME MINISTER

John Diefenbaker, who made a brief appearance at yesterday's National Federation of Canadian University Students convention in Ottawa.

Score US Policy In Victoria Debate

The atomic bomb on Hiroshima and America's refusal to recognize Communist China are reflections of traditional East-West conflict, a Toronto editor said last night.

Globe and Mail editorial writer, Robert Needham severely criticized United States policy toward the far East.

The traditional western attitude toward Asia has always been one of complete exploitation. "Payment" for this exploitation will be made, he warned. "Anyone who has laid a hand on China will pay and pay in the next while. The problem is to keep the payment as low and as peaceful as possible."

Needham was speaking at the Victoria College Debating Parliament last night. Topic for the debate was that "U.S. in Formosa is a tragic blunder."

"The most important event of the 20th century to date was when American soldiers ran before Chinese soldiers in Korea—from then on Communist China began."

Communism is recognized in Poland, Roumania and Hungary. Refusal to recognize "Yellow Communism" in China is the greatest "tragedy and blunder" of US policy, he said.

In the 19th century China was exploited by all the western powers except the States. The US Open-Door policy protected the aspirations of Chinese nationalists.

But relations with General Chiang Kai Shek forced the United States into supporting a government lacking popular approval.

Chinese Communism and Chinese Nationalism—now separated by the Taiwan Straits—are not really poles apart, Needham said. "Who could be more nationalistic than the Chinese Communists in their attempts to unify China?"

Chiang is not defending Formosa by his present actions in the Quemoy Islands, he said. Chiang is using them only for guerilla warfare to further his dreams of invading the mainland of China.

The Eisenhower policy of allowing Chiang more freedom has caused the present strife on the off-shore islands, Needham said.

Nobody knows what kind of government the Formosans want. But they should certainly be given the choice of deciding whether they want to join China, Japan, or to remain neutral.

An independent Formosa without domination by the Americans or Chiang might be acceptable to them, he suggested.

Speaking for the government were Mary Fraser (III Vic) and Michael Cross (III Vic).

Supporting the policy of the Americans were John Gardiner (IV Vic) and Dunc Edmonds (IV Vic).

Severely criticising the American attitude that the Nationalists are the real rulers of China, Miss Fraser said chances for world peace are compromised by policies which refuse to recognize a quarter of the world's population as a constituted government.

The Americans are fighting against all Communist creeds and ideologies in their opposition to Red China, Edmonds said, especially the basic aim to conquer and control.

New Maturity At Nfcus Meet

OTTAWA, Oct. 6—Staff—Now of age, the 22-year-old National Federation of Canadian University Students has stopped being slightly embarrassed at its own existence and is finding more "reasons d'être" than it quite knows what to do with.

Signs of a new maturity and positive outlook were visible today as some 100 delegates from 28 institutions moved into commission session of the five-day conference here.

General feeling of delegates is that for the first time in Nfcus history they in fact represent the collective views of all Canadian university students.

Commission agendas emphasize this.

The National Affairs Commission has already endorsed the idea of the Nfcus summer seminar, held for the first time this August at the University of Western Ontario.

The University of Montreal offered to play host to next year's seminar. Ratification of this depends upon whether another grant to sponsor the seminar comes from the Canada Council.

Also on this commission's agenda is the Nfcus prize baby—the campaign for federal grants.

Aware that publicity next year will never be as great as it was this year, delegates will decide whether to continue the campaign or to switch emphasis to something else—possibly unemployment insurance or income tax.

The International Affairs Commission, headed by last year's Nfcus President Gabriel Gagnon, is discussing relationships with International Students' Unions.

Coming up on the agenda is an important policy decision on how much support should be given students of countries involved in an internal crisis.

General feeling, expressed by Nfcus President Walter Tarnopolsky yesterday, is that support should be given students in Algeria, Iraq and Cuba before we lose their allegiance to the west.

Only commission still chasing its own tail is Administration and Finance.

Bugged by complete confusion in account books for the 1956-57 session caused by complications in the Nfcus Travel Bureau, the commission is trying to create a satisfactory arrangement for the future.

Losses for this year's Travel Bureau amount to $4,000. A sub-committee meets tonight to discuss possibilities of enforcing a strict budget on the travel department.

Meanwhile Tarnopolsky told the commission that Nfcus lawyers are considering suing former Travel Director James Pickett for between $800 and $2,000.

He said the $2,000 Nfcus claims from the Scottish Union of Students, will probably be written off as a bad debt.

The SUS counter-claimed for $7000. Basis of the dispute is a telephone conversation between Pickett and the SUS concerning an exchange of students last year.

The impossibility of using this, as evidence plus the dangers of suing another national student's union left the issue up in the air, he said.

Much of Nfcus' new vigor comes from an ambitious full-time national executive and the fact that all but two Canadian universities are now in the organization.

Re-entry by McGill and the University of Montreal last year repaired the weak link in the Nfcus chain and left only Assumption University at Windsor and Guelph's Ontario Agricultural College out.

New Protest Party To Support Quebec

A new U of T political party, formed to protest the "inane and dogmatic" nature of campus politics, last night declared their "sympathy" with the students of Quebec in their fight against the Quebec government.

The group, still unnamed, also released the names of its leaders. They are: Mike Rasminsky (IV UC), Tim Reid (IV Trin), Ken Wyman (III UC) and Dave Stein, (III UC).

The party urged the U of T Students' Administrative Council to "take strong action in protest against these outrages against student rights."

For the present three campus parties, the announcement said, student rights are "but a very small puddle—a puddle on whose muddy waters they hesitate to dirty their feet."

The threat to the freedom of Quebec students is "a threat to our own", the group said. "The situation in Quebec is intolerable."

"The campus politicians and their followings in the Liberal, CCF and Conservative parties have been frozen into inaction. Their frequent pronouncements are dogmatic rantings on issues over which they have no control."

In part of Canada academic rights have been denied by "a ruthless dictator," the announcement said.

"Because of the vested interests they represent, because of the care with which they must weigh justice against votes, because of their disinterest in student affairs the three campus parties will bury their heads in the sand and ignore the issue of the students of Quebec versus M. Duplessis.

"The rights of a number of students in this country are going up in flames while the campus politicians are content to look away, warming themselves at the fire."

The new party might be happy to merge with another new party now being formed on campus, the leaders said, "provided the other group were reasonable."

The other party is being organized by Tom Drew-Brook (IV Trin), to protest the "grotesque seriousness" of campus politics.

But, the former group warned, "we are not a home for Communists and Fascists."

Panacea Revels Returning

October 17 will see the return to the campus of Panacea. Panacea is a mammoth evening of dancing and entertainment sponsored by the Faculty of Medicine for the enjoyment of the whole University. For nine years, Panacea has been in retirement. This year it returns to Hart House with dancing in the Great Hall, fortune tellers and cartoonists in the lower hall, interfaculty athletics in the upper and lower gyms, and mixed swimming in the pool. In the years following the war, when the university was crowded with veterans, Panacea was an annual affair. In 1949, an over-enthusiased spectator fell into the pool from the gallery. Panacea was thus retired from the list of annual activities.

Panacea this year will live up to its name, and be a cure-all for all, the Meds committee says. It comes just in time to get the Homecoming weekend off to a flying start, they add.

Book Exchange Still Operating

The Students' Administrative Council book exchange still needs students' used books, an exchange employee said yesterday. But some books, which have been on hand for as much as three years, are now available for as low as 10 per cent of original cost. Usually, books sold for prices set by the owners, generally about two-thirds the original cost.

All money from sales will be given to book owners at a date to be announced in The Varsity. The exchange keeps a 10 percent commission. The exchange is located at 119 St. George St. Its new hours are 12.30-5.30 Monday through Friday. It operates for three more weeks.

Rules Split SMC As 10 Move Out

St. Michael's College male residents have split down the middle on their feelings about new residence rules that make living in St. Mike's the most controlled on campus. While there has not yet been an exodus of any sizable proportion from the college following announcement of the new rules, a resident said he knew "at least 10" who were moving out as a result. The rules, inaugurated by St. Mike's new dean of residence, Father Francis Orsini, require all first and second-year men to be up at 7 a.m. and signed out of residence by 7.30 a.m. Third and fourth-year men are allowed an additional 15 minutes to get up and leave in the morning. Most-resented rule, however, is that men of college sign in every night at 11 p.m. unless they have explained to their residence prefect where they are going. Strangest of all, residents say, is that with the announcement of the rules about a week ago, no pronouncement was made on how they would be enforced. Already several residents say they are openly contravening the rules in order to see what is going to happen. A resident said he knew about five residents who were moving out of the college because of the new rules. He said for a half dozen more he knew, the rules came as "the last straw." Another resident, representing the other side of the reaction, said that he would make no attempt to fight the rules whatever they were. He said that he, and others he knew, felt that they were in the college as a result of a decision concerning their way of life and that they would abide by whatever the college authorities decided was right. A resident said that similar rules had been announced at the beginning of last year but had fallen into abeyance soon after.

University College and Victoria College men face a new threat. Dental students are trying to cut them out. UC and Vic freshettes have been invited to appear at the Dentists' initiation dance to-night at 8.30 p.m. in the Independent Order of Odd Fellows Hall, 229 College St.

HART HOUSE ART CLASS Organization Meeting 7.30 TONIGHT IN THE ART GALLERY

Mr. Aba Bayefsky, the well-known Toronto artist, gives instruction to any interested members of the House on Tuesday and Thursday evenings in the Hart House Art Gallery. Another Dream Another Coffee And A New AVR

By SUSIE BRESLIN
Varsity Staff Reporter

Inhabitants of the world of show business are not noted for their modesty. The two-bit actor shooting for the stars and the big-time producer with the world at his feet share big dreams and a legendary talent for big talk.

When the dreams are coupled with a disarming modesty, the combination is a potent one.

Citizens of this mysterious, star-struck world have always been a vociferous element on the U of T campus. They have battled the politician and the bureaucrat with a wonderful dramatic flare.

In the midst of just such a battle royal over the All-Varsity Revue last year, two young men sat down over coffee and confided their dreams. And out of these insignificant beginnings has come Toronto's long-awaited original bookshow.

A lot has happened since that momentous coffee. Dick Dean and Stan Farrow have tossed out half a dozen plots since they discovered a mutual desire to write a bookshow. It has been seven months since they found an agreeable plot. The skeleton show is now complete, but changes are still being made. "We'll probably keep on making them right up to the last minute," Dean says.

The show is basically "Just a good evening's entertainment—I guess whimsical is the best word to describe it," Dean says modestly. Set in Nero's Rome, it is a musical comedy with 10 leads and a cast of 50.

There is some Canadian satire, but "the satire is definitely incidental. It's not another 'My Fur Lady' or 'Spring Thaw' and it's not topical," Dean says.

volunteer work

About 100 positions are open for university students interested in part time welfare work. University Settlement officials said yesterday.

Volunteers are asked to report at the Placement Office, 5 Wilcox St., today and Thursday of this week between 9.30 and 5.

Six nights of auditions are planned for the end of November. No attempt at advance casting has been made. "We want to give everyone an equal chance," Dick said last night.

The show will have about ten weeks of rehearsals before opening night on Feb. 9. After the week's run, no one knows what will happen.

The three are guardedly hopeful that bigger things are in store for the show. "We think it has very commercial possibilities—but of course everyone involved in a show thinks that," Lord says.

"The show has a general interest, and the fact that it's not topical helps a lot," Dean says.

A big job lies ahead of the enterprising three in the next four months. All the problems of casting, directing, staging and designing have to be ironed out, and opening-night jitters have to be conquered.

But the three aren't afraid. "All I can say is I'm looking forward to it," Dean says.

For this is show business. And when the dreams come true, nothing else really matters.

Mac Officials Frowning Beauties Must Stay Home

HAMILTON (CUP) — McMaster University's Board of Governors has forbidden McMaster co-eds to enter a beauty contest to choose "Miss Hamilton Tiger-Cat."

Explaining the decision, McMaster Dean H. S. Armstrong said he was "very reluctant to let McMaster women undergraduates parade like prize cattle" in the contest.

Several co-eds were apparently set to enter the contest when the order was sent down from the Board.

Mrs. Edgar Bates, Dean of Women, is reported to have said "the girl would get into trouble" if any co-ed defied the Board's ruling.

Student Council members objected to the ruling, and many officially lodge a protest with the Board. However, final discussion of whether to lodge a protest was tabled.

One council member charged the ruling was "as silly as keeping a girl out of a music recital."

It was pointed out at the meeting that the Queen of the University of British Columbia automatically becomes Miss British Columbia Lion.

There should not necessarily be a contestant from the University, councillors said, but there was no reason a girl shouldn't independently apply for the title.

And Freshmen Behave

HAMILTON (CUP) — There are initiations at McMaster University too—but indications are they will be reduced from their "former greatness" by university officials.

Situated on the outskirts of Hamilton, McMaster has traditionally given the townspeople ample view of its freshmen every fall.

Clothed in "rather strange attire" the frosh have invaded the city streets; there they have cleaned ancient statues with tooth brushes and done push-ups on the city's main thoroughfares.

However, the McMaster administration takes a dim view of such shenanigans.

Dean of Men H. S. Armstrong says he is in "full agreement" with an editorial in the Hamilton Spectator condemning initiation hazing as "unnecessary, obsolete and thoroughly old-fashioned."

Planning a grant expansion program, McMaster is thinking of public relations more than ever now.

Hamilton residents already have a very vague idea of what the university is about, it is argued. To expose residents to students only in initiation periods is unwise if the university hopes to get contributions from the city.

righteous anger...

From the august realms of international politics, from the exact precision of scientific endeavor, and from the mystical depths of classical literature, students every Saturday afternoon let down their un-intellectual hair.

In the sunny stands of Varsity Stadium they wave beer bottles, toss their friends from shoulder to shoulder to the bottom of the stands, and cheer themselves hoarse.

The attraction of course is the Varsity Blues, and it seems that this year a worthier attraction could not have been chosen.

In the first two games of the season Varsity footballers have run ragged over the opposition, especially in the sophisticated swing they took at McGill Saturday.

But those who let down their hair do it in a very unsophisticated way—too unsophisticated.

Whether or not it can be justified by logic, traditions which have grown up make the football weekend a time for a general cutting loose of otherwise subterranean enthusiasms.

The excesses of spectators, which begin in Toronto, continue at the game itself and reach an hysterical climax after the game no doubt give the nominal reasons for all this—the football team—cause to wonder.

While the players themselves must adhere to a stringent training schedules, the ones who go to watch frequently take on aspects of those who went to the games in ancient Rome. The violence and disorderliness that exploded on the late train to Montreal Saturday night are an example.

Viewed from very far off, one can see a peculiar dichotomy—the revellers in a great, howling horde, scrambling on their knees behind the athletes.

So what began as a tribute to the university's football team, representing a serious endeavor to develop a part of the student, has degenerated into a signal for mass extravagance to begin.

But we congratulate the Blues and wish them continued luck.

vote of confidence

The Christian Church has been around for almost two thousand years.

Maybe it's running out of steam.

Maybe its ideals aren't powerful enough to inspire anybody to follow its precepts.

Maybe you can't be a Christian in a hotel.

Maybe this world has become so decadent that Goodness, Discipline and Knowledge can only exist in a "Catholic Home".

But apparently 11 residents of Elmsly Hall don't think so.

The Night Watchman

The sun also rises on squirrels. It can't really help it. Squirrels are everywhere these days. Millions of them. Crawling, climbing, scratching, digging, playing in sweet pretended innocence.

But don't be fooled. Don't be taken in by their apparent harmlessness. The real tactics are plain for all to see. The problem clear. The retaliation vital. And the ultimate, tragic outcome inevitable.

The squirrels are taking over. Already there are strange tales told of squirrels and girls. True tales. Tales which should prove—once and for all—that we have again followed the peaceful paths of appeasement, put our trust in animals, and been trapped by the storm clouds of disaster.

Time was, in the old days, the happy days of long ago, when a quiet stroll across Queen's Park or up Philosopher's Walk was only fraught with human difficulties.

Nowadays, such simple pleasures must be taken sadly.

Few dare, and even those with courage dare rarely, to venture forth. The squirrels rule, and their rule is hard.

There is evidence. Last week, youngish, blonding Mary Ann Riefer was proceeding gracefully from the Museum towards the Library.

In the bloom of womanhood, flushed with the virtues of knowledge, schooled in the propinquities of modesty, her life lay open in broad, sunlit avenues of hope and happiness.

There seemed little that could go wrong.

Until she saw the squirrels.

Only a few of them at first. Cautiously minding their own verministic business, they pitter-pattered across the green grass and dry leaves, flurrying, flouncing, pausing and considering, oblivious, it seemed to the maternal gaze of the enchanted Mary Ann.

Mary Ann approached. Slowly at first, for an awareness of squirrels was new to her. She had seen them before, of course. She had even studied them back in the days when young high school biology students blushed at the sex life of tadpoles. But for the first time in her life, Mary Ann really noticed squirrels.

Groveling in her handbag for her lunch, Mary Ann produced a peanut-butter and marmalade sandwich. She dangled it daintily before the twitching noses bobbing about before her.

They ignored it. Fascinated, she approached nearer.

The squirrels paused. Twitching. Investigated.

And, as you have seen them yourself, the squirrels were black and sleek, inquisitive and, with their little hands, ridiculously human.

In the bright sun, riddled with dry guests of falling leaves, the squirrels scrambled about her feet.

But have you seen what Mary Ann saw then? No: the new and frightening look in their beady eyes, the sinister rippling of their bodies.

And the horror of a sudden fantastic increase in their numbers around Mary Ann.

And the simple, silent moment when they took over.

And Mary Ann was no more.

I can't make it. But I try

But hell, I'll never be really angular on being angular — and what it is

By MARK NICHOLS

On the left appears a cartoon series depicting the dilemma of an undergraduate who just knows he can never be "angular."

The cartoon symbolizes the impact Dr. Claude T. Bissell's brief remarks about the advantages of students being "lopsided" during his first address to freshmen recently.

It was, he said, advisable for students to allow their interests to lead them where they will. The much-vaunted "all-round" student, he said, is not the last word in the concept of what a student is.

That the statement has at the city press and on campus is not surprising.

Dr. Bissell, in his belief that a student should dedicate himself to the things he believes most in, has struck out against the romantic and effervescent utterances of the popular media.

Because, as Dr. Bissell has pointed out elsewhere, it is now possible for students with neither the ability nor real inclination, to attend university and squander perhaps four years of their parent's money on living it up, the popular media have found a new kind of romantic figure to exploit.

The process works two ways. Young people approaching university age today are thoroughly indoctrinated with the idea that university is for having fun and little else.

To some extent, the media are right. University always has been, and will continue to be, the testing ground of the inquisitive young human being.

Within its framework, the young man or woman tests every phase of human experience, encounters ideas. And all of this is experienced both for the best and the worst.

But the current concept of the university is of a place where the student exercises the vagrant elements of his soul by indulging when the spirit moves him in whatever he feels like.

The apparent result: a degeneration of scholarship, a public loss of faith in the aims and accomplishments of the university within the framework of Western society.

But just what does Dr. Bissell mean by "angularity"? What he does not mean, we think, is the rabid pursuance of what could be pursued as well outside the university.

He does not mean a frantic search for "a bigger kick." He probably does not mean the pursuance of a life of dreams at the expense of the life of action.

What we think he means, is that the society of learning in which the members were "the angular" would be composed of those of whom each one possessed a knowledge or ability in any one field that surpassed that of each of his fellows.

In such an "angular" society there would be many experts, many varieties of opinion with the full force of knowledge behind them, and a continuing increase in the store of knowledge and the growth of ideas.

The Incredible Shrinking TV Screen!

Canadian television has entered a new era. "Breakthrough", by Donald Jack, presented on General Motors Theatre Sunday night, was a shining star in the gloom of westerns, whodunits, and soap operas on North America's television screens.

While American networks are carrying only one live drama show this season, ABC-TV picked up the CBC science-fiction drama; it is also being shown on a delayed basis on the BBC network.

"Breakthrough" takes place a year or two in the future, A CF-105, popularly known as the Avro Arrow, one of only two in existence, vanishes on a routine flight over Ottawa, loaded with American-loaned experimental equipment. Five months later, the Arrow turns up again, the pilot apparently unaware that his flight has lasted longer than expected.

The action takes place in the makeshift courtroom where Flight Officer Ralph Madison, pilot of the Arrow, is being court-martialled.

For one who is not a science-fiction addict, the story was probably difficult to follow. Had it not been for exceptional camera work and often flawless acting, the production could not have been the success it was.

In the role of prosecutor, Lloyd Bochner gave his usual excellent performance, particularly in the second half of the show. John Vernon played Wing Commander Mennell, defence counsel, and was a standout. His performance Sunday night would indicate that he is the actor to watch in the future.

Donald Francks played Flight Officer Madison, turning in a grade-A performance with what material he had.

Producer Director Ronald Weyman had the full co-operation of Avro in presenting "Breakthrough". Many flashes of the Arrow in flight added interest, together with a small model appearing on a courtroom table. A large-scale model was featured in the intermissions over the ABC network.

"Breakthrough" was adapted from Donald Jack's novelette appearing in the Oct. 11 issue of Maclean's entitled "Where Did Rafe Madison Go?"

This play was the first of four General Motors Theatre productions to be telecast over ABC, under the title "Encounter". The entire 39-week series will be seen in England under the title "Interplay".

The three productions still to be seen in the U.S. are "End of Summer", "The Flower in the Rock", and "Men Don't Make Passes".

"End of Summer" is a modern version of Ivan Turgenev's classic "Summer Love". The modern adaptation is by American playwright Elliott Baker. It will star Donald Davis, well-known locally for his successes at the Crest, Hildegard Rossi, Hilary Vernon, and Gordon Ruttan.

"The Flower in the Rock" is a mystery-suspense drama by one of Canada's most prolific authors, Joseph Schull. Mr. Schull has written upwards of 50 TV scripts and 500 radio scripts. He has had four books published, the most recent being "The Salt Water Men".

Last of the four shows to be seen south of the border is "Men Don't Make Passes", a comedy-drama by Canadian playwright Bernard Slade.

CBC officials are excited by the potential audience of the series. Up to 50,000,000 viewers can tune in the next three productions, without considering the British audience at all.

American reviews on "Breakthrough" are mixed. One of the most favorable is from Sid Bakal of the New York Herald-Tribune. Mr. Bakal calls it "an example of daring experimental writing that should be applauded."

"Its very good actors... lent an air of believability to a theme that might otherwise be considered incredible..."

"Encounter" is a program with provocative impact that bears and deserves watching."

Moider Da Bums!

Damn Yankees (Imperial) Hollywood's snappy adaptation of the fabulously successful Broadway musical is bound for a grand slam homerun at the box-office.

All the colour, bounce and fun of this devilish romp with baseball come excitingly alive when transplanted from the proscenium stage to Yankee Stadium.

Co-Directors George Abbott (who did the stage show) and Stanley Donen manage their team with a spark that would make Casey Stengel envious. In the stands, we find that most piteous of all baseball rooters, a Washington Senators fan (Robert Shafer). Flaherty's stark poetic drama, MAN OF ARAN, and one other feature to be announced, will round off this superb season.

win the pennant. So who should appear but that Old Debbil (hilariously handled by Roy Walston) and in a twinkling the homeloving real estate agent becomes Joe Hardy (Tab Hunter), a big man at the plate, who leads his revamped Senators to the top of the heap. Operative Lola (Gwen Verdon), one of the Devil's hot sidekicks, gets in some whocky double-plays in an attempt to foul up the crew, but contrary to her song, doesn't get what she wants. All in all, it's quite a delightful ramble round the base-paths.

The catchy tunes ("Whatever Lola Wants", "Two Lost Souls", "Those Were The God Old Days") bounce from the wide screen with an infectious verve sparkle. Gwen Verdon, far and away the zaniest dancer to flick a hip on screen, tees off again in the vamp-comic role that made her name on Broadway. The cleanup hitter, however, is Roy Walston whose insidiously riotous Saton conjures up images of a helluva happy hell.

The Yanks may be domned at the hands of the Braves, but their film story is guaranteed a long stay in any ballpark.

Is life a drag? Ever wonder why the vituperation has been lacking in the AM&D reviews? The reason is our favourite critic, Warren Peace, hasn't been sneaking his nasty insinuations into the columns of The Varsity.

Yes, because no one else has had the gall to hire him, Warren Peace returns to his usual spot this Thursday.

Regarding life with a cynical sneer, he promises his inimitable destructive criticisms, beginning with a very special film review.

Once more, AM&D will be the page to avoid, as Warren Peace delights the avant-garde, infuriates the Philistines and generally makes life hell for the artsy-craftsy set.

The Magnificent Eleventh

Sunday evenings at the Odeon Hyland are witness to the Toronto Film Society, which has just commenced its eleventh season of fine film fare from all parts of the world.

Although their initial offering, Andre Cayette's JUSTICE EST FAITE, was only fair, the rest of the scheduled showings promise to make up for it. They will be thought-provoking, excitingly experimental, and let's face it, pretty darned entertaining as well.

For instance, THE SEVEN SAMURAI, the Society's next offering, is a Japanese costume drama of violence and even sex, set in the 16th century.

THE LITTLE FLOWERS OF

ST. FRANCIS deals with St. Francis of Assisi and his followers; there will be a program devoted to the musicals of the 'thirties; Carl Theodore Dreyer's DAY OF WRATH, an analysis of sin in witch-haunted 17th century Denmark, will be shown in January.

AMICI PER LA PELLE (FRIENDS FOR LIFE), a gentle story of two children, which marks a break from the sordid neo-realist school, will be the February showing, followed by G. W. Pabst's THE DIARY OF A LOST GIRL, starring Louise Brooks.

music

happy hhoa-tso days are here again: lude sing godam

Making up for a very dead summer for music, Toronto impresarios have prepared a feast for the fall. The excitement caused by the re-scheduling of the CBC Symphony Concerts on Sundays nights started the musical season off with a bang. While some organizations despaired of their existence because of CBC's unwise move, others were competitively incensed.

One of the most important changes in the musical scene has taken place in Toronto's Opera Festival. This organization, whose former announcements evoked predictable artistic mediocrity has had the vision and good fortune this year of engaging Walter Susskind to conduct LA BOHEME, their principal production. The orchestra playing and general level of performance will be immeasurably higher with Susskind and his TSO musicians. The Festival starts at the Royal Alex on the 13th. THE MASKED BALL (Verdi) and Offenbach's THE TALES OF HOFFMAN are the other productions.

Because of the opera engagement, the Toronto Symphony's season will start later on Oct. 28, with pianist Byron Janis as the soloist. Other soloists who will appear throughout Toronto's busy musical season will include Dietrich Fischer-Dieskau, Johanna Maria Tzzy, Andre Tchaikovsky, Arthur Rubinstein, Glenn Gould, Clifford Curzon, Michael Rabin, as well as guest conductors Sir Malcolm Sargent and Josef Krips with the Buffalo Philharmonic.

A very special, long-awaited event will take place on October 21 at Maple Leaf Gardens. This is the Toronto debut of diva Maria Menenghini Callas. It will be very interesting to hear her opinion of the hackey rink we require her to sing in. Let the rink be well perfumed, or Toronto will never hear the last of it.

Here on Campus, the Hart

House Music Committee is very pleased to announce that it has had the fortune to engage for its first concert that celebrated artist, Aksel Schiotz. Mr. Schiotz has recently joined the staff of the Royal Conservatory of Music. The date of his concert will be October 26.

The Hart House Orchestra Associates have tentatively re-scheduled their concerts on five Saturday evenings, subsequent to the fatal CBC announcement.

The programmes include all-Mozart, all-Vivaldi, and all-Handel concerts, and other music by Manfredini, Tchaikovsky, Locatelli, Bach and Schubert. The first concert will probably take place on Nov. 1. Although posters will not be up for awhile and subscriptions not yet on sale, the Associates are still very definitely in existence, and anyone interested in working on the executive of the HHOA as college or faculty rep. are urged to call at the warden's office, Hart House.

Dent's Soph President Kidnapped By Eleven-Man Ambush Party

Dental freshmen added one more kidnapping to U of T's bumper crop this fall, carrying off Dent's sophomore president Jack Hanvey at 7:45 last night.

Eleven freshmen seized Hanvey as he waited for a streetcar at the corner of Bloor and Sherbourne Streets, an anonymous caller told The Varsity last night.

The call said Hanvey, a married man, had been allowed to call his wife.

A reporter was unable to reach her at home later in the evening.

According to the phone call, the rapping was done this way:

At about 7:15 Hanvey left the Dentistry Building with several friends after a meeting. He did not see the frosh hiding in nearby bushes and accepted a ride with a friend to the streetcar.

The freshmen, in two cars, one ahead of and one behind Hanvey, accompanied the other car to Bloor and Sherbourne, where Hanvey got out to wait for the streetcar.

The actual abduction took place within sight of a police car. The police made no move to stop it.

Hanvey put up "quite a struggle" but when he realised the odds against him, was "a good sport" about the event.

"He's in good hands," the caller said.

Hanvey had a number of his books with him, the callers said, and they were in the process of preparing him a T-bone steak for supper. He was in "a very plush place."

He is scheduled to be returned at noon today.

Carleton Students Flee From Smell of Skunk

OTTAWA, (CUP) — Carleton University freshmen were told to "watch out" last week after a prank forced Carleton students to abandon the students' union building.

A group of freshmen set a skunk loose in the union building, and students had to desert television and common rooms for several hours before the "invader" was found and captured.

The freshman group was seen and identified outside the union shortly after the presence of the skunk became apparent. Members of the Carleton students' council warned the pranksters to "watch out."

Searchers spent several hours looking for the animal before they finally found it in a closet. The skunk was then enticed into a paper bag and removed from the building with the aid of a metal trash can.

Television and common rooms had to be vacated because of the powerful odor throughout the building.

Plan Weekend

A former member of the Student Christian Movement national executive will lead an SCM Thanksgiving weekend.

Bob Miller will lead the group at the Anglican Conference Centre in Aurora from Oct. 10-13.

Mr. Miller is a book steward for the U of T SCM, and a former Study Secretary of SCM of Canada.

Registration will be conducted at the SCM office, Hart House. For further information call WA 3-9727.

New Gift For Grads

Students taking post-graduate work in the U of T's hospital administration course will be able to borrow money from a new $10,000 kitty.

University President Claude T. Bissell announced yesterday that the money has been made available by the W. K. Kellogg Foundation.

The course is given by the School of Hygiene.

Dr. A. J. Rhodes, director of the school, looks for an increased need for the money.

The implementation of the new hospital insurance scheme, he said yesterday, will boost the demand for hospital care and the need for qualified hospital administrators will jump accordingly.

Only one other such course is offered in Canada.

By MARK NICHOLS

When I was very young, I wanted to be an airplane pilot. When I got over that, I decided I wanted to be a writer.

This was because I had been reading the books of a man called Thomas Wolfe and thought they were very beautiful and it was a fine thing to be a writer.

In order to this, and because I wanted to write about the living world I saw and wanted to do it right away, I started to write for newspapers.

I've had a lot of fun doing it, and that's how I come to be writing in this column under the words that I found in the works of a wonderful man whose writing I heard read this summer by Michael Kane at the Stratford Festival.

What can a campus journalist talk about?

There are times when we all wonder.

The campus journalist, so-called, ought to write about the things he sees and what they mean. He ought to interpret and describe.

Because of the pressure of reporting the day-to-day and not-so-exciting news that happens on campus, we often don't have time of space or write about what is really important to us.

And there are times we wonder if anyone would read it if we did.

But there are things we can't stop thinking about.

Like the young man you had classes with for two years before he told you one day in the Arbor Room about his past and the whole world of vacant images you had built around your casual relationship with him exploded.

Something about gun-shots in the night, highjacking radios and refrigerators along the New Jersey coast, and a long path of life that lead him to the University of Toronto.

This is what he talked about, whether you believe it or not.

And there are others you meet, Americans from St. Mike's who tell you: "In Canada there is real freedom left. The States are too developed, too organized. That's why I'm coming here to live."

Or the writer you know who flunked his year three times and spent most of it in an unbelievable sort of spiritual agony because he wanted to say something and couldn't.

Or the lovely girl you met for ten minutes one day. The girl who you dragged out of the Wallace Room to pose for The Varsity in the doorway of Hart House.

The same girl who died this summer under a falling boulder in the Canadian Rockies.

And there is a whole world, a world that grows through the first gusts of leaves across Queen's Park, vegetates with the old men on the benches in the same park when the snow piles up around the bandstand, and slips into a fantastic misfocus during the panic of exams and the budding of yellow leaves in the spring.

Sum it all up, and you may have a book, you may have one image, one idea to live with forever, you may have hate or love, or excitement or despair.

Sum it all up, no matter what it has been, and you have life, for good or bad.

This is something to write about.

U of T ticket sales for Saturday's McGill football game totalled about half of those sold for last year's McGill game.

Only 514 tickets were sold this year compared to 1,075 last year, but the game last year was a crucial one later in the season.

Industrial Philanthropy Swells College Funds

A recent survey indicates that Canadian industry donated an average of $15 an employee to Canadian universities in 1957.

The survey of 127 companies "representing a fairly complete cross-section of Canadian industry and commerce" was made by the Industrial Foundation on Education.

Of every dollar donated, the announcement said, 58.5 cents were allocated to capital expenditures. Fourteen cents were given for unrestricted use and 10.1 cents for student aid.

A breakdown of companies into categories shows mining and quarrying companies lead the list with donations of $40.50 an employee. Next highest group was food and beverages with $37 an employee while the lowest-ranking group was construction with $4.00 an employee.

No significant difference in the amount given for each employee was shown between large and small firms. Companies numbering 101 to 500 people gave an average of $4,720, the report said, while those with a staff exceeding 10,000 gave $213,860.

Soccer Blues Whip Mac To Open Defence Of Title

By NORM SHEPHERD

HAMILTON — Varsity made a good start to their Intercollegiate series when both Senior and Intermediate Soccer teams scored impressive wins over their McMaster opponents here Saturday.

Both teams registered shut-outs as the Senior Blues won 4-0 and the Baby Blues scored five unanswered tallies.

Starting their game against a strong wind and an eager McMaster team, the Senior Blues took quite a time to settle down, and had several anxious moments before Bruno Bertolin put the Varsity out ahead with a splendid goal on a pass from Bill Webb.

Late in the first half the same two players combined again to score the second Varsity goal when Webb slammed the ball into the Marauders' net.

The second half was dominated by Varsity offensive play, and this led to a continual bombardment of the McMaster net. The Blues' backs and half-backs kept the attack well supplied with pin-point passes and it was only a matter of time before Varsity extended their lead.

Emil Primorac was the Varsity forward who scored with a hard shot from close in. Bill Webb tallied the fourth and final Blues goal as he pushed home a loose ball in the McMaster goalmouth.

Vello Soots in the Toronto nets was not severely tested during the whole game, but he did everything required with confidence. Paul Avis and Jim Watson were solid in defense and cleared their lines in professional fashion.

Captain Ron Williams and Cabby Green played their usual forcing game, while the forwards were well lead by two-goal Webb. Bruno Bertolin, a newcomer to the Varsity team was the best player on the field and should be a great asset in future games. Brian Michez turned in a creditable performance at the unusual position for him, of right wing.

The Intermediate team had no difficulty in beating a scratch McMaster team. They scored four unanswered tallies in the first half and registered one in the final period.

Within five minutes of the opening whistle Pete Casey scored on a cross from his left-wing position, and shortly after George Walker put the Baby Blues two goals ahead as he took a long pass down the centre of the field and lobbed the ball over the advancing keepers' head.

Mike Mahon increased the Varsity lead as he banged home the rebound from his own free-kick, and Walker added another just before the half-time whistle.

During the second half the Baby Blues, with the wind at their back, pressed relentlessly and only terrific netminding by the McMaster goalkeeper kept the game from being a rout. Stew Bell was the only Blues player to beat him as he scored the fifth and final goal for the Blues.

Queen's are alone in the cellar, winless in two starts.

In Intercollegiate play, however, with the peculiar off-off rule, standings can mean very little as the season progresses.

A playoff is necessary if two teams are tied for first place at the close of the regular schedule, or if the team which finishes second has defeated the first-place team.

Discounting a surprise upset by McGill or Queen's, that means Varsity faces the task of winning two more games from John Metras' crew.

It's no mean task.

Despite latest reports from Western that returnee half Neil Desborough has been declared ineligible, Mustangs will have linemen Ted Roman and Tom White in action Saturday.

Both missed the first game, won 26-20 by Varsity. White was sidelined with an ankle injury, and Roman by a heavy cold.

Mustangs, obviously out for blood after their 46-16 shellacking of Queen's last Saturday, will face a fired-up crew of title-hungry Blues.

Injury-free after their 35-13 win over McGill, Blues shunted through a sweat-suit workout last night, and stopped early to run through movies of the Redmen game.

Even to the innocent bystander on the sidelines of the Trinity field, it was obvious the McGill tilt had only poured more pep into the Blues.

Saturday's game goes at the usual 2 o'clock starting time, and conjecture is that the largest crowd of several college seasons will look on.

Douglas (Peahead) Walker, governor of Sam Etcheverry's football team, once dropped the comment that "it (football) is like marriage. Everybody wants what he hasn't got."

That philosophy was directed mainly at the professional teams (who can afford what they haven't got), but holds an element of truth for our good ol' college game as well.

All four intercollegiate teams want the Yates Cup. Only one — Western Mustangs — has it, so their immediate desires are subordinate to a few other wants.

The wants include chaps like Britton, Casanova, Creighton, Langhorne, Givrin, etc. And, if latest reports are factual, a wisp of lightning called Neil Desborough.

Former Western Gazette sports editors Butch Powell (who apparently aspires to employment with The Varsity sportsmen) gave with the info that "Des" has been filed away as a "special student" and becomes ineligible.

Varsity Blues also want the historical hunk of silverware, and the way the team has played in the first two games, Coach Dalt White couldn't want too much else — except, perhaps, a display equal to that which beat Western 26-20.

If last night's light workout could be taken as any indication, it appears Dalt may get just that. Spicy spirit and grim guts — sounds unhealthy but it's truthful description.

Blues, who have probably set an intercollegiate record by playing two games without a sidelining injury, are as ready to face Western as they ever will be.

It is not often that a college team gets away to as sparkling a start as Varsity this year. The season's first game usually resembles a pack of wild horses (no pun, Western) trying the seventh at Woodbine.

Not so in '58. Varsity came out a'roarin' and caught the Mustangs off-guard, off-tackle and off the option, too. And it's not likely Blues will find as much success with the latter play as they did in the first game.

McGill had it defended better than Western, and once Mr. Metras has reviewed the films, Reid, Joyce and Aston may experience considerably more difficulty in executing their distance sprints.

Critics of the first Varsity-Western game pointed to Toronto's pass defence as a weakness. Western would exploit — particularly with a pair of rocket-launchers called Cosentino and Turner.

Down in Montreal, Varsity proved it ain't so. Tackling was improved greatly, and the bulwarks tossed at Dick Carr aerials were virtually immovable.

In short: Varsity has good defence to both ground and air assaults, a powerful running attack, consistent pass success (seven out of 11 against McGill) and the spirit and determination to go all the way.

Western has equally versatile and powerful ground and air attacks, a rapidly-improving defensive unit, and undoubtedly a similar dosage of rah-rah.

But those ingredients face to face on a battlefield, and you'll encounter a display of fireworks sufficient to cause Canadian National Exhibition directors some concern over their "unbeatable" 12-minute show each CNE night.

Regardless of the outcome, there'll be mass bedlam and relieved relaxation after 60 minutes of football Saturday afternoon.

Don't Miss It!

mers sitting on the edge of the pool?

beating the women's intercollegiate records!

It's not like this with the men's swim team. Not only did they hold intercollegiate records last year, but they broke and set Canadian records. This is not explicable solely in the American Olympic champion Yorzky, or Canadian back-stroke champion, John Ridpath. The records were set by the trained team as a whole.

The women's swim team is only exemplary of a general apathy.

Why is the par so low for women?

In the first place, there is a lack of facilities (which is being remedied). But often, even what facilities there are not used to the greatest advantage. How often is UC back-campus crowded at noon hours with teams — men or women? And how often are swim-

Secondly, women don't train as men do — or even think of it. "Just get out and play! It doesn't matter if you're not good; neither is anyone else." No wonder we won't have top-notch competitors!

Thirdly, the true fire, the drive and dedication of a real athlete, isn't there. Who wants to physically and mentally exhaust themselves by swimming one and a half miles a night for a month? Who wants to "live intensely," and discipline social activities just to be in some meet or tournament? — Mary Munn does, the men's swim team does, the Blues do, the Canadians do, any real competitors for a championship do.

It's not a crime, women, and it actually does pay off. Let's train to bring Varsity the top honors the men do.

Montreal Train Ride Said "Disgusting Brawl"

The annual, late-night train ride to Montreal for the McGill-Toronto game has been described, this year, as "one, big disgusting brawl."

"Travellers on the special CPR train to Montreal Friday night said yesterday conditions in the coaches were a serious weakness in the annual weekend.

Though nothing as serious as last year's near-accident when students on the McGill-bound train pulled the emergency-stop cord near a bridge-trestle, students on the train say the bedlam-like conditions caused several fights and bottles spilled the length of the coaches.

Main factor in the disorderliness on the train was the unequal proportion of male and female students travelling.

Single girls, travelling mostly in pairs, frequently found themselves beset by as many as 10 men at one time.

Fights broke out when boys with girls had to defend their dates from wandering revellers who were on the prowl most of the night up and down the train.

Some couples stayed most of the night in one seat with only minor disturbances from the roaming bands.

Other groups, travelling together, set up tables and played cards most of the trip, while others sang and some single travellers read.

Students had only praise for the CPR police who patrolled the cars. The police turned a blind eye on most infractions of the railway company's rules, traditionally broken on football weekends. There was no indication of the crackdown expected after last year's dangerous ride.

Police joined students in singing and stopped to chat as they made their rounds. Several times, police tolerantly put up with insults and excessive displays of friendship from over-enthusiastic students.

Generally speaking, the wild partying — described by one undergraduate as "like something out of Fitzgerald" — continued through the night giving few a chance for needed sleep.

The train, which started late, arrived in Montreal as boisterously as it had left Toronto, at about 11.30 a.m. Saturday.

Big Turnout At All-Varsity Hop

A capacity crowd filled Hart House Friday night for the second annual All-Varsity Fall Dance.

Over 1,600 students attended the dance — 500 more than last year.

The dance was primarily to acquaint freshman students with the various activities of the House. Most of the clubs had representatives on hand to give out information.

Although the dance was well attended, Undergraduate Secretary John Becker, said, the majority were seniors.

Male students turned out en masse for the dance. At one point there were almost 200 boys in excess, due to a mistake in the door count, Becker said.

A fourth orchestra was hired to take care of the large numbers expected.

A report by an independent research institute indicates that students here last year consumed so many bottles of beer that if they were laid end to end they would probably never get up.

Committee Starts On Nfcus Books

By DOUG MARSHALL
Varsity Editor-in-chief

OTTAWA, Oct. 7 (CUP) — A committee of six student presidents appointed to "examine in greater detail" the audits and financial statements of the National Federation of Canadian University Students is "working well" today.

The committee was appointed in an emergency plenary session called last night after the second day of the Nfcus conference here.

Session was called after "dissatisfaction" was expressed by some delegates with progress of the Nfcus finance and administration commission.

Basis of the dissatisfaction was the vagueness of certain budget measures. Some presidents felt they needed more explicit ideas of Nfcus expenditures to present to their councils back home.

The motion calling for the special committee was moved by Toronto and seconded by the University of Montreal. It was passed 34 to 23 with 17 abstentions.

Opposition to the motion was voiced by Manitoba and Dalhousie, who felt the committee would be merely "auditing the auditors."

Another sub-committee set up in the finance commission recommended today a minimum of 75 students for next year's Nfcus Travel Bureau. The committee said practical operation of the bureau could be carried out only with this number.

Other highlight of today's session was a recommendation that a letter of support be sent the United States National Students Association approving their policy on integration.

Cause of the recommendation, made by the international affairs commission, was the presence of Will Johnson, USNSA vice-president.

Johnson told delegates a youth protest march on Washington had been organized by integrationist Martin Luther King. Some 5,000 students, protesting education policies of southern states, will converge on the capital Oct. 25 from various eastern points.

Johnson said the USNSA endorsed the march and some members will participate in it. Purpose of the march is to draw attention to the moral side of the racial conflict. The US government has endorsed the legal aspects of integration but has made no comment on the moral angle, Johnson said.

The commission recommended a letter supporting the USNSA be sent to Washington.

Also passed by the commission was a motion giving moral support to Algerian students and recommending financial support be sent. It was suggested this could be organized through World University Service by students' councils on individual campuses.

Only major topic discussed in the National Affairs Commission was a suggestion by Memorial University that local Nfcus bodies arrange discounts on student books and supplies. The motion was carried.

Meds Student Association Offers To Help Out Nfcus

By DOUG MARSHALL
Varsity Editor-in-chief

OTTAWA, Oct. 7—CUP—Several interesting tributaries are draining into the main stream of business at the five-day conference of the national federation of Canadian university students here this week.

Most important of these is an offer by the Canadian Association of Medical Students and Internes to handle student briefs on income tax and unemployment insurance for Nfcus.

CAMSI President-elect Jules Harris of Toronto, an observer at the conference, made the offer Monday.

Bissell Boosts Rivals In Speech In Montreal

MONTREAL (CUP) — University of Toronto President Claude Bissell flew a high flag here on behalf of two traditional rivals — the Universities of McGill and Toronto.

The fates of both universities have always been closely related, Bissell said. It would be a "tragedy" if either of these two universities were to be weakened in any way.

The U of T president was speaking at the annual McGill University Fall Convocation, where he received an honorary Doctor of Laws degree from McGill.

"Tradition and circumstances have given to McGill and Toronto positions of unusual national authority," he said. "Their strength ordains that they have peculiarly heavy responsibilities."

Especially important is the field of graduate studies which are more important to the country's welfare than ever before.

Weakening of either university through lack of support or by abandonment of academic standards would be a "tragedy," he said.

Maintaining his "belligerent" theme of the opening address to U of T students, the President said it was "particularly appropriate that universities should celebrate the role of the individual."

"Canadian universities have not been created by government fiat. They have always grown out of the passionate conviction, the energy, and the persuasiveness of individuals."

Delegates in the Nfcus National Affairs Commission generally approved the suggestion but gave no official mandate to CAMSI. Both CAMSI and Nfcus want tuition fee income to be non-taxable and improvement in unemployment insurance for students.

With Nfcus pre-occupied with the federal scholarship campaign, Harris said CAMSI could speak for Nfcus on income tax and unemployment insurance. He said the medical organization will have a brief in the field by Christmas.

"Ponderous machinery of Nfcus makes it impossible for the federation to deal with more than one project at a time," Harris said. "We will go ahead with our plans whether we get a mandate or not."

The Nfcus commission did mandate the university of Toronto to cooperate with CAMSI in its operations.

Prisoners Suffer In Dentistry Trial

Dentistry sophomores completed their conquest of the freshman class last night with the mock trials and dance held at the Odd Fellows Temple.

Sophs retaliated for the kidnapping of their president Jack Hanvey by kidnapping freshman Sy Talsky. Talsky was dumped into Lake Ontario in shorts with a feather tied to his head and forced to hop about in the water.

He escaped later after being tied to a tree on Cherry Beach.

The trials last night were termed "a hilarious success". Freshmen were tried by a jury of the Dentistry Students Society for various sins that included skipping initiation ceremonies.

Prosecutor Jim Monelli passed sentence on the convicted. Girls were forced to straddle pop cases in their bare feet while blindfolded and walk the aisle.

Other offenders were blindfolded and had grapes and eggs dropped into their mouths.

One initiate was told he had to take a pretty lady's measurements with a six-inch rule. He did not see because of his blindfold, a male soph change places with her, complete with grapefruits.

Two others were sent out with salt sellers to capture twelve pigeons. Still others had to feed each other Coca-Cola while blindfolded and using nipples.

A dance following the trials broke up about midnight.

The kidnapping of Talsky was the seventh kidnapping of the season. One fourth year Dents observer said last night: "I'm hoping to be kidnapped tonight myself. I understand there are 800 girls from Vic and UC waiting outside for me."

ON TRIAL: A pretty Dentistry coed is on the stand for the crime of being a freshman. The mock trials last night ended Dents' initiation week with a pigskin punch.

Pass Resolution Against Duplessis

The University College Literary and Athletic Society yesterday passed a resolution condemning the firing of three Quebec undergraduate newspaper editors who had criticized the Duplessis regime.

At its first open meeting of the year, the Society also passed a resolution, moved by Tony Charlton (IV UC), pressing the Students' Administrative Council to "use every practicable, financial, real and tangible influence, means or resource at its command" to combat the "thwarting of freedom of discussion and criticism in the student press of Quebec."

The original motion, by Mike Rasminsky (IV UC) also blasted the interference of Quebec politicians in the educational system of that province.

A third motion censuring the firing of Prof. H. Crowe from his position at Winnipeg's Union College was tabled.

Also tabled was the executive's new budget. An expenditure of $10,010, nearly $1,500 more than last year, is called for.

In the works are marked increases in the literary, debating and athletic allotments, especially in the grants to the "Undergrad" and "The Gargoyle, UC's literary and news publications.

The budget, to be voted on at the next open meeting, also calls for purchase of a duplicating machine.

Nominations were open for several positions, including SAC representative, social director and freshman president.

Nominations close Thursday at four and elections will be held on Oct. 17.

U of T Students Get Fellowships

Fifteen out of 25 Ontario graduate students were awarded Woodrow Wilson Fellowships this year were from U of T.

The fellowships, awarded on the basis of a faculty nomination and oral interview, provide $1,400 plus tuition for post-graduate work leading to an M.A. or Ph.D. in teaching.

U of T students chosen were: David Abbey, Herrance Bailey, William Barnes, David Bernhardt, Gerald Helleiner, Elaine Lennox, William Metcalfe, Robert Storey, Barry Stroud, Nansi

Swayze, Cameron Tolton, John Van Seters, Kenneth Wright, Hannelore Correll, and Robert Crummy.

A $25,000,000 grant from the Ford Foundation this year increased the number of fellowships from 300 to 1,000. Awards are made annually throughout Canada and the United States.

Graduates are free to study where they wish but are encouraged to attend other universities.

In charge of U of T nominations is Professor David Savan of the philosophy departments.

happy times...

Years ago, when people had nothing better to do, canasta swept the continent. Everybody played the game and talked about it.

Later, rock and roll music was identified as the leading craze. Folk music followed, then ivy league clothes.

Sports cars, when possible, trips to Europe, turtle neck sweaters, beat literature, angry young men, high fidelity sets, bull-fights posters and Japanese movies have since occupied the spare time of the intellegensia.

For those contented with less edifying pursuits, there remain hula-hoops, barbecue grills for the backyard and a vast assortment of do-it-yourself kits.

Today, on our campus, noted for its solemn appreciation of the art of politics, a combination of the do-it-yourself idea and a sort of anyone-can-do-it attitude has resulted in the sudden birth of two new "political" parties.

We, say the founders of one of these, are fed up with the bombastic solemnity of the established campus parties.

They deplore "the pomposity of the youthful jackanapes who have hitherto posed and danced in the public gaze."

They seek to restore to public life on campus the elements now missing—humour, sanity, and common sense.

As for the other new party, they too denounce established political parties for "dogmatic ranting." Announcing general no policy this second new party stands firm on only one issue—that the welfare of students in Quebec must be defended.

"Communists and fascists," they add, "will not find a home in their new party."

While relieved to hear this, we wonder just what the purpose of this sudden birth of political anarchy portends.

Perhaps just the old adage: fight fire with fire.

The Place of Unions

By SAM AJZENSTAT

Recent revelations in the United States of the prominence of racketeers in trade unions have been used by anti-union groups to discredit the trade union philosophy. But the real problem is not one of union racketeering. Any organization whatsoever provides opportunity for graft and the racketeer will take graft where he finds it. The real problems, problems that can only be obscured by a facile linking of unions and corruption in the public mind, are (1) is the philosophy of trade unionism, as pursued by honest trade unionists, morally and economically tenable? (2) are the trade unions pursuing their traditional and legal activities with an overabundance of arrogance and (3) do any of us have the right to deplore the attitude of the unions?

These basic issues will be thrashed out tomorrow night when Eugene N. Forsey — CLC research director will be the guest at a Hart House debate, considering the resolution "This House deplores the present arrogance of Canadian trade unions."

The philosophy of trade unions is the philosophy of capitalism. In practice trade unions have accepted from capitalism both its economics and its morality and in return have given capitalism, both economically and morally, a new lease on life. Without trade unions capitalism would be obsolete. Unlike a totally equalitarian socialism, capitalism is characterized by a hierarchy of economic levels and if such a system is to survive each level as such, apart from the possibility of rising into a higher one must have a stake in the system as well as a degree of interdependence with other levels.

In other words, capitalism can continue functioning as sane economics only so long as it is in the best interests of management to satisfy the needs of labour and in the best interests of labour to satisfy the needs of management. Ignorance of the first part of this statement on the part of management has made for great inequalities in the distribution of wealth and the consequent near obsolescence of capitalism.

The formation of trade unions has helped enormously to redress the balance. And more — the unions, as representing the aspirations and needs of the workers, as making articulate the lower levels of the economic hierarchy, have made interplay between levels possible and have given capitalism the opportunity to return to a morality in which everyone looks after everyone else, the only morality in which capitalism can work.

Far from leading to a socialistic welfare state, trade unionism offers capitalism a return to health and a continued vigour and flexibility.

Unions then are an integral part of modern capitalism. If the unions flounder in their morality, if they put inordinate pressures on the system, it is because they, like management, are being hindered by an insidious amorality, alien to the spirit of capitalism that has been imposed, on the economic plane, by short-sightedness and on the moral plane by greed.

No arrogance can be laid at the door of unionism that has not shot itself through the whole capitalistic system. Arrogance, greed, and corruption cannot be deplored in unions alone, they are to be deplored in the whole of our economic organization and even then, trade unions, in their deepest premises and practical utility continue to emerge as the strongest weapons in the hands of those in our society working toward the mitigation of these evils and the revitalization of our economy.

To remain steadfast in the double standard of the old capitalism is sheer hypocrisy. Only when we recognize the evils we face as permeating us all, management as well as labour, can all levels of our society be free to make capitalism a system that is the finest economics and the highest morality.

by john brooks

While Varsity and Western dig in for at least 120 more minutes of excitement, Intercollegiate football is experiencing a rebirth elsewhere in our fair Dominion.

By next season, three western colleges will compete in the first Western Canadian Intercollegiate Football Union since a student plebiscite at University of Manitoba killed the league back in 1949.

In 1960, U of M is expected to rejoin the league, rounding out a four-team circuit to parallel our eastern Intercollegiate loop.

From present indications, University of British Columbia Thunderbirds rest as logical choice for the 1959 championship. They have been playing against U.S. teams in the coastal Evergreen Conference.

University of Alberta has not seen its Golden Bears in action for nine years, and much the same situation exists at University of Saskatchewan.

The latter teams will concentrate on intra-squad games this season, attempting to round suitable material into shape for next autumn's debut.

Travelling costs were a major factor in halting western college football nine years ago. But university enrolment is increasing, bringing a greater number of potential customers at the grid clashes.

And with that increase, of course, comes more shekels to the tills of athletic directors (they being gentlemen whose financial problems often out-worry a maternity ward waiting room).

As with any "new" venture, it may be some time before the WCIFU overcomes the obstacles that are sure to present themselves.

And it will most certainly be some time before the calibre of play throughout the league reaches that achieved by our eastern Intercollegiate quartet.

But it would not be out of the question to envisage, for the future, a meeting between the eastern and western loop winners for a Canadian Intercollegiate championship.

And with mention of that possibility, I leave off discussion. For there is nothing more futile than arguing with one's self the pros and cons of a complete inter-locking schedule.

FROM THE BLUE ROOM

Edward Arnold, a close friend of mine who guides the grid fortunes of Trinity's female footballers, sees a great season for his gals. . . He's found a new secret weapon called the Ball-Joynt Extension. . . It comes from a pair of rookies called Laurel Ball and Betty-Lou Joynt. . . If that last name is familiar, you're quite right. . . And you know how Larry can play football. . .

From the arch rivals at Victoria comes the following message. . . Sally ("I'm a good defensive quarterback") Potter promises a glaring, daring, sw—ing gold. . . she also expressed some concern over the Scarlet and Squid's lack of a coach. . . let's go, men. . .

FROM THE BLUE ANTE ROOM

Notice that Ron Stewart is finally going to get a starting assignment with Ottawa Rough Riders. . . His only pro play to date was briefly in the Ottawa-Hamilton game in Philadelphia a few weeks back. . . Coach Frank Clair probably won't be disappointed in the little bomb's play. . .

Any eager fans travelling to the Grey Cup game can take advantage of a healthy rich-man's deal. . . one travel agency from Montreal is booking a tour complete with all the Cup trimming plus a 13-day jaunt to Hawaii. . . only costs $360 in all. . .

Don't forget intramural track in the Stadium today. . . and if your sights are set high, the university championship meet is carded for a week from tomorrow. . . Starting gun 1:30 in both. . .

Full Night Grid Schedule Seen For 1959 Season

University of Toronto athletic director Warren Stevens has indicated he will seek a full night schedule of home games for Varsity Blues next season.

This suggestion was forthcoming after 12,500 fans turned out for the Varsity-Western game on September 26. It was the first night game ever played in Intercollegiate ball.

Influencing the decision—which will require agreement by the other three teams before finaliza-tion—was the fact that Toronto Argonauts will move to the CNE next year.

Being in a separate park would enable Argos to schedule a home game on the same Saturday afternoon as Blues were playing here.

That detraction is something UTAA officials wish to avoid, and Friday night games appear to be the solution, particularly because the lights are installed and fully paid for.

Mr. Stevens said he expects a crowd of 20,000 to watch the Varsity-Western game here this Saturday, and added that the crowd would probably be more had the game been scheduled for Friday night.

The 12,500 customers who watched the opening game did not represent a great increase over the average for college games here, but the game was played only two days after term opened.

Blue notes. . . Aside from scrapes and bruises, Blues are healthy for Saturday's crucial clash. . . Mustang's Bob Miller was injured against Queen's, and may be out of the lineup. . . but Ted Roman, Tom White and Jim Edgar will be back.

Mustang coach Metras was asked before the first game here how he felt about his team, and replied: "Why, I'm not even playing John of my best players". . .

Yea, John. . .

Further dope from London suggests Lionel Conacher is having trouble hanging onto the ball, and is not a bit happy over it. . . can anyone see any player giving Peter Joyce and the Little Train a run for the all-star fullback positions? . . .

Irish Threaten Trinity Crown

The annual intramural track meet will be held in Varsity Stadium this afternoon, with the first event scheduled for 1:30. Trinity is defending champion of the meet.

Intramural officials said yesterday that St. Mike's has recorded a heavy entry list, whereas Trinity is entering fewer people than in the past.

The latter college is reportedly planning a heavy entry for the university championship meet a week from tomorrow.

The intramural meet is open to all competitors except those who may have been members of the Intercollegiate senior team in past years.

Points are recorded for the T. A. Reed Trophy race, with both individual and team efforts being recognized.

The university meet is an open program, with the Intercollegiate senior and intermediate teams being chosen from the winners.

Trinity Moved To Group One For Football

Trinity opens the intramural season a week from today, meeting Senior Skule on the Back Campus at 4 o'clock.

Thursday's games pit Victoria against St. Mike's and Forestry against Pharmacy. Friday, Meds meet Dents, and University College battles Junior Skule.

Trinity, Senior SPS, Vic and St. Mike's form Group One, with the other teams in Group Two. At the close of the regular schedule, the top three teams from each group enter the playoffs.

A seventh team—Victoria Seconds—is a possible entry in the second group, but definite word in that regard won't be forthcoming this week.

Challenge

Belligerent medsmen last night threw a four-barrelled challenge in the teeth of Skule for competition in four events at the med-sponsored Panacea Oct. 17 in Hart House.

A proclamation, issued by Ken Adam (II Meds), stated: "being superior in all attributes, including those athletic, the faculty of medicine hereby challenges the faculty of engineering to athletic competition at Panacea."

Competition is to take place in volleyball, basketball, water polo and squash.

Stricken McGill Gets Big Grant

MONTREAL, (CUP) — Financially pressed McGill University has received a sizeable grant from the J. W. McConnell Foundation—to finance completely the new engineering building and to provide an extensive scholarship system.

The grants, totalling $4,500,000, bring the amount contributed by J. W. McConnell through the foundation to more than $10 million.

Senior governor of McGill, McConnell has come to the assistance of the university on many occasions. The announcement was made by President Cyril James at McGill's annual Fall Convocation.

Laying of the cornerstone of the new engineering building was performed by McGill Chancellor R. E. Powell.

The McConnell grants included $2 million for scholarships in the faculties of Science and Engineering. These will be administered to provide $100,000 annually for Science and Engineering. These will be administered to provide $100,000 annually for science and engineering students.

The underwriting of the cost of the engineering building will allow McGill to continue her vast expansion program in other parts of the university.

MICHAEL LETHBRIDGE (with steel measuring tape) 1955 graduate of University of Toronto. Now a Plant Engineer at the Bell, he is shown here working on a project to provide telephone service for a new apartment development in the west end of Toronto.

To give you a first-hand account of some of the jobs at the Bell, we asked Michael Lethbridge to report on his first year with the Company. Here are his comments:

"My first month was spent with an experienced Bell employee, getting the feel of the job, the problems and the territory. After a couple of months I was given responsibility for a number of projects. My biggest one to date was the planning and directing of a $160,000 cable job.

"What I like most about my work is that I can plan the various projects, issue the necessary orders, then go out into the field and see the job take shape. About 40% of my time is spent outdoors so that I'm not tied to my desk. And I have the opportunity to work with the contractors and architects and to meet our residential customers.

"In addition to on-the-job training, I attend special courses. These seem to come along at just about the right time to be of the most value to me.

"Quite a number of my friends at the University have also joined the Bell. Be sure you talk to the Bell Employment Officer when he visits the campus. He's sure to have a job which will just suit you!"

New Monarchist Party Into Political Ruckus

By VICKY INNES
Varsity Staff Reporter

In the wake of announcements of the formation of two new campus political parties, the existence of a non-political group with political aims was disclosed last night.

Toronto chairman of the Monarchist Movement of North America, John Rung —IV SMC— said his movement "is designed to promote the monarchy as an institution of government."

But the movement is not a political party and will not contest parliamentary elections with other campus groups, he added.

"The object of our organization is not to contest parliamentary elections because we do not subscribe to any particular economic philosophy."

"Our aim is to promote the institution of monarchy within the political sphere," he said.

"Our reason for this policy is that we feel a re-emphasis of spiritual values in our civilization can only be fully achieved in the political sphere by the re-stressing of monarchical systems," he added.

The movement has been in existence since early January, Rung said.

"We have groups in Toronto, Buffalo, and Bradford, Pa.," he said. The three groups have a total membership of about 25, he added, and the movement has a constitution and an official hierarchy.

The central official of the movement is the secretary-general, who has his headquarters in Bradford. Rung declined to name the official, but said he was of Dutch extraction and was a member of "an ancient and noble Lowlands family."

When queried as to how the movement intended to implement its aims the Toronto chairman said the movement has not been active up to now. "We do not subscribe to fanaticism in the movement," he said.

The group's tactics for the moment are intellectual and social penetration of all ranks of both American and Canadian society by means of personal contact, Rung said.

Plans are to sponsor conferences and other events so members can exchange their views and arrive at common ideals, he said.

"In this way we are confident our aims and ideals will gradually disseminate throughout society and so help to revitalize our declining civilization."

The Toronto chairman could not say just how the movement had come into being. "It was just a coming-together of people who had the same thoughts on the monarchy as an institution of government," he said.

At present the movement has no known counterpart on other continents, "but we hope that with time our present methods will bear fruit throughout the world," he said.

The Toronto monarchist closed with a reaffirmation of the movement's desire not to become involved in the political arena. "We're not looking for headlines," he said.

The Toronto branch of the movement would hold a meeting later this month, Rung said. He extended a cordial invitation to all those interested in the movement to attend the gathering.

UC's Committee To Check Chances On A New Union

Groundwork is being laid for the long-sought University College Student Union.

The green light to set up a committee to investigate possibilities of a student union came yesterday at a meeting of UC Literary and Athletic Society.

Overwhelming approval came from students in the jam-packed Junior Common Room.

The committee, proposed by Society Vice-President Jane Weber, will be appointed by the Lit executive to study the problem.

If approval is given to the committee's plans, it will be the end of a long uphill fight by successive student groups.

UC Principal F. C. A. Jeanerret has been a long-time supporter of the idea of a student union for UC, but until now every move to make plans have met with difficulties.

When U of T expansion plans were released last year it was hoped room might have been reserved for a UC union, but this hope faded when it was discovered no such space had been set aside.

Independent plans for the union also foundered when the question of finance was raised by members of the student executive.

It would be impossible for the college to approach alumni immediately for contributions because of the University's funds campaign. The over-all expansion program was more important than a UC student union, it was said.

But last spring much of the campaigning for executive positions on the merged UC Lit and the Women's Undergraduate Association was based on promises of steps towards a union.

Both Lit President Bill Davis and vice-president Jane Weber among union plans one of the strong points of their platform.

The committee will include both Davis and Miss Weber, two alumni members, and two staff representatives.

Once prepared the brief will go to the U of T Board of Governors' college committee before going to the full Board.

All recreational facilities at the college are cramped and have been crowded for several years. All UC students, approaching 2,000 in number, have only one common room in which they may relax or sit and smoke.

The small JCR now has to serve as smoking room, assembly hall, snack bar, lunch room, card den, and social centre for the college—largest in the university.

The proposed union will have executive offices, a theatre, common room, and music rooms.

No athletic facilities will be included in the new building. Hart House and the new Women's Athletic Building will provide any necessary sports facilities.

But the new women's athletic centre will have no accommodation for social activities or common rooms, Miss Weber said.

Increased enrolment at the college is further cramping already crowded facilities, she said.

Present Women's Union building on St. George St. has been considered as a possible site for the proposed union.

OTTAWA, Oct. 8—Toronto delegates to the National Congress of Canadian University Students here last night finished where they usually do—one against the rest.

They were saved by a lady. The controversy came in a debate on "The Rights and Obligations of a Student."

Panel for the symposium included U of T's National Federation of Canadian University Students chairman Bob Lee.

Taking a moderate stand, Lee emphasized student obligations rather than rights. A student's rights are no more than those of an ordinary citizen, he said.

General discussion later in the symposium revealed most Nfcus delegates take a strong stand for the rights of a student—in speech, in protest, and in control of university administration.

As debate progressed, other delegates climbed on the bandwagon to protest Toronto's "timidity."

Five Toronto delegates rose one by one to approve of protest but to ask that reason rather than ranting be employed.

An eloquent Toronto defense came from Students' Administrative Council vice-president Adrienne Poy.

Miss Poy, well-armed with literate quotations, backed up Toronto's stand with an appeal for "introspection" and not "slo-ganism" on the part of the students.

The present educational system in Quebec was general background for the debate.

Roy Heenan, McGill student president, urged that strike action taken by Quebec students last year was the only answer in that situation. He said it had been "maturely" carried out and could be considered successful.

Gabriel Gagnon, Nfcus vice-president for international affairs, told delegates Quebec is not the only province in Canada where such action is needed.

A motion on students' rights will probably emerge from today's plenary session on the last day of the conference.

ski said his party was willing to accept any challenges to debate issued by other parties.

Last Monday, Liberal President Jim Doris challenged the CCF to debate "Resolved that the world has no need for socialism." He said his party was making the offer because it didn't think a proposed debate with the campus Conservatives should include the CCF.

He said the inclusion of the CCF in a debate on the topic "Resolved that the Frost government is aged, incompetent and irresponsible," would turn the debate into a mere exchange of political speeches.

Dembski said last night that is what would happen anyway. "The CCF don't feel they should be blackmailed out of the Frost debate," he said.

He said all debates on campus should be open to all three parties, since all three are represented on both federal and provincial political scenes.

"The only reason for our exclusion," he said, "is that we can offer an independent opinion on the matter, whereas the other two parties cannot."

Doris said last night the Liberal-Conservative debate will take place some time in the week of Oct. 27.

Nfcus Renews Aid Stand

By DOUG MARSHALL

Varsity Editor-in-Chief

OTTAWA, Oct. 8—The National Conference of Canadian University Students today reaffirmed its stand on aid to higher education with only one major change.

In a motion passed unanimously by the conference, Nfcus added an amendment that the present scholarship campaign be directed towards increasing existing scholarships, bursaries and loan funds.

Earlier, the plenary session defeated by 54 votes to 15 a new resolution affirming the university education should be free.

The free-education motion was made by the University of Manitoba and seconded by Laval University. Stating that education at all levels is a fundamental and inalienable right of man, it asked Nfcus to strive for progressive abolition of tuition fees.

The motion asked the Nfcus executive to prepare a new brief on this subject and present it to the federal government and general public.

The motion was defeated after several universities expressed disapproval of principles involved.

The session on aid to education grew out of a symposium on the subject held this morning. General result of the symposium was that some sort of aid to higher education was needed immediately.

Students and panelists did not, however, agree as to how and from where such aid should come.

Panelists on the symposium included Dr. Eugene Forsey, who told the symposium he was confident some students were being kept out of universities by poverty.

"This is robbing a democracy of the intellectual leaders it needs and depriving the country of its human natural resources," he said.

Other panelists were Prof. J. L. Pepin of the University of Ottawa's Political Science department, Dr. S. H. Deeks, Executive Director of the Industrial Foundation on Education and T. L. Hoskin, Dean of Men at the University of Western Ontario.

The panel was chaired by Dr. E. F. Sheffield, Research Director of the National Conference of Canadian Universities.

Dr. Deeks said the first thing to do was to co-ordinate present aid systems operating in the 10 provinces.

He said a sufficient number of national prestige scholarships scaled to a student's preformance would solve problems and perhaps relegate the idea of free education to limbo—"the resting place of all weak concepts."

The resolution finally passed late this afternoon was a virtual restatement of the motion adopted by last year's Nfcus conference.

It now reads: "Every worthy and needy Canadian student who meets the entrance requirements of a Canadian university is entitled to receipt of financial aid."

The amendment added by Queen's says the Nfcus scholarship campaign will keep the individual need of students as the primary concern.

Set HHOA Dates Five For Season

The Hart House Orchestra Association has announced that it will present five concerts this winter. The concert dates and programmes were announced following a meeting of the Associate's executive.

Chairman Elmo Ciprietti's report, tabled and adopted at the meeting, revealed that the association was self-sustaining financially last year. The report stated that 548 memberships in the society were distributed to Torontonians music-lovers.

Because of the CBC's decision to broadcast its Symphony Orchestra on Sunday nights instead of Mondays, the executive have decided to present their programmes on Saturday nights, Ciprietti said.

The dates of the HHOA concerts, and the programmes, are as follows: Nov. 1 (all-Mozart), Dec. 6 (all-Vivaldi), Jan. 10 (Manfredini, Tchaikovsky, Locatelli), Jan. 21 (all-Handel) and Feb. 14 (Bach and Schubert).

Chairman Ciprietti urged all former members to renew their subscriptions as soon as possible in order that the damage of a late start, occasioned by the CBC decision, may be offset.

Subscriptions for the full five-concert season are on sale at the Hall Porter's Desk in Hart House. U of T students will pay $3.50 for season's tickets; non-students will be charged $7.00 for their subscriptions.

Psychology No Trade Professor Warns Club

A U of T psychology professor has warned students against the assumption that psychology is a "trade".

Dr. H. O. Steer told the members of the U of T Psychology Club at the opening meeting: "If you are looking for a nice, cut-and-dried profession, get out."

He urged future psychologists to find an area of human behavior of vital interest to them, and forget about finding jobs. Satisfaction in the field of psychology will come from continued study and research and not from salary, he said.

The Club's future plans for meetings during the year include speakers, films, discussions and exchange with the Psychology Clubs of McGill and Western.

Membership in the club is open to students in honor psychology, sociology and philosophy, and General Arts, majoring in psychology. Some of the meetings will be open to all students.

Students Meeting In Ottawa For National Nato Conference

OTTAWA, (CUP) — A national seminar on the North Atlantic Treaty Organization will be held here Friday and Saturday to discuss different aspects of NATO and how they affect Canada. Sponsored by the Canadian Atlantic Community Association in co-operation with the National Federation of Canadian University Students, the seminar's delegates will come from universities across Canada.

Representatives from the World Assembly of Youth will also attend the seminar — a national event in most NATO countries.

Those attending the seminar will choose a Canadian delegate to attend a NATO general conference to be held in Paris.

It is expected that at least one delegate from each Canadian university attending the present Nficus conference here will attend the meeting.

Final Plea

We need reporters, those interested in printing a newspaper, interested in knowing how a paper is put out, those interested in saying things about the world, those interested in ideas, in ideological conflicts, those interested in watching and analyzing trends, those concerned with watching the moving race of life.

Also, we need people who are soul-searching and like beer.

McGill Lovers Up For Famed Indecent Statues

MONTREAL, (CUP) — The Three Bares have gone into early hibernation.

The Three Bares — McGill students' name for a statue in which three figures stand nakedly exposed to the public view — has received severe artistic dabbings in past years.

Rampaging football crowds have undertaken to paint the figures into a state of decency in the past.

But this year there will be no such fun — the "Bares" have been hibernated.

During the winter a wooden shed is dropped over the statue to protect it in bad weather. This year the "Bares" are already covered and are likely to remain so if McGill groundskeepers have their way.

It took nine weeks to clean red paint off the figures after a Queen's game last year, they explained.

Skule Problems —No Nite Staff

With Skule Nite auditions under way, Engineers found themselves in serious difficulties last night.

"Due to last minute difficulties," the Engineering revue is without an orchestra leader, producer Karl Harries said last night. Harries called it "a major problem."

Harries will see anyone experienced and interested in the position in the Engineering Stores to-day at 1:10 p.m.

Skule Nite director Hank Malec is still looking for male actors for the show. Skule Nite this year will follow the Engineering tradition and consist of skits and acts.

A "revue-type revue" will best utilize the varied talents available in the School of Practical Science, Malec said.

Auditions continue to night and tomorrow night. The show is going extremely well, Harries said.

"We have been working all summer on the show, and it looks good," Malec said.

Auditions for "Dentantics" also began last night. Dentistry students have abandoned their traditional book show in favor of a revue-type show this year.

salesman

The first play of the current season at Hart House Theatre, "Death Of A Salesman" is now in production, Robert Gill, theater director, said yesterday.

The cast includes Ray Stanner, Maureen Fox, James Lipsett, and George Golden.

"We were indeed fortunate in securing the rights to this play, a Broadway hit for many seasons," he said.

The title role in this play is so rigorous that it has never been played by one actor for more than three months.

Season subscriptions for the four plays are on sale at the theatre until Oct. 16. Ticket sales are at about last year's level, and off-campus sales again lead student subscriptions. Subscription price is $3.00 for the four plays.

Elsewhere in this paper is a news story regarding the 1958-59 program of one of the university's many religious organizations.

The group, it appears, is one step ahead of some of the continent's slickest advertising executive's — at least with regard to timing.

It's slogan is not so slick. Indeed it is not even original. The group calls itself the Christmas Belongs to Christ Committee.

It is an independent organization made up of representatives from every college, faculty and religious club on campus. Its aim, and we quote, is to "recall to the minds of the students of the university and the public in general the true meaning of Christmas."

We read of this activity with more than a little dismay.

Surely Christmas has taken enough of a beating. Surely as the festive season approaches, it will be plain enough for those who want to see, that Christmas is commercialized and that unless people migrate beyond the grasp of civilization, there is not much they can do about it.

Surely a trip along any business street two months from now will make the point clear without a corny echoing of an advertising cliché.

The Christmas Belongs to Christ Committee list four suggestions to interested public and students. They suggest attending carol services, sending Christmas cards with Nativity scenes on them, setting up a Christmas crib in the home and telling the Christmas Story to children.

But carolling is one of the best established traditions on this campus. Cards depicting Nativity scenes probably sell as well if not better than any other kind. Cribs are familiar sights in many homes, as is the Christmas Story one of the most familiar to children.

We submit, with respect, that they are wasting their time here. A more intellectual approach might be more acceptable — and certainly more sensible.

Recently students were informed that 15 out of 25 of Ontario's 1958 university graduates who won Woodrow Wilson fellowships were from U of T.

One was Hagood Hardy, who finished up three years at Trinity last spring and now has a schedule that would make an efficiency expert shudder.

Hagood, as many of you already know, juggled classes with featured appearances as a vibraphonist at the house of Hambourg dividing the last two years of his undergraduate career and wound up by getting star billing at the Towne Tavern in February.

New registered as an MA student in Political Theory here, he is continuing the juggling act at an even greater rate.

This summer he held down a six-week engagement in the Plaza Room and at the same time kept up his weekend appearances at Hombourg and on radio and television.

In September he took his own group to Campbell's Restaurant in London and was successful enough to be booked for a two-hour concert at Western the Friday night before the Toronto football game there.

In case you can't make it to London that weekend — Hagood and his group will be playing at the Varsity Homecoming Show here next week.

The second conversation was with Colin Hamilton who put in four outstanding years in campus theatre as well as topping his Classics class every year but one.

His work since convocation somewhat belies his claim to being "just one of many unemployed actors." He spent the summer at Melody Fair getting his first real taste of the administrative side of theatrical productions.

This summer marked Colin's second appearance on CBC-TV — when he took the lead in General Motor's final show "Biography of a Crime."

Now, after finishing a small part in "Breakthrough"—GM's first production on the ABC network—he's marking time with auditions.

Noted Canadian Laborite Here For Debate Tonight

Honorary visitor at tonight's first Hart House debate of the season will be Dr. Eugene Forsey, research director of the Canadian Labor Congress.

Dr. Forsey has also been active in the CCF party and the academic world.

He graduated, from McGill University in 1925 and was a Rhodes scholar at Balliol College, Oxford, the following year.

From 1929 to 1941 he was on the staff of McGill's Economics and Political Science Department. In 1941 he was awarded a Guggenheim fellowship and earned his doctorate of philosophy.

He has unsuccessfully run for Ontario and federal parliaments on the CCF ticket.

Dr. Forsey is known as an expert on economics research and constitutional law.

He will speak tonight on the topic under debate, "This house deprecates the present arrangement of Canadian trade unions".

The debates begins at 8 p.m. in the HH debates room.

FOUR LOVELY pairs of legs got a stiff workout last night at casting for the upcoming University College Follies.

The Grand Parade...

A new "Be Angular" scheme will predominate this year's "Float Parade" Homecoming Weekend.

The biggest parade in the history of Toronto has been prepared, an official said.

There will be 20 to 23 floats this year, including one from the Red Feather. The emphasis is on originality.

Queen's University band has been invited and will march amid hundreds of beautiful cheerleaders and drum majorettes.

The route is the same as last year, starting at Varsity Stadium, along Bloor, down Yonge, along College and up King's College Road.

Details regarding judges and special guests are not available yet, but will be announced soon.

Committee members are reminded that the last meeting for all final arrangements will be held next Tuesday at 5 p.m. in room 13 of University College.

Plumbing Problems Strike South

Life for residents of Devonshire House is hard these days.

A combination of circumstances has left the occupants of South House without bathrooms. And the crisis shows no signs of being resolved.

It all began two years ago when university authorities decided to gradually replace archaic bathrooms in the residence's three houses. But the project has been plagued with troubles ever since it began.

A strike in the midst of East House renovations last year left residents of one floor bathroom-less for two months. The line-ups were "fantastic", one resident said last night.

Then in March Trinity College offered to buy all three houses. Renovation plans were delayed until the offer was finally refused in August.

Making up for lost time, university authorities had contractors rip out all bathrooms in South House, hoping to get them refurbished by the beginning of term.

But when residents returned, the city was in the grip of a Masons' strike, and all work on the project had ceased.

Now occupants of South House are left with six bare rooms, and a pile of debris in corridors and driveways. They are forced to use facilities in other houses.

"Anything is better than the 1905 vintage bathrooms," one student said last night. "By last summer only one shower in the entire house was functioning."

But real troubles will start in a few weeks. "It will only require a few nippy November nights to speed the innovation of chamber-pots in Devonshire," one resident said.

this was a man

The death late last night of His Holiness Pope Pius XII, Vicar of Rome, and spiritual ruler of some 500 million Roman Catholics throughout the world is an event to excite sadness in the heart of all humanity regardless of religion.

As religious leader of such a vast kingdom of souls, his was a thankless task and a man-killing one.

But in his conduct and bearing in every aspect of his personal and public religious life he presented to man of the twentieth century, bound in such a divergent maze of faiths and lack of faith, the highest image of the religious man.

As a man, religious to the highest degree, or as a man merely human, he gave the world the precious gift of the wise and decent human being.

Those who heard him quipping with reporters at the National Press Club in Washington, D.C., understood this.

Those who saw recently in photographs the face of a Swiss Guard before the Vatican when word of the Pope's illness came can feel this too.

For those who had themselves knelt before this man and felt the quality surrounding one who is elevated above all others for the quality of his faith, there must come an understanding the rest of us cannot conceive.

And even those for whom the tenets of Roman Catholicism are logically repugnant, those to whom the idea of papal infallibility must be nonsense and the structure of the church a bureaucratic imposition upon the liberties of man—even these cannot fail to be moved by the life of the man who had died.

In his person, whether rationally or mystically born, there was the one persistent quality of himself in which man sees most to fear and love, to puzzle over and strive after, to fight for and die.

In the man the world called "father" in a hundred tongues was lodged most firmly the idea of the soul and given to us in its finest form.

the big day

The fortunes of our hectic planet roll on through war and peace. Across this globe human beings suffer, experience joy, pain, sorrow, pity and despair.

We hover on the brink of war, we plunge for terrifying moments into the depths of universal disaster, then pull back with stomach-tearing relief and await the next suspense.

Right now in trenches men fire their weapons, bombs tear limbs apart and the sun rises on a world that may be gone tomorrow.

Through this bilious and eternal condition of life man shows a brave front. Sometimes the front is pleasing and worthwhile, sometimes foolish, absurd.

Today, an average day, as some men connive with hope and fear, bicker and throw bombs in the eternal struggle, hundreds of millions of people will illuminate glass screens and stare with rapt attention at the fortunes of 18 men on a diamond-shaped field.

Such momentous days are only annual.

Too Simple Solution

BY JOHN GRAY

Several days ago Israel's foreign minister, Mrs. Golda Meir, came up with a rather surprising solution to the problems of the troublesome Middle East.

Mrs. Meir was being interviewed shortly before the release of United Nations secretary general Dag Hammarskjöld's report on the Mid-East crisis.

She came up with no prediction as to the contents of the report. But no matter what the report said or recommended, her solution has validity.

She suggested that all countries in the Middle East adhere to the article of the United Nations charter and approach their position as international bargaining agents with a spirit of goodwill and integrity.

There is nothing very obscure about Mrs. Meir's suggestion, and this probably struck most listeners as surprising. In the realms of international diplomacy, the clean-cut beauty as something that is obvious has lost its appeal.

The other aspect of the suggestion is also probably regarded as surprising by most citizens of this weary world.

To the average newspaper reader it must seem that the hope of integrity involving two countries has long since been forgotten as a foolish idealism.

The average newspaper reader's disillusionment with the state of our diplomats is in the same class as the fond hope of Mr. Golda Meir.

Both are right and correct by any scale of values; both are hopelessly naive in the face of what the world now calls foreign policy.

The world over, in every country, foreign policy is guided by selfish greed. Self-interest alone is served in this attitude which sees only economic and political aggrandizement as its goal.

This is of course nothing new, but the tragic aspect is that the world does not seem to see that soon there will be no return — and perhaps that point has already been passed.

The United Nations charter is impractical because it does not take into account the gnawing greed in every leader's plans, the cold calculation that every leader will drive his herd to the brink of war if he thinks he may gain even slightly by it.

Everyone wants peace, for peace is the ideal, the aim of all civilized countries — yet no one wants this peace if it means a temporary deprivation of what other peoples enjoy.

International relations have been shaped and moulded with gain, not peace, in mind. The game of lobbying for promised support, no matter how tenuous the promise, overshadows everything. Extensive aid programs are carried out to gain a friend; deference is paid to self-determination in a small country from which concessions might be drawn.

The big powers have ringed themselves, around the Middle East, prowling as uneasily as jackals, waiting for the scraps from the fight. No peaceful solution is seen, and perhaps none is hoped for.

The problem lies with the leaders of these ignorant armies of national greed. Answers could be found, compromises could be reached, peace could be attained, life could be supported. But it will not — compromise is beyond the ken of the men who guide our destinies.

And the inevitability of this headlong plunge into ignorant oblivion must sadden those who have managed to maintain ideals, to believe in the truth and value of integrity.

This inevitability must add a further tragic aspect to the death last night of Pope Pius XII, a good man, a man who had devoted his life to dreams of international peace and brotherhood.

We can only hope the world will awaken some day to see its near-hopeless drive to inevitable destruction.

Perhaps on that day we will see the truth of such people as Mrs. Golda Meir, an American born Jew who left her homeland to live in the land of her fathers, to build a home for her people.

Perhaps we will see the day when the dreams of a great man became the realities of the world.

But it all seems unlikely; what is the tragedy of his death is also the tragedy of our existence.

Our Readers Write:

Who Is Disgusting?

Dear Sir:

In regard to M.J.N.'s "who's disgusting?" we are still wondering who is! Obviously, the men and women quoted are guilty of faulty thinking and we suggest they attend some psychology lectures and correct it. Our conclusion can only be that the men were enjoying themselves and the women were jealous.

Initiations are an accepted tradition at a university. Moreover, the initiations in question took place after lecture hours and was of only a few hours duration.

One hour, and the actions of a few girls during that time cannot be taken as exemplary of the university as a whole.

The girls in physical and occupational therapy who were lacking the "naivete and shyness" of children, are young women who are dedicated members of the Rehabilitation team and in their training attend 34 hours of lectures a week. Surely they cannot be criticized for an hour of fun. No one was harmed or offended by the initiation, and we feel that the sidewalk opinions, not we, are verging on the grotesque.

Sincerely,
The disgusted, but not disgusting POTS.

Freedom Is Their Struggle

In Toronto this week and next can be seen a film, sponsored by Moral Re-armament, which caused a hard-boiled Hollywood critic to comment, "Last night I witnessed a film that may change the course of my life".

This unusual production which combines brilliant camera-work by a Swedish camera-man formerly employed by Walt Disney, with a simply-spoken but gripping message is the first full-length colour film from Africa, written and produced in Africa by Africans. The movie-goer used to the slick Hollywood treatment of a wild and woolly Africa should bear this fact in mind before labeling this piece amateur—which he might do if he were sufficiently disturbed by the often sing-song delivery of the dialogue. Let him remember that the cast is not composed of studio-trained actors, but of real kings and chiefs who have placed their palaces, thrones, and private homes at the disposal of the film crew; of native

Africans going about their business in the market-places; of real African musicians.

In short, the fictitious community of Bokondo shows us the real African faced with its peculiar problems, while the players are the people who are actually engaged in the struggle for freedom in Africa. To add impetus to the remarkable beauty of this gift from Africa, authentic folk music moves hauntingly through the background, breaking out spasmodically into drum-beats.

A film or play written solely to put across a key idea generally creates considerable controversy. "Freedom" escapes the clutches of idle tongue-waggers for its tone is deeply sincere, without being preachy or emotional, and its message has universal meaning.

"Freedom" has made an incredible impact upon the world. It took the top award in the Finnish Festival, received top honours at the Lille Film Festival in France, and was the only film to be shown three times at the International Film Festival in Berlin. And here's a strong point in its favour: "Freedom" was given a special showing for east-Berliners alone, who came hundreds of miles to see it. The Prime Minister of Sudan has asked for fifteen copies of the film to be shown throughout the country. In fact, when the Emperor of Ethiopia asked to borrow "Freedom", the Prime Minister replied, "You can have it—but just for two weeks." Obviously, impressed, Clyde Gilmour concluded a lengthy, wholly favourable review of "Freedom" with "I decided not to wait for the official opening before reporting that this is a stirring and extraordinary picture."

Clearly, the eager reception of Freedom by people of every colour and creed indicates not merely an appreciation of its high artistic quality, but recognition of a unique answer to world strife and a new dimension to the word 'freedom'.

Peace's Piece

"Victor, why do you spend so much time at the morgue?" are you interested in corpses?"

"Gottfried, my friend, one of these days I really must tell you about an inquisitive commandant I once knew."

The foregoing are samples of the juicy dialogue to be found in Frankenstein 1970, playing at the Downtown Theatre, and starring Boris Karloff, creator of Frankenstein, 1932. Of course old Baron Frankenstein, the last of his race, can't tell even his best friend the real reason for his nightly visits to the morgue; the truth is, Karloff has finally got fed up playing the monster, and is now building one of his own.

Unfortunately, his designs are constantly being frustrated by a marauding film company, which, appropriately enough, is shooting horror pics and using the castle as their location.

Nevertheless, Karloff stifles his disgust; after all, his atomic re-actor kit will soon be coming through the mail, and then he can really get down to work. Beside, the leading lady is kind of cute.

In fact, he acts the perfect host. He spends most if his, and the audience's time playing the organ, or feeding his pet piranhas. ("How grim is the struggle for survival," he speculates, although the fish appear to be about as interested in the proceedings as was this reviewer.)

His chief difficulty is in finding a pair of eyes for his monster. He did have a nice pair in a bottle of formaldehyde, but that it, he had dropped it when he opened the door of the refrigerator. And so, the monster roams idly about the castle, wrapped in bandages which give its head the grotesque appearance of one of the Teuton Knights' helmets in Alexander Nevsky. In the course of his travels he picks off one or two of the film company's camp followers, but none of their eyes ever seem to work.

In desperation, Karloff does tell Gottfried the story of the inquisitive commandant, and leads him down the primrose path to the vaults. The best friend is thereupon incorporated into the mad scientist's chef-d'oeuvre. "Gottfried, Gottfried," mourns Karloff, sadly studying his best friend's mortal remains down the nearest cadaver disposal unit. It is a moving scene.

Finally, monster and maker perish together in an atomic steam-bath. The bandages are removed from the creature's face—revealing another Boris Karloff! It is the final reduction ad absurdum of the Frankenstein legend. At this point, I couldn't help whispering to One-Eyed Benny, my favourite writer: "Yes, but is it art?"

Whether it is or not, Frankenstein 1970 is still a remarkably funny picture, although its humour may be too subtle for the average viewer.

Warren Peace.

I am sorry but you slaves of the one-eyed monster will have to be content with Jack Kane's doings on Thursdays at 8 p.m. What misery! Jack is back in style and you can look forward to lots of excellent jazz from him and his big band. By the way, Kane is cutting about one disc a month. His latest "Kane is Able". They are all great.

The Method and Vic

"Canada underestimates everything about itself—its actors, its critics, its plays," said a prominent teacher of the famous Stanislavsky Method last night.

Mr. Al Saxe, head of the Toronto branch of the Actors' Studio, speaking at the Victoria College Dramatic Society, said that Canadians will support a thing only if it is accepted by New York, when many dramatic groups here can do better than some of those in an off-Broadway area.

"Theatre is reality", he continued, which must achieve a fourth dimension, and tear down the wall between audience and stage. The "Method" concentrates on the truth of the moment, "the checkback of which is life".

The actor of the Classic school is concerned with voice and diction, and runs into difficulty when he tries to study movement, and relax this movement. The "Method" aims to "do it as if you'd never studied it".

Mr. Saxe said that elements of character, such as kindness, "must emerge from the experience of the actor—it is an inner quality". "Life is more exaggerated than the exaggerations on stage".

Commenting on the Dramatic Society's production of "The Valiant", which was performed at the meeting, Mr. Saxe said that it was "sincere and moving", but the actors were limited by a lack of awareness and understanding of the craft. Denes Lee's portrayal of the jailer was, he said, the most realistic. But he did appreciate the sincerity of the parts of Donna Youngblut, John Rumble, Bill Shiersen, and Bob Hamlin.

Even the great Stanislavsky himself, said Mr. Saxe, started with a small group—a barn in the backyard—and many "big stars" have achieved their fame from meagre beginnings. A college drama club may be that small beginning.

art

realism, classicism, mysticism

American realism, Canadian classicism African mysticism—they can all be seen in Toronto this week. In addition to exhibitions by two well-known Toronto painters.

The American realism is, of course, the Karalik Collection of mid-nineteenth century American paintings now at the Art Gallery of Toronto. Don't miss it. This is the collection that made the art-historians re-write the story of American art five years ago when it was first exhibited in Boston. It is now on tour for the first time, and Toronto is the only Canadian city that will see it.

David Milne is the Canadian classic. An aloof contemporary of the Group of Seven, Milne was not recognized for some time as a major contributor to Canadian art. To-day his Fauve derivative paintings are among our most popular and well-known pictures.

At the Laing Galleries until Oct. 18th is an outstanding exhibition of his oil paintings from the period 1919 to 1936 while he lived in his hermit fashion at Temagami, Palgrave and Six Mile Lake. All the canvases are from the collection of Vincent Mossey, are selling fast, and the rumours are that we can expect more in the future.

Th African mysticism can be found at the Gallery of Contemporary Art. This is a collection of African sculpture, obtained from one of owner Barry Kernerman's obscure sources.

The collection is somewhat disappointing. Most of the pieces are not of the first quality, to judge from photographs I have seen. The best piece is from the collection of an anonymous New York collector. This is a large upright black male figure. The most striking piece as you enter the exhibition.

Of interest also are the carved tusks from about the 16th century, with a spiraling procession of tiny figures, some of the masks a mother and child, the mother with inset glass eyes and the small gold metal figures. And various parrots which liven the display.

The two well-known Toronto artists with current exhibitions are Michael Snow and Bobs Coghill Haworth. Mrs. Haworth is one of Toronto's senior artists, Mr. Snow one of the most junior.

Mrs. Haworth's show at Robert's Gallery is made up of just the kind of pictures we've come to expect from her. And no one will be disappointed by these gaily-colored holiday scenes with the grained texture that is now her trademark. The recent series of bird sketches is particularly charming.

Mrs. Haworth's show may have been predictable, but Michael Snow's is highly experimental. One of the Greenwich Gallery regulars, he has not had a one-man show there for two years now, and during that time his work has changed greatly.

Snow's Prophecy was a shown at the Canadian National Exhibition art gallery, one of the most controversial pieces there. It has all the pointlessness of an immensely sophisticated and blandly shaggy-dog story. Perhaps the best painting to be seen in the Greenwich exhibition, it impresses the spectator with Snow's own humor and imagination.

This is the kind of imagination that fills the interstices of an angular gold wire net with mirrors and calls it Versailles. This was the one sculpture in the show.

Some of the canvases are experimental enough to leave the spectator in doubt as to their success. Nightway is a canvas four fifths black and navy, with a procession of highly contrasted red and white squares at the bottom. Does the size of the dark area compensate for the high color of the red and white? And what about the one green square off to the left? It keeps the viewer guessing, amused and maybe fascinated.

The title, indicate the ambiguous character of these works: To Orangeville, Petrograd 1917, Off Minor—all irregular arrangements of squares in discordant dark or pastel colors.

UC-PHE RETAINS TRACK TITLE

Redmen Gain Smashing Win Runners-Up 62 Points Behind

Displaying a solid team effort, the combined University College-Physical and Health Education team won the annual intramural track meet in slaughter-house style at Varsity Stadium yesterday.

The Redmen chalked up a smashing total of 80 points to finish 62 points ahead of Medicine, their nearest competitor.

UC-PHE garnered nine firsts, eight seconds, three thirds and five fourths in attaining points in all but one of the 15 events.

Norm Menzel was the top individual performer. He won the high jump with a leap of 5' 7 1/2", the broad jump with a distance of 19' 5 1/4", and finished second in the hop, step and jump.

Menzel personally accounted for 13 of his team's 80-point total. Other outstanding entrants from UC-PHE were Terry Wensley and Mike Berger.

Wensley was second in the broad jump, only three-quarters of an inch short of Menzel's jump, and came home third in the hop, step and jump.

Berger, a distance runner, captured the three-mile jaunt with a winning time of 17 minutes, 53 seconds. Berger was also second in the mile, trailing team-mate Price by half a second.

Price broke the tape in 5:03.5, with Berger at 5:03. Price and Berger changed places in the three mile run, with the former trailing Berger to the tape.

Wycliffe College's Lennard was the best non-UC-PHE competitor, winning the discus and javelin throws by wide margins.

He tossed the discus 117' 2", 12 1/2 feet further than St. Mike's McElligatt. UC-PHE's Morgan Dever threw the javelin 23 feet short of Lennard's winning 137' 2".

St. Mike's, who recorded a heavy entry in the meet, was third, two points back of Medicine. The Irish captured three seconds, three thirds and a fourth.

Wycliffe, Skule, Trinity, Victoria and Dents followed in that order.

The university championship meet, from whose winners the Intercollegiate senior and intermediate teams will be chosen, will be held at the Stadium next Thursday, starting at 1.30.

SPORTSIES

The Sports Editor, who is still weeping because his Dodgers aren't winning the World Series, has issued a request from the dungeon wherein he howleth.

A meeting of the entire sports staff — large and tiny types alike — has been scheduled for Friday (tomorrow) at 1.15 in the office.

Veterans and rookie alike may attend. There are still vacancies on the staff for potential Lord Beaverbrooks.

Refreshments will be served (so bring your own money and map to the PPKCR).

The fame and fortune which often penetrate dreams of college football players in our country can become striking examples of Fate, Finance and Folly in operation.

The year 1958 has furnished us with a perfect illustration of Robbie Burns' famed observation that "the best laid plans of mice and men gang aft agley."

For the past few years, Intercollegiate football has been polished by a little gaffer named Ron Stewart, who left an indelible mark on the college game, and held high hopes of doing the same with a professional team.

But Fate made an appearance. Stewart, originally drafted by Montreal Alouettes, was traded to the Tabbies from Hamilton.

Ron had no great inkling to perform in Tigertown, and indicated his probable return to Queen's and the ranks of Frank Tindall's Golden Gaels.

And then Fate wiped away the grimace and smiled benignly on the 5'7" chunk of dynamite. Ottawa Rough Riders obtained Stewart from Jim Trimble's Tiger-Cats.

Stewart was happy. He had wanted to join former Gael teammates Lou Bruce and Gary Schneider in the Capital city. Now he could play pro ball and continue his law studies at University of Ottawa.

But it was the turn of Finance to enter the picture. Frank Clair obtained halfback Ron Quillian from below the border, and Stewart began collecting splinters on the bench.

Rough Riders pay for their imports, and they have to keep them pretty high on the payroll. With Quillian around, there was no place for a little guy from a Canadian college.

Stewart made a brief appearance in the Ottawa-Hamilton game in Philadelphia, but was given no opportunity to show the quality that made him a truly great college star.

Fate returned. Quillian, was injured in last week's game against Hamilton, and Coach Clair has indicated his decision to go with Stewart against Montreal.

Now comes Folly. Intercollegiate play has produced some pretty good ball players in this decade — Don Getty, Phil Muntz, Steve Oneschuk, Fred Smale, Schreider, Bruce, Fedor, Casey and many more.

But none of them was as vital to any college team as Ron Stewart to Queen's. Whether the Gaels or the opposition held the ball, Stewart was the most dangerous man on the field.

The others mentioned above have made good in professional football. Stewart hasn't had the opportunity. It could be nothing but the Folly of his professional coach that kept Ron off the field.

This weekend, a great little athlete finally gets the big crack at the sport he loves best. He's dynamite personified, and if quarterback Russ Jackson lights the fuse, the Big Four could come face to face with the biggest explosion in history.

ERRATUM

It was erroneously reported in yesterday's edition of The Varsity that Trinity College was defending champion of the intramural track meet.

University College won the title last year, and retained it with a lopsided victory yesterday in Varsity Stadium.

Trinity Black Panthers and Senior Skule opened the interfaculty soccer schedule yesterday by battling to a 1-1 tie. The game was played on the Front Campus at noon.

Juan Atucha fired the Engineers into a 1-0 lead, but Chris Carr came back to notch the tying goal for Trinity.

The game was fast, and surprisingly well played for the season opener. The Engineers are defending champions.

In games today, University College meets Junior SPS, with Victoria and St. Mike's, tangling in the other game.

Game Time Is 2 P.M. But Get There Early

University athletic officials expect a bumper crop of fans in attendance when Varsity Blues entertain the Western Mustangs in Varsity Stadium Saturday.

Game time is 2 p.m., and it has been forecast that the best seats in the student section will be filled by 1.40 at the latest.

In the first Western game here, played under the lights September 26, the paid attendance was 12,593, and school had only been open for two days.

Students crowded into the seats at the south end of the stadium, something which hasn't been done to any great degree for several seasons.

Athletic director Warren Stevens has predicted that 20,000 will watch this Saturday's clash. That would be the best Intercollegiate crowd since 1954.

Those that attend will undoubtedly catch one of THE games of the year. Both teams are up for the battle, and the showing of both here two weeks ago indicates it will be a down-to-the-wire fight.

Mustangs will probably miss halfback Bob Miller, who was injured in the Queen's game. Varsity will be at full strength.

Earlier this season, Western promised to throw more passes than last year. They did against Blues, and came close to pulling out a last-minute win.

Art Turner and Frank Cosentino are both good aerial artists. The outcome could rest on Varsity's ability to equal the defensive display they put on while wallopping McGill.

Defensive play appears to be the difference between the teams, with Toronto having the edge.

C'MERE BABY

Varsity co-captain Curt Russell (20) leaps high to intercept a McGill pass, tipped to him by Blues' Bob Dann (90). Redmen Gord Merritt (59) makes the tackle as Umpire Bobby Porter (5) watches. Action came as Varsity whipped McGill 35-13 last week for their second consecutive win.

Big NFCUS Photo Contest Deadline Moving Closer

Closing date for the National Federation of Canadian University Students Photo contest is Nov. 30. "But considering all the work that has to be done preparing pictures for entry, that doesn't leave much time at all," U of T contest chairman Ron Carr said last night.

John Labatt Ltd., will donate $800 in prize money to the contest. Each contestant can submit a total of 18 pictures for judging.

The Nfcus contest was inaugurated two years ago, and U of T has stood first both years.

In 1956 Toronto won nine out of 20 prizes, and seven honorable mentions. The $175 grand prize was won by Ron Carr.

In 1957 Toronto's share of the winning's was five cash awards and 12 honorable mentions.

"We hope to be able to break our own records this year," Carr said last night.

Any student enrolled this year in a Nfcus-member university is eligible for the contest.

and white. The black and white section is subdivided into five sections—pictorial, animal, portraiture, action and sports, news and human interest.

A grand prize of $175 will be awarded. In the color section, three awards of $100 (first prize), $75 (second) and $50 (third) will be given.

In the black and white section, first prize will be $100. Prizes of $30, $20 and $10 will be awarded to runners-up in each subdivision.

Honorable mentions will be given in each section and subdivision.

Three entries may be submitted in each section and subdivision.

Three entries may be submitted in each section and subdivision. There is no entry fee.

Winning pictures may be chosen to enter a Nfcus exhibition touring Canadian universities.

The contest is "a wonderful opportunity for amateur photographers to show what they can do," Carr said last night.

Contest entry forms may be obtained in the Students' Administrative Council office.

CCF Repudiates "Party" Charges

A charge thrown by one of the University of Toronto's two new political parties has brought a fast answer from the campus CCF club.

Referring to a charge that the CCF party has been "frozen into inaction" with regard to the situation in Quebec universities, Jerry Caplan, club president, said the statements of the new party were wrong.

"Last year," he said, "when a group of three students were demonstrating openly to attempt to see Premire Duplessis to discuss his actions our party (CCF) sent a telegram to them announcing full support and sympathy."

Caplan's statement came after charges were laid by Mike Rasminsky, Ken Wyman, and Tim Reid over the CCF's inactivity.

"The CCF club," he added, "is pleased to welcome the new, as yet nameless party to the campus, and the approach it seems to be taking in the field of higher education."

Debaters

Engineering Debating Society leaders were "appalled" last night at the lack of applications for Society debating try-outs.

Less than ten applications out of an expected 150 have been filed. "We just can't have the trials if there aren't more applications," Engineering Society Publicity Director Robin Beamish said last night.

Deadline for applications has been extended to Sunday night, and forms will be available at the Hart House hall porter's desk this weekend, he said.

Debating program for this year is very heavy, Beamish said.

Song And Jazz For U A Benefit

Toronto's big-time jazz disk jockey Phil MacKellar will lead a four-star jazz and comedy variety show in Convocation Hall a week today to raise money for United Appeal.

Top on the list of names is singer Jerry Gray, U of T dentist student who leads the Canadian folk-singing group, The Travelers. The group appeared in Massey Hall last night with folk-singer Pete Seeger.

For Dixieland enthusiasts, Mike Whyte's quintet will be on hand. The group is currently making a stand at the Westover Hotel in town.

Dave Broadfoot, the gangling Canadian comedian who has sparked the review "Spring Thaw" for years and is currently on campus in "Clap Hands", another review, will provide comedy for the program.

A jazz quartet rounds out the program.

The show takes place from noon till two p.m. in Convocation Hall. There's no admission charge, but donations for United Appeal will be collected inside.

Producer of the show is Jerry Caplan, (III UC), and the show forms a part of the university's United Appeal drive.

Higher Wages End Recession

Union demands for higher wages could be a strong force in reducing the present recession, Eugene Forsey said last night.

Dr. Forsey, Research Director of the Canadian Labor Congress was the honorary visitor at a Hart House Debate. The resolution, "This House deplores the present arrogance of Canadian trade unions," was defeated 74-51.

"At this time," Dr. Forsey said, "I have suggested that unions should ask management to pay as much they can afford and by raising consumer purchasing power pull us out of the recession."

Arguing for the affirmative, Phil Goulston, (II UC) asked "Doesn't labor have enough to subsist on properly?"

John Pierce (III SMC) also supported the resolution.

Subsistence was not enough, Dr. Forsey said later.

The debate centered around the wage-price spiral, the entry of the Canadian Labor Congress into politics by the formation of a new party, and individual examples of union corruption and gangsterism.

Peter Dembski, (II SMC) speaking for the negative said management and labor were like a girl and a boy. "The boy's intentions are innocent and pure," he said, "but the girl insists on reading dishonourable motives into his suggestions." Other negative speaker was Ken Wyman (III UC).

Goulston found union motives far from honorable. He cited one case of a union official beating up a worker for failure to toe the line and another in which a prominent Canadian union leader had suggested that labor draw up a blacklist of anti-union Members of Parliament whom labor would not support.

These things, Goulston said, "were arousing the righteous indignation of the Canadian people."

Forsey said it seemed to him a completely natural thing for a group to refuse their support to any member of parliament who is not working in their best interests, "whether you call it blacklisting or not."

The planned formation by the CLC of a new party was indicative, Forsey said, not of arrogance but of a lack of arrogance. "If they were arrogant," he said, "they would use their economic power to paralyze the country industrially and force their measures to be passed."

"In addition," he said, "the party is to be based only in part on the labor union and so would not be a class party."

Forsey said that the wage-price spiral was largely a myth, at least in Canada. "From 1946 to 1955, for instance, productivity increased at roughly the same rate as wages," he said.

And this is an exception. Most years, productivity increases at a much greater rate than wages.

Blinded Dog Strikes Again Seven Leaders Disappear

By JACK SEEDHOUSE
Varsity Staff Reporter

A massive underground spirited away seven campus leaders last night—destination unknown.

List of those missing includes: Doug Wilson, president of Meds; Ed Davies, president of Pharmacy; Bill Davis, president of the UC Lit and a friend; Doug Grant, head of Trinity; Charlie Ledger, governor-general of Wycliffe; and Clark Leith, president of the Vic Union.

Responsible for the kidnappings is the "Blinded Dog Society". The Society is composed at present of "between 40 and 50 people, mostly engineers, but including various types," said one member.

Doug Wilson, president of the Medical Society Assembly, was the first to disappear. An engineer posing as a Varsity reporter asked him for an interview. Wilson was picked up when he arrived outside the SAC building.

Second victim was E. G. Davies of Pharmacy. He was forced out of his residence by members of the society, without his shoes, and whisked away in a car.

The Varsity stunt was used successfully a second time to capture Bill Davis, president of the UC Lit. Davis had a friend with him, who was also taken.

Doug Grant of Trinity was lured from a dance at St. Hilda's College and forced into an Austin after a brisk fight. The fight was good-natured, said one of the kidnappers.

Wycliffe's governor-general, Charlie Ledger, walked out of the college into the arms of members of the society. "He was easy," said one member. "We weren't even expecting him."

Seventh and last was Clark Leith, president of the Victoria College Union. He was taken struggling from his third floor room of a residence.

The kidnappings were made in the hope of raising ransom money for the campus United Appeal drive which begins Tuesday.

United Appeal is out for a "do-or-die" campaign this year. Appeal officials have been warned that unless the campaign is a success, figures indicate the organization will be a failure.

The 1956 campaign was a major success, passing its objective.

Last year's campaign, however, fell well below the quota.

This year's goal is $8,000,000 for the province. U of T's objective is $8,000. This is less than $1 per person.

The Blinded Dog Society was organized by first year Mechanical and Chemical Engineering students last spring.

In March the group stole a car belonging to members of The Varsity. It was returned the next morning stripped of wheels and engine, lettered with the words, "Blinded Dog Strikes."

Name of the organization was explained in a society manifesto: "Drawing a dog in profile is a simple matter, until one tries to put in the eye. It's impossible. So we decided to put a blindfold on him and call him the blinded dog."

Nfcus Support For Quebec; Toronto Delegation Abstains

By DOUG MARSHALL
Varsity Editor-in-Chief

OTTAWA, Oct. 9 — A resolution giving "free moral support" to the Quebec Association of Universities was passed by the National Federation of Canadian University students here today.

The motion came in the final plenary session of the five-day conference. Moved by the Universities of British Columbia, and Saskatchewan, the motion adds that support also be given to "all other Canadian university students suffering under similar violations."

The motion was passed unanimously with the Toronto delegation abstaining.

Passed later today were resolutions, endorsing the United States National Students Association stand on integration. The conference also resolved to send a letter to the government of South Africa protesting its segregation policies.

Algerian students were pledged both moral and financial support.

port. An aid fund, raised by local students' councils and administered through World University Service, will be started for Algerian students losing scholarships during the French-Algerian crisis.

One motion, passed with much controversy, approved the principle that Canada adopt her own national flag. Another motion mandating McGill and the University of Montreal to design such a flag for next year's conference was defeated.

A national student day to familiarize the general public with student problems was endorsed. The Nfcus national office will decide the date and attempt to arrange postage stamps publicizing it.

Greatest debate centred around the question of how far Nfcus should concern itself with political matters. Some delegates felt the various motions supporting students in crisis countries involved the Federation in political issues not within its province.

A standing resolution on the Nfcus agenda says policies crossing the thin line between purely student affairs and political affairs should not be discussed. It was repassed.

The conference wound up with a dinner sponsored by the Ontario Government. Guest speaker at the dinner was Brooke Claxton, Chairman of the Canada Council.

Mr. Claxton outlined the history and progress of the council and said he hoped many of them would take advantage of what it had to offer.

Some of the 100-odd delegates from 28 universities attending the conference will stay until Saturday for the NATO Seminar being held here.

DR. EUGENE FORSEY, who last night was honorary visitor at the first Hart House debate of the year and told the house that union demands for higher wages were useful in preventing inflation.

Benny Sure Blues To Triumph

I am being somewhat of a sad-ness that I always so right and never even wrong which is unusual and not quite right and is in itself something of a contradiction. This of course is being impossible as all my fishies know Benny has no dictation at all especially this contra variety which is of course the spike of life. Still and all it is the business of this old and wise one to fill the coffers of his dear sweet little buoys Blue with great and richish victories and to empty the pockets of his little fishies of all their fins, sawbucks and even any odd billets of silver which they may happen to have kicking about therein and about.

I am doing such a thorough job on the marks who infest old McGill last week that now they are sinking even to the depths where I see they go to beg my one-time dear friend and booze companion Moe du Fleury who is somewhat of a big wheel in Quaybeck for the purposes of to get funds with which they are intending to re-finance old McGill which I drive into bankruptcy when I take all their bets against my Bluesers. Moe is laughing up his sleeve so hard that he drenches not only all the extra aces he keeps there but as well his derringer is getting so soaked that he is unable to shoot it at the Varsity reporter who asks for his comment on the story which I write about him in the Toronto dustcloth publication this week under the name of Marshall Gray who is and are of course nothing more than figmentations of my fertile imagination.

These are being only minor problematics about which I do not leave myself to worry as I am always getting nervous when I leave myself alone and have no more intelligent company with whom to converse. All week I am working on a double barrelled problem which is how to decide the World serials and the Varsity Western games on the basis of true justice which is only a euphemistatelian manner of saying that Benny makes the most possible loot inasmuch as I am being dedicated to the preposition that to the victor belong the spoils which is alright with me since I never do have a taste for fresh fruit, though I am convinced that a thing of booty is a joy forever.

Which is more than can be said for the muddled Mustangs from London who are being a joy to Benny and his Blues only for this season inasmuch as next year they are waking up and relegating themselves back into the Intercollegiate Intermediate Loop or maybe even to the Little Big Four and perhaps they are getting even smarter and taking up birdwatching with the boys from Mac who now watch the starlings flit about their campus. It is a fitting fate,

Whatever is remaining of the Mustang spirit which is a hopeless thing at best which it certainly is not, it is being saddishly demolished this weekend when my own dear sweet Blues pile them under an avaluncheon of 5 touchies, two converties and a singleton while the Mustangs who are recipients of Benny's largesse beg themselves a trio of touchables though they themselves are not at all and end up on the short end of a 33-21 score while the McGills and the Queensies have themselves a ball to no avail which is fine with me as I do not care two hoots in the Great Hall what happens betwixt and between them and do not even bet on the outcome.

Carabin Officials Ask Applications

Skating, partying and informal discussions will be on the agenda for the forty students chosen to represent the University of Toronto in the coming Carabin Weekend.

Applications will be accepted next week for the exchange weekend between the Universities of Montreal and Toronto.

Object of the annual weekend is to stimulate an exchange of ideas between French and English-Canadian students. Fun will be combined with serious discussion when students meet.

Forty French-Canadians visit the campus late in November. Their hosts will take them on a round of house parties, seminars and luncheons.

The following February will see the roles reversed as U of T Carabins visit the U of M. A day's skiing in the Laurentians will highlight the visit.

Any interested undergraduate may apply in the SAC office from Oct. 14 to 17.

SMC Debaters Say Yes To US Eastern Policies

By TERRY BOURKE
Varsity Staff Reporter

St. Michael's Oratorical Society came out overwhelmingly in favor of United States policy on Quemoy and Matsu yesterday.

The topic under debate was "Resolved that the West should withdraw its support of Nationalist China's control of Quemoy and Matsu." A packed house voted it down.

Mimi Kravis of the government said although the West claims moral principles, their interest in the offshore islands is based "on economic reasons alone."

But opposition speaker Sylvia Sloan said if the U.S. bows to the Communists, not only Formosa but "the whole existence of the Asian continent" will be threatened.

Government speaker Bob McCormick said the islands are of little use to the U.S. or any other nation. "The States are on the brink of war for a non-existent principle."

Jim Doris, opposing the resolution, said U.S. withdrawal wouldn't lessen the risk of war.

"History shows appetite for territorial gains grows on appeasement."

All speakers agreed Nationalist China will never reconquer the mainland.

Miss Kravis said, "Chiang and his army will be slaughtered if they don't pull out before it's too late."

But Doris, disappointed because Ottawa has not taken a clear stand on the issue, said, "Red China's claim Americans are nothing but a bunch of paper tigers will be proven if the U.S. pulls out."

A speaker from the floor, Richard Tan, said Formosans look on the islands as a stepping-stone to the mainland. "If the U.S. withdraws its aid, the people of China will be greatly demoralized."

Bob Chen, also speaking from the floor, said, "The one remaining glimmer of freedom in the East would be extinguished if the Americans appease the Reds."

RC Mass

A Solemn High Requiem Mass will be celebrated at 4:15 p.m. today in St. Michael's College.

The Mass is one of several throughout the city to be celebrated in memory of Pope Pius XII.

Wednesday St. Michael's Cathedral will be draped in black as Toronto's official Mass of mourning is said on the day of the Pope's funeral.

The "Veni Sancti Spiritu" will be recited after all religious services at St. Michael's. The prayer, a plea for divine guidance, will be recited in honor of the forthcoming election of a new Pope.

No announcement of any cancellation of classes at St. Mike's has been made.

Mac: The Tradition and Mac, the man

By SUSIE BRESLIN
Varsity Staff Reporter

In the world at large, customs are passed down from generation to generation, until they assume the hallowed dignity of tradition. The process may take decades or centuries.

In the university community where a new generation is born every four years, traditions grow and wither away with astounding rapidity.

In four short years, "Mac" has become a firm and much-loved tradition.

Probably most of U of T's 13,000 students know Mac only as an anonymous, friendly face behind the Arbor Room's impersonal counter.

But to those who are privileged to know him well, Mac is guardian angel, confidante and advisor all in one. They know little about his past; he knows nothing about theirs. He is a part of a world which has no past and a very vague future.

Last spring, the Canadian Restaurant Association awarded Maca prize for the best entry from Ontario in a contest on how to cut costs while maintaining service and quality.

"It's funny about that prize," Mac says. "Last year, I really dollar a piece, and Mac took his prize and went "down east to brush up on my Gaelic" on his holidays this summer.

And the entry which paid off so handsomely? Mac won't reveal a word of it. But Arbor Room regulars know the secret of Mac's success, even though other members of CRA probably can't duplicate it.

Comments on Mac range from Hart House Warden Joe McCulley's "he's a very valuable employee with a happy smile" to that of a gushing coed — "he's a darling!"

Eating is an adventure when Mac serves you. Pie isn't just pie — it's "our special imported Hawaiian pineapple pie." Milk shakes are "our super-deluxe specialty at our low, low price," and hot-dogs are served with "a modicum of mustard" — and a grin.

The grin is always there, even on the cloudiest days. It only disappears when Mac hears one of his friends has had bad luck. And then the gloom on his face convinces you that Mac feels worse than you do.

For Varsity staffers, his "how's Fleet Street?" and coffee make the late hours seem lighter. And the knowledge that the paper has at least one faithful reader makes them seem worthwhile.

In the hectic flow of the Arbor Room, where wave upon wave of impatient undergraduates line the counter, many wonder how Mac keeps his good humor.

There is only one good reason. For all his wisdom and his greying hairs, Mac is as young at heart as his customers. And it is from men such as these that traditions are born.

— VSP Stabins.

EVERYONE CALLS him Mac and his smile makes everyone happy and it even won him a prize.

Legally, Mac is Donald A. Macdonald. He came to the Arbor Room in 1954 from a career as staff sergeant in the Canadian Army. He was probably the most amiable sergeant in the entire armed forces.

worked on an entry, and when I sent it in, I thought 'I've got it'. This year I just sat down and typed out about 100 words with two fingers, and sent it in without even going over it." Those words paid off at a

U of M Law Student New Nfcus President

OTTAWA, Oct. 9 (Staff) — Mortimer Bistrisky, first-year law student at the University of Montreal, was acclaimed president of the National Federation of Canadian University Students today.

Bistrisky, last year's Quebec Regional President, takes over the year-long full-time post from retiring President Walter Tarnopolsky.

"I will devote all my efforts towards making Nfcus a truly unified body," Bistrisky told delegates after his acclamation.

A graduate of Sir George Williams College in Montreal, Bistrisky, 22, moved into law at U of M this year. Handling the national and international affairs of Nfcus means he will have to suspend studies during the 1958-59 session.

Ray Kutz of Saskatchewan was elected vice-president for International Affairs and Stewart MacKinnon of Dalhousie is the new National Affairs vice president.

The Western regional president's slot was filled by Russell Brink of the University of British Columbia. Osgoode hall's Fred O'Connor was elected Ontario president for the second time. Jean Dionne of the U of M was elected Quebec Regional president and Murray Frazer of Dalhousie holds the Atlantic regional presidency.

Elections, nearly all by acclamation, took place during the closing minutes of the 22nd Nfcus conference here.

Elected regional vice-presidents were Paul Turner of Bishop's College, Gord Smith of Waterloo College and Clarence Powell of Memorial University, Newfoundland.

Joe Wilder of Manitoba was elected Nfcus Debating Chairman.

New Governors To Sit On Board

For the first time in the history of the U of T, a woman will be on the board of governors.

Premier Frost named Mrs. Irene Irwin Clarke, to fill one of the 11 vacancies.

Mrs. Clarke, widow of former governor W. H. Clarke, accepted the post by cable late yesterday afternoon. She is now visiting in England.

Six other governors appointed were:

Chief Justice Porter, former provincial treasurer and attorney-general; John Rigsby White, president of Imperial Oil Co. Ltd. Edward William Bickle, treasurer of Victoria University and former president of the Toronto Board of Trade; M. Wallace McCutcheon, chairman of the Ontario Cancer Institute; Neil John McKinnon, trustee of the Hospital for Sick Children, and Charles P. McTague, a member of the senate of U of T.

Four more vacancies remain to be filled to bring the total number of governors to the required 38.

nasty thoughts

For years and years, Ontario has fought valiantly to protect itself from the introduction of elements it considers unwholesome, unprofitable, and altogether too racy for these chilly latitudes we live in.

In defence of the present state of our public morality—that is, the one we present a little shamefully to the world at large—it must be admitted we are unique. Only a few of the more medieval of the southern United States can seriously present a rival to our ice-bound customs and conventions.

The encounter with life for Ontarians has always been a little frightening. Perhaps this is because we stand in a forbidding limbo between the richness of the south and the wastes that encroach persistently to our north.

In every aspect of the collective Ontario personality there seems a little of the attitude: "now then, don't be afraid. You're nearly as big and good as everyone else".

But to this attitude is always added, if only mentally—"almost, but not quite".

Because of, and stemming cumulatively from this pathetic attitude, Ontario and its mother-city Toronto, present some aspects of the ancient mystics who flogged themselves for having evil thoughts.

Progress, consequently, is made only in the face of many hair-shirts, much flagellation, a good deal of name-calling and injunctions to repent quickly.

Meanwhile, progress, even where it seems intolerable is being forced upon us from without. In some quarters the imposition is accepted with a remarkable breadth of attitude. In others it is rebuffed with cold blasts of rightful anger.

So, we get big highways, the odd high building, culture and news from the outer world filters in where it can, and the apples of knowledge lie temptingly in the grass about our feet.

But we really can't pick them up and eat them. After all, our ancestors made the laws and they were tough people who knew what was best.

Occasionally, some ignorant, hardy soul, sensing the subterranean and ugly desires that dwell in the hearts of his fellows picks up an apple and exclaims: "look, an apple".

Then there is a great outcry—many embarrassed apologies. There was a good example of this recently.

Judy LeMarsh, addressing 52 members of the York North Women's Liberal Association, revealed what she claimed were four planks of the Ontario Liberal's secret platform.

Top on the list of Miss LeMarsh's revealing catalogue was sweeping reforms in the field of liquor control, in particular the sale of beer in grocery stores, a practise Premier Leslie Frost has flatly refused for years.

Yesterday Liberal leader John Wintermeyer hastily squashed Miss LeMarsh's revelation. Beer sales in grocery stores, he said, have "never been considered in our policy discussions".

So Miss LeMarsh can hide her head in shame. And all of Ontario with her.

Imagine having such nasty thoughts. MN

The Blame Is Here

By PAUL HOCKINGS

Ordinary men are at the end of their tether. Only a small, highly adaptable minority can possibly survive. H. G. Wells said: just after the war; and back in those days we thought him unusually pessimistic. Had we not every reason to expect a lasting peace?

Now, twelve years later, his predictions show every sign of coming true. How soon? Nobody dare guess. We talk vaguely of maintaining world peace; yet all we can do is to point the finger at other nations and call them the instigators of war.

We live a comfortable life in North America—so long as we forget that no previous century has produced such barbarous instruments of destruction. We pretend to uphold democracy, without ever questioning whether we would really fight to the death for the directors of capitalism who provide our monthly living-allowance.

World peace will never become a reality while we persist in supporting the present educational system—that is the source of the problem.

We are taught to revere above all else these three: nationalism, ideology, and force. They form the basis of every foreign policy. The brotherhood of man means nothing and is seldom mentioned; "peace" is a mere instrument for orators.

This nationalism divides society into distinct self-seeking groups, so that war can always be perpetuated. Ideology, upheld by governments and churches, helps further to divide mankind and prevent any peaceful unity. Force is the supreme argument. When any difference of opinion becomes sufficiently important, force reveals to our benumbed intelligences which contender is in the right.

As most of our thinking is done for us, we have become quite irresponsible. Our governments do what they pretend we would want them to do; and we have merely to bathe in the reflected glory of our national or ideological leaders.

But once we minimize the importance of political boundaries; once we cease to accept the partially developed systems of thought that are urged upon us by church and state; once power, force of numbers, and value of money no longer play the major role in determining our actions; then we will immediately find that being men and women is a safe and satisfying experience far different from the dragging burden it has been in the past.

This is in fact an invitation to disregard authority, but not an invitation to anarchy. We worship authority in a manner both pointless and lazy. Instead of attempting a personal solution to our personal problems, we have learned to prefer the authority of the scriptures, of the administrators, and recently of the "experts" and the press.

Have we trodden every avenue of escape from our responsibilities? If so, then we are as much tools of the state as the citizens of communistic countries. In questions of personal liberty there can be little to choose between the two spheres. The populations of both East and West have bent themselves in a peaceless race for national power.

All this can lead in only one direction. As the social structure tumbles about our heads, we naturally seek to escape. But how strange our intellects at such a crucial time! The escapes we use are religion, sex, alcohol, art, violence and drugs — each one at best making an individual forget for a life-time.

The children are not loved; they are merely used. They become the clay with which we idly model what we have dreamed of. Fortune would have made us had circumstances been more kind. And before our final touch to the gentle surface, the whole thing has become a formless heap collapsed before our eyes.

Is there a hope? Perhaps. It lies in the hands of ourselves and our teachers, if only we can learn understanding instead of information. The classes of schools and universities have become so large they merely mass-produce the technicians for our world. But, there is nothing beneficial about size. Small schools and teachers with dedication rather than standard training — these will create the individuals we need. And what do we find instead? Immense degree factories run by men who are primarily concerned not with making individuals but with making a living. And we gladly entrust our offspring to these institutions in the hope of evading our parental responsibility.

DON'T FORGET

All sports types who call themselves Varsity staffers are requested to meet in the office today at 1.15 p.m.

Important things are on the agenda, and it's rumored Benny may even be there. Those who want to work but haven't yet, are invited by the way.

On Unions...

Dear Sir:

I would like to congratulate Mr. Sam Ajzenstat for pointing out quite clearly that the faults of trade unionism are the faults of the system it mirrors — that of capitalism.

However, the conclusion that by just realizing this will enable "all levels of our society to be free to make capitalism a system that is the finest economic and the highest morality" is completely unreasonable.

Surely we all realize that the basic tenet of capitalistic doctrine is greed, and in the modern version of "benevolent" capitalism it is merely greed kept under control.

The fact remains that that greed is a foundation stone. This indicates the possibility of building "the highest morality" on a foundation of greed.

If one replies—"but this is practise. It recognizes human nature," one can only answer: "nonsense." This is illustrated clearly by an economic movement which, though growing slowly, is growing solidly.

It is known as the co-operative movement begun in England in 1844 and now world wide in extent. This economic theory which has clearly illustrated its practicability, has its basis not only in sound economic theory but a definite moral truth.

Democracy in economics, belief in education, socialism, and Communism fail by lacking the first of these.

Thus we find that not only can we conclude that trade unionism and capitalism cannot reach the highest morality because of the basis of the structure, but also that an excellent economic system offers a definite alternative.

Howard Adelman (II Meds).

New Party

Dear Sir:

Congratulations to Tom Drew-Brook's Anti-Dogmatic Party and the new Anti-Duplexis League. They have carried the idea of democracy to its logical conclusion. We are looking forward to the day when everybody will be his own Prime Minister.

This is the greatest craze since the Hula Hoop.

opera festival

The official opening of Toronto's socio-musical season will be occasioned by the Toronto Opera Festival's glittering first night, Un Ballo in Maschera (A Masked Ball) by Giuseppe Verdi, the pride of Italy. From what this columnist could gather from a mezza-voce, mezza-scenery experience of a first rehearsal, the jewels of the evening will not only shine among the audience.

The first performance of the Verdi opera on Monday will be conducted by Ernesto Barbi. The staging, by Hermann Geiger-Torel, Artistic Director of the Festival, should excel. Giuseppe Campora, star of the Metropolitan Opera, will sing Riccardo, with Ilona Kombrink as Amelia, Harry Mossfield as Renato, Jan Rubes as Sam, and Joan Maxwell as Ulrica.

The Tales of Hoffman (in English) Offenbach's excellent fantasy, will be staged by Dr. Elemer Nagy, and conducted by Ettore Mazzoleni, Canadian lyric tenor Jim Hawthorne from the New York City Opera will sing Hoffman, and Marguerite Gignac will take on the multiple roles of Olympia, Giulietta, Antonia and Stella! Baritone Morley Meredith of the NBC Opera, Jan Rubes and Ernest Adams will also sing.

The major production and success (and definitely the opera to see) will be Puccini's La Boheme. Walter Susskind and the players from his orchestra will put this production in an artistic class never before aspired to by the Opera Festival. Teresa Stratas, the youngest singer to play Mimi, will appear opposite John McCollum's Rodolfo. Norman Mittleman will sing Marcello opposite Patricia Snell's Musetta. Hart House Theatre Director Robert Gill will stage this third opera.

Each opera will be given five performances; Un Ballo: evenings of Oct. 13, 15, 18, 24 and a matinee on Oct. 22.

Hoffman: Oct. 14, 17, 20, 22, and an Oct. 25 matinee.

La Boheme: Oct. 16, 18, 21, 23 and a matinee on Oct. 25. The Festival runs for two weeks, with matinees on Wednesdays and Saturdays. Brian Jackson and Marie Day of the Stratford Festival are in charge of sets and costumes.

Special student tickets at $1.00 apiece are available for all performances on the presentation of ATL cards. Unfortunately, they will probably be seats on the second balcony.

Elmo Ciprietti

GIUSEPPE CAMPORA, Metropolitan Opera star, appears in Verdi's UN BALLO IN MASCHERA, which opens the Royal Conservatory's opera season next week.

suffer little civil war songs to come unto me

Chips flew, babies cried, hounds howled, and the roof was raised at Massey Hall on Wednesday night. The cause of all this activity—Pete Seeger, and his band of folk singers. Pete's opening theme, which was comprised of Seeger, Beethoven, Stravinsky, and a yodel or two from the Sons of the Pioneers, set the stage.

Unfortunately, the size of the hall made it difficult to establish the intimacy and friendliness, which had originally inspired the songs. However the audience's attitude soon helped to establish a relaxed and informal atmosphere. Seeger spins yarns, and plucks a string now and then from his effervescent banjo as he tells of people, their follies and foibles. Entranced, the audience began to join in, at first reluctantly, but soon sang spontaneously, as if this was the only way to enjoy a concert.

Harmonicist Sonny Terry was greeted by an overwhelming ovation. Drawing from the traditional blues and holler songs of the Negro, he proceeded to rock them out with gusto. The harmonica seemed to cry like a baby and bay like a pack of hounds.

The Travellers sang the best from their cosmopolitan repertoire, and succeeded in catching the right mood for each individual song. The Spanish Civil War song was full of pathos and suffering; while the little French town was gay, as the loggers received their pay.

One song was dedicated to Governor Faubus — "Old Sinner Man", and the entire group then gathered on stage to combine for a gallop called "Hoedown" and "Everybody Loves A Saturday Night". Seeger sang it in several foreign languages, and even in bop; i.e. "All the cats dig Saturday night the most".

The evening was full of fun, and a good time was had by all.

the tremendous twelfth

Toronto's oldest film society, the University of Toronto Film Society, will formally commence its twelfth exciting season this Sunday at 8:30 p.m., with a special 35mm showing of the prize-winning Japanese film, Gate Of Hell. The showing will take place at the Capitol Theatre, Yonge and Castlefield Road (three bus stops north of Eglinton).

Also scheduled for this meeting are The Unicorn in The Garden (a UPA cartoon), and the thought-provoking A Time Out of War, filmed by a UCLA graduate.

This will be followed on Oct. 26 by a modern dress version of the Tristan and Isolde legend, starring Jean Marais, Madeleine Sologne, and scripted by poet-Jean Cocteau: L'Eternel Retour. Stanley Kubrick's explosive melodrama The Killing, will be the Nov. 9 showing.

True Friends, a gentle comedy from the USSR, follows next. This is the story of three chums who vow to sail down the Volga one day when they are all famous. How they fulfill this promise in face of the public nature of their professions, provides the humour of this piece. It also pokes fun at Soviet bureaucracy!

A special Christmas double-bill horror programme, consisting of The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari and The Invasion of The Body Snatchers, will drive a fitting coffin nail into the first hall of the programme.

The society will reconvene in January, with a special showing of Fellini's master-piece, I Vitelloni (literally, The Big Calves); a study of Italy's beat generation.

Eisenstein's brilliant Battle-ship Potemkin, and W. C. Fields' hilarious Million Dollar Legs will form the second double bill of the season.

Carl Theodore Dreyer's sombre Day Of Wrath, has been specially released to film societies for the first time in many years; Elia Kazan's episodic and exciting Viva Zapata! is next, starring Marlon Brando, Jean Peters, and Anthony Quinn.

An elaborate production of Mussorgsky's Boris Godunov (also in 35mm) will conclude the season.

Memberships are $5 each, and are on sale at the SAC office, and in the UC rotunda. Because of the Lord's Day Alliance, tickets for individual showings cannot be sold.

There are a limited number of memberships left, so get yours right now.

Vive The Skule Jackets!

Controversial engineering jackets — supposedly under a ban from SPS Dean R. R. McLaughlin — are still on campus and will probably stay.

Engineering Society President Richard Schaeff said the fuss raised over the "request" to stop wearing the blue and yellow jackets has virtually died.

Students' Administrative Council representative Dave Pinkham said yesterday there had been a misunderstanding about whether engineering students could wear the jackets or not.

Dean McLaughlin had asked students to refrain from wearing them on campus, he said. At no time was there ever a ban on such jackets.

The Dean made the request at the beginning of the year to each class, Schaeff said. Special concentration was laid on the wearing of T-shirts, sweaters and jeans, he said.

Opposition to the dean's request had come from the lower years, and not from senior classmen, Schaeff said.

Not even a strict ban would stop some SPS men from wearing the jackets, he said.

There was never any suggestion the no-skule-jacket plea would be followed by any restrictive measures, Pinkham said.

tickets going fast

Tickets for this weekend's Blue and White dance should sell out today, a Students' Administrative Council official predicted yesterday afternoon.

Of 900 tickets available to U of T students, 600 have already been sold, he said.

In addition 100 were sent to London, Ontario, for sale to Western students.

The football dance will be held on Saturday—the day of the Western-Toronto game—in Hart House at nine p.m. Price is $2.50 per couple.

Free Yourself Theolog Advises

At least one theologian thinks university students should lead a "Bohemian life" if they want—because they won't have the chance again.

Dr. Ellen Flesseman, from the University of Leiden, Holland, told a Student Christian Movement meeting Wednesday night student life offers a "frightful amount of possibilities."

"Many students," she said, "do not dare to accept their freedom. They are too well-regimented. They get up in the morning, go to classes, go home and go to bed. They might as well not be free."

"Dormitories," she said, "are too well regulated." She said students must learn to be at home with themselves and be free from the encumbrances of home and high school.

"Be able to say hell with the next class if you are engaged in a stimulating conversation," she said.

"She advised students to attend interesting lectures, whether or not credit for the course is given.

Speaking on friendship, she said student days were the only time for real friendships, to sit in "some small tavern where you can talk over beer until five in the morning."

Dr. Flesseman advised students to question all their given values. "Say to hell with them," she said "if you don't believe in them."

"Great courage" she said "is required to put your faith to the test—if need be to become an atheist or communist."

"Dr. Flesseman, who is on an SCM-sponsored tour of Canadian Universities, leaves Toronto today for Western Canada.

Star Halfback Possible Non-Starter Otherwise-Blues, Western Healthy

By GEORGE WILSON
Varsity Staff Reporter

Dalt White's Varsity Blues play Western's "Little Train" Mustangs tomorrow at 2:00 p.m.—This is not news; we've been hearing about it all week, not only from this journal, but from all Toronto newspapers.

Fortunately, however, the Blues are in good physical shape for Saturday's struggle—no key injuries—and there is a quiet optimism on the team, for this, their most important game to date.

Two weeks ago Varsity had a tremendous edge in the line play for well over three quarters of the game. Last week it was the same story and if they can keep it up, to-morrow's outcome will be a repeat of their first two victories.

Series Over, Ladies Other Sports Waiting

By SHARON MILGRAM

I would like to use just a little bit of this column to thank each and every co-ed on this campus who stayed away from all, or most of their scheduled practices and games, in order to cheer my beloved Yankees on to that sensational victory!

I can only assume that all the girls must have been at home or in the nearest salon watching or listening to the series at those times when they should have been out practicing for such things as the interfaculty swim meet, the intercollegiate archery tournament and a game which slightly resembles that played in the World Series, namely softball games.

But now that such minor disturbances have been settled until next October, the girls' sports schedule can really get rolling.

For those who are still interested in swimming, the interfaculty practices are at the UTS pool from 5:30 p.m. to 7:30 p.m. Monday and Thursday. The interfaculty swim meet will be held Oct. 22 at Hart House.

If you prefer shooting on dry land to ducking in the water, there is still a chance for any potential Robin Hood to win herself a berth on the intercollegiate archery team. Practices for this sport take place at Varsity Arena every morning at 8 a.m. and every afternoon except Wednesday at 1 p.m.

With the softball schedule less than a week old there has already been one game defaulted. The irony of this is that the game was defaulted by UC, a college with approximately 60 girls, to Meds, which has about 80 girls.

Western, strengthened by the return of their perennial favorite, Ted Roman, will not be pushovers. Along with Roman, formidable opposition will be provided by All-American centre Ed Meads, who also doubles as centre linebacker.

Western's only doubtful starter is Bob Miller, a starting halfback who is out with a pinched shoulder nerve. Other than Miller, the Mustangs are also in good condition and after a fired-up game against Queen's, they'll be out to avenge their season's opening loss.

Lionel Conacher, who, according to John P. Metras Esq., is the best halfback in the College loop, has a lot of competition for this title from Varsity's Tim Reid. Reid, playing the best football of his college career, is the league's leading scorer to date.

Nevertheless, Conacher is certainly the Mustang's main running threat. And backed up with the passing of quarterback Frank Cosentino, Western's offense will feature the same wide open play seen in the first game between these two teams.

Barring any unforeseen injuries to either Western or Varsity, it seems apparent that the Intercollegiate League will be a two team affair. Both McGill and Queen's have suffered resounding defeats at the hands of the Blues and the Mustangs respectively.

As a result Saturday's game will be a high point of the season for the players of both teams. A win in this game will give either team a definite psychological edge for the return game in London on Nov. 1.

The question mark about the Blues after the first game against Western was their pass defense. Last week they answered it with a sparkling display against the tosses of McGill's Dick Carr. This pleased Dalt White who was obviously worried after the Mustangs almost tied the game the week before with a strong last-quarter aerial attack.

An interesting sidelight was heard the other day from a die-hard Argo fan who has been following the Double Blue for years. Having viewed his first Varsity game in three years, two weeks ago, he stated that it was one of the best games he had ever seen and was easily comparable to the pros.

The Blues do play good, exciting football, as do the other intercollegiate teams. Give them lots of support as you have so far and they'll produce. Remember game time — 2:00 p.m. to-morrow.

Change Lacrosse

U.C. I and SPS I will compete in a lacrosse game scheduled for next Wednesday at 1 p.m., not Skule I and Pre-Meds IA as was erroneously stated in yesterday's Varsity.

Interfaculty Summary

University College and Junior Skule battled to a 2-2 tie in interfaculty soccer play yesterday.

Ryan netted both UC goals, one in each half, while Caero duplicated his feat for Engineers.

St. Mike's blanked Victoria 2-0 in the other encounter, played in the late afternoon.

Spirit, Passing Improved Coach Predicts Victory

By DAVE GRINER

After last Friday's dismal showing in their 18-0 loss to Ryerson a lot of people were inclined to write off the Baby Blues' chances of holding the Shaw Trophy as negligible.

This is premature, according to their coach, John Sopinka, who feels that his club will be much improved over last week.

With so many new players in the line-up there was a noticeable lack of the spirit needed by a club if it is going to successfully come from behind one or two touchdowns.

With a week of hard practice behind them, this has been remedied according to Sopinka, and his team is ready to go.

The game with Western at London today is a must if the Baby Blues want to stay in the race for the championship. No club can afford to lose more than one game in a six game schedule.

The Western Colts are as good a team as any to start a winning streak against. Though perennially a strong club, they were walloped last week by Queen's, 31-14.

Another improvement according to Sopinka will be the passing. Last Friday, Ev Rush, the Varsity quarterback, spent most of the afternoon running for his life from Ryerson tacklers.

This week will see improved protection and, as a result, more potent passing. The Baby Blues have any number of good receivers both along the line and in the backfield, and can be expected to fill the air with footballs at London.

One other department where the Intermediates can be expected to shine is the punting. Ross Reimer, the regular kicker, has shown fine form in practice following his good performance against Ryerson last week.

Despite being rushed very hard, he still managed to escape without having a kick blocked, and had a higher average than his counterpart on Ryerson.

Soccer Teams Hosts

By JIM SMYTH

Both Blues Soccer teams, fresh from convincing victories last Saturday, take on University of Western Ontario opponents in Intercollegiate League tilts here to-morrow. The Senior game goes at 12 noon on the Back Campus while, the Intermediate teams do battle at the same time on the Front Campus.

Coach Tom Duncan, still not completely satisfied with his team's showing (show me a coach that is—Ed.) had his squad through three workouts during the week. The Senior Blues are still much stronger down the centre than on the wings and Coach Duncan has been switching players around to try to remedy this.

Top candidates to play wing against the Mustangs are Lloyd McKenzie, Bobby Morris and Brian Miché. A dark horse in the picture is Stew Bell, who played well in practices and may get a run on the wing. The defensive lineup for the Senior team will be the reliable firm of Williams, Green, Shepherd, Watson and Avis.

The Baby Blues will also be virtually unchanged from last Saturday. Fred Ruprecht seems to have taken the intermediate goalkeeping chore, while Jensen and Taylor are set in the full-back slots. The position of centre-half is still a toss-up between Oskar Reimann and Tim O'Leary.

Tom Duncan has to choose between Tim's hustle and Oskar's less tough, but more skillful, play. Wing halves Doug Grant and Wilnot Tackoor will probably start for the Baby Blues. The intermediate forward line is still unsettled and will be so until the Senior picture becomes final.

Now it is time for my annual plea to Varsity students. It goes to the effect that all Varsity teams, especially winning ones, deserve some support from those for whom they do battle. So folks, if you are passing either the Front or Back Campus after noon tomorrow, stop and give the guys in blue shorts and white shirts a cheer on; they sure appreciate it!

For Big Weekend All Student Show

Returning alumni and study-weary undergraduates at this year's homecoming will see the greatest Homecoming Show yet, producer Charlie Grieco said yesterday.

The variety show-pep rally will be held at Varsity Arena, Oct. 16 at 8.30 p.m.

The football "Blues" will be introduced, and the Varsity band and cheerleaders from Toronto and Western will perform.

The show is made up of student talent. Julian Porter, (IV Vic), will be master-of-ceremonies. Original music has been written by Phil Cowan and Marv Catzman (both IV UC).

A kick-line will be featured and Hagood Hardy, a Trinity alumnus, who is now appearing at the Park Plaza, will give a jazz concert.

Tickets go on sale at the SAC office today, at $1.00 for graduates, and 50 cents for students.

The University of Toronto Debating Union is still waiting for applications for debating trials next week.

The trials, from Tuesday to Thursday, will determine who is to represent the university in team debates against McGill University, University of Pittsburgh, Brown University, and other American Colleges. There will also be radio and TV debates.

Applications for positions on the 16-man team must be picked up from the Students' Administrative Council office before Tuesday.

First round try-outs will be a prepared debate: "Resolved that Communist China should be admitted to the United Nations." For this round applicants may choose partners to debate with.

Winners of this round will proceed to a second impromptu round, where they will be given topics minutes before they are scheduled to debate.

Official verdicts and criticisms will be made available to all contestants. The team will be picked on a highest-point basis from the two rounds.

Competition for the team is keen this year. UTDU organizers say, but the lucky students to win spots on the team will have a very worthwhile time.

Further information on the UTDU may be obtained from Bev Ross, WA 3-8451.

WESTERN SQUASHED

By GEORGE WILSON
Varsity Staff Reporter

An inspired Varsity crew Saturday burst John P. Metras' Mustang bubble with one of the most convincing victories ever achieved by Blues at Varsity Stadium.

Before a sparse crowd of 11,483 spectators, Varsity Blues overpowered Western Mustangs to the tune of 38-14. Combining a solid defensive wall with a devastating ground and air offense, Blues rolled to 421 yards along the ground and in the air while holding Western to a total of 271 yards.

Answering any doubts about their first win two weeks ago, Varsity piled up 15 first downs to Western's 12 — five of the Mustangs' came during one 82 yard touchdown march in the fourth quarter — and held a definite edge in both offensive and defensive play for well over three-quarters of the game.

Led by the quarterbacking of Brian Aston, who passed for three touchdowns and scored one himself, Varsity proved to all present that they are without question the leading contenders for the Yates Cup, symbol of Intercollegiate supremacy.

Capitalizing on practically all opportunities, Blues made few mistakes in a well-played football game. Recovering a third down Art Turner fumble on the one-yard line early in the first quarter, Varsity started with a bang as Peter Joyce carried over for the TD. Walt Adams converted.

After an exchange of kicks, Blues had the ball on Western's 43-yard line. Aston carried 11 yards on an option, threw to Steve Chisholm for 19, and then hit Dave Pinkham, who made a beautiful catch in the end zone. Adams again converted and when Roger Stewart was rouged, on Larry Joynt's punt the scoring in the first half was completed.

Adams scored a field goal early in the third quarter but then Western started to threaten. A 35-yard Cosentino to Shepherd pass and convert by Mitchell was good for seven points. Then in the fourth quarter, led by the running and pass catching of Lionel Conacher, Mustangs carried 83 yards in 12 plays with Conacher going over from the five-yards line. The convert was good, putting Western right back into the ball game.

Not to be denied, however, the Blues struck explosively for three majors in the last ten minutes of the game. On the first play from scrimmage, after the Western kickoff from the latter's last TD, Aston threw a 40-yard pass to Dave Creswell in a play that covered 75 yards for the touchdown.

Sandy Bell then blocked a Turner kick which was recovered by Doug Baird on the Western 11. Joyce carried to the one and Aston took it over. Adams' convert was again good.

Curt Russell intercepted a Cosentino pass in the second-last minute on the Western 25-yard line and Dick Risk took Aston's pass to pay dirt. Adams convert completed the scoring, providing the Mustangs with their worst defeat at Varsity Stadium since '55.

The running and general play of Conacher and Shepherd were the only bright spots in Western's offense. On defence, Ted Roman and Jack Humphrey led an adequate defensive line that received little help from the Mustang backfield, which ap-

United Appeal — a time of crisis

United Appeal may stand or fall on this year's campaign.

UA officials have been told unless this campaign is a success, outlook for the organization is doubtful.

In 1956, UA's first year, officials considered the campaign a success when contributions poured in to push proceeds over the quota. But last year, proceeds fell below the objective.

An expert told UA officials this year statistics show any organizations missing its goal two years in succession will invariably fail to succeed.

So U of T campaign officials will be pushing harder than ever this year to fulfill an $8,000 United Appeal objective.

The U of T goal is part of an $8,000,000 UA drive throughout Ontario.

Volunteers will begin making the rounds of faculties and colleges today as the start of the week-long campaign.

An all-campus concert will highlight today's campaign opening as university and metropolitan musicians meet in a UA benefit show.

Toronto disc-jockey Phil MacKellar will lead the talent show in Convocation Hall from noon to 2 p.m.

U of T student, Jerry Gray will start off the show. Gray leads the Canadian folk-singing group, The Travellers.

Mike Whyte's quintet will play dixieland music at the show. The group is currently appearing at the Westbury Hotel.

Comedian Dave Broadfoot of "Spring Thaw" fame will also appear on the star-studded program.

Mike Kater's campus jazz quartet will round out the afternoon's entertainment. All proceeds from the show will go to UA.

No faculty-college challenges have been announced yet. Inter-faculty competitions have usually been part of UA campaigns.

Plans for faculty and college entertainment will be announced during the week. Canvassers will approach all students during the campaign.

Saturday volunteers will mingle among Homecoming Weekend crowds selling tags for UA. Monday students will gamble for UA at a giant Las Vegas night. Further details on these events will be announced later.

$40 For United Appeal After Seven Highjacked

Seven campus leaders spirited away by the Blinded Dog Society Thursday night were all returned by midnight Friday.

Original plans had called for their return during Saturday's football game.

outset, but $40 was raised for the United Appeal.

Students' Administrative Council president Vince Kelly and Varsity editor, Doug Marshall escaped unknowingly.

Blinded Dog members were waiting at Union Station for their return from Ottawa, where they were attending a conference.

Kelly, however, flew direct to Vancouver. Marshall returned by a later train.

Doug Wilson, of the Faculty of Medicine, was loaded into a Nash Metropolitan to be taken to Hart House's Caledon Hills farm. The car ran out of gas at Bloor and Bathurst Streets. Even then, the kidnappers were not sure where they were, and all good men

The three national political parties on this campus were told three weeks ago they were floating in a swamp of "inane dogmatism".

Since then they have done everything possible to justify the charge.

Campus politics should be an outlet for mature opinions on world and national affairs.

The outlet has in the past has been narrowed by the self-important rantings of slogan-weary wheels. But each year at least a few drops of useful knowledge have seeped through to water the arid intellects of the average undergraduate.

Under our present political system in which means and not ends are the major subject of difference, the campus parties can spotlight varieties of approach and present problems and arguments which undergraduates will have to face in the world outside.

We hoped the three national parties on campus were doing this.

We hoped they would refute their negative opponents by saying so.

But all they did was manufacture epigrammatic slogans about each other's incompetence and clog the outlet of opinion completely by petty bickering and puerile debate.

And we, like most students, are getting very, very tired of listening to them.

The United Appeal Depends On You.

How To Be Square

By MICHAEL JOHN NEMCHUK

Reground your bifocals kiddies. Uncle Mike is going to tell you all about some other angulars—namely squares who are roaming around this campus.

Every year Frosh fly to university to do battle against the Unbearable Squares. These little novices need a short course in square recognition. This is it. Hang on, kiddies.

First, the geometrical Square: Figure the angles, then ignore them. Dig the moment; don't be a slave to probabilities.

Second, the people Square: This is the enemy. Who is he?

... A square is anybody who believes that something alive being created is more important than a live being or his power to create. How does this apply.

A religion Square is someone who believes a religious system is more important than the souls it was created to have: i.e., life is destructible but the system isn't.

An anti-religion square is someone who believes that the limitations of formal religion eliminates the need to find spiritual understanding and absolves him of any necessity for sympathy toward people who are trying to get far out. The system is wrong, so the intention of the people using the system is wrong.

A Politics Square is one who sits on his fat asininity.

A Spirits Square is one who uses spirits to achieve states of mind he could just as easily have had without them.

An Intellect Square is someone who can prove he's sharper than anyone creative.

A psycho Square is someone who believes that nothing happens in the psyche except what there are names for; that the names used for psychotic or neurotic are really valid when applied to friction in normal minds; that when you've named a psychic process, you've drained it of usefulness, quality, and force and have reduced it to insignificance—especially by associating it with the most commonly conditioned resistances to biological functions. Which is to say, one you know that a car has a fuel tank and a motor, you can if you are a psychoanalysis square, easily figure out where the car is going and who is driving.

An Artistic Square is someone who believes that the important things about art are: cold-water flats, style of clothing or lack of it. (Let's all dig the cult of ugliness) style of painting, pretending you don't have money when you have it, getting lushed, finding someone to admire that nobody else has thought of yet; in short, any outward sign which will show you're unique so you won't have to go to the trouble of being unique by creating something.

Can't tell your hipsters without a program.

A Sex Square is someone who believes the right body and the right books produce the right sexual satisfaction; that the qualities of his own or the other person's spirit does not influence the quality of the experience; that technique makes up for lack of heart, that talking freely is equivalent to feeling and acting freely; that sex is only exercise or biology or water or seriousness or prettiness or the vulgarity or mother.

That will give you the idea—when ever you find the freedom, spontaneity, and unpredictability of life subordinated to some set of limitations there is the Square. What if we are 99% conditioning and habit and machinery—the other 1% is enough to fly on; it's the strange space where all true hipsters dwell.

Rules are tools, not containers. Don't get boxed. Raise your voices.

Welcome to the Campus.

Colts Clobber Baby Blues In Smashing 19-6 Win

LONDON, Oct. 10 — Western Colts out-ran, out-passed, and out-scored University of Toronto Baby Blues 19-6 in the second Intermediate game of the season here Friday.

Behind a strong running attack, Colts rolled to 224 yards rushing and 21 first downs while scoring their victory.

Colts took a 7-0 lead in the first half and rallied for two more touchdowns in the last quarter after Varsity had cut their margin to one point with an unconverted touchdown in the opening minutes of the second half.

Western kept the Baby Blues hemmed in their own end for the entire first quarter.

By DAVE GRINER
Varsity Staff Reporter

but were unable to score themselves.

The second stanza was more of the same sad story. Varsity simply could not move the ball and their defence finally folded under the pressure.

Wood counted the touchdown and Favalski the convert to account for the 7-0 lead at half-time.

Baby Blues finally got underway in the third quarter, but even then they did not take full advantage of the strong wind at their backs as they only counted six points.

Ev Rush set up the Varsity touchdown with a nice run on an option play that netted 22 yards. Dick Farr went over from six yards out, but that was the end of the scoring for the Baby Blues.

The last 15 minutes was an anti-climax. Colts counted twice more on touchdowns by Gary Boug, the quarterback, and another when the Varsity defence was badly foxed on a fake field goal that turned into a pass.

Baby Blues were outclassed in every department of the game by the fired-up Colts.

Western, while not a polished team, made up for their technical shortcomings with hustle and spirit.

On the field, Varsity presented a complete contrast. They were distinctly listless and blocked and tackled very poorly.

Rush was the star in a losing cause. While his pass average (5 for 14) does not look too impressive, it must be recorded that no less than three receivers dropped passes that they had in their hands when there was not a Western player within 30 feet of them.

In addition to his passing effort, Rush was the top ground gainer for the Varsity team with 68 yards in eight carries.

Farr also played well for Baby Blues, despite the lack of blocking from the forward wall.

Western had few standouts as their win was recorded through a team effort.

The loss puts Varsity in the cellar of the four team league and leaves them with only a mathematical hope of retaining the Shaw Trophy.

The next game for the Intermediates is at Queen's this Friday. Queen's beat Western 31-14, so Varsity will be up against some strong opposition.

According to some Western observers, the Queen's team has a big wingline, and a sharp running attack.

Dave Creswell

Dave Pinkham

peared particularly inept at times especially on pass defense.

But for a brief defensive lapse in the early part of the fourth quarter, the Blues displayed a marvellous team effort. The pass catching of Pinkham and Creswell along with the running of Joyce and Tim Reid accounted for the potent Varsity offense.

The players of both the offensive and defensive lines all deserve mention and the pass defense of Ian Knowles, Larry Joynt and Bobby Dann held the Mustang's aerial attack at bay for most of the game.

STATISTICALLY SPEAKING:

... Larry Joynt's punting average was 38 yards as compared to Art Turner's 23 yards . . . Aston completed 11 out of 20 passes for 286 yards, Pinkham catching four for 94 yards and Creswell, three for 97 . . . Turner and Cosentino completed 7 of 18 for 123 yards, with Conacher catching three for 51 yards . . . the Blues held Conacher to a 4.8 rushing average . . . Casual comment by Dalt White in the dressing room after the game: "What was the final score, I lost count?"

However, a great deal of credit must go to Coach White, who has moulded this team into solid championship material.

Blank Mustangs 4-0

By NORM SHEPHERD

The Varsity soccer teams Saturday recorded overwhelming victories against their Intercollegiate opponents, this time the receivers being Western. The 4-0 score does not reflect the superiority of the Varsity Blues.

The game was played under miserable weather conditions but Varsity mastered the elements and set up a continuous attack on the Mustang goal. Their power-play, however, was not rewarded until late in the first half, when Bill Webb flicked a pass from Brian Michez into the net.

The second half was almost shooting practice for the Varsity forwards who dominated control of the ball, and netted three times. Webb scored in a goal-mouth melee, and then Michez cut in from the wing to slam a hard shot past the Mustangs' keeper. Webb completed his hat-trick with a well-placed shot, after outpacing the entire Western defence.

Michez responded well to the brilliant support he received from the wizardly Bruno Bertolin, whose ball control was a pleasure to watch. Webb spearheaded the attack well, and was a thorn in the flesh to the Western defence.

Roy Green was a stalwart in defence and his distribution of the ball was excellent. Paul Avis and Ron Williams also shone in the defence which was never under severe pressure throughout the entire game.

The Intermediates had no difficulty in outclassing their Western opponents and scored nine times to express their superior play.

Varsity scored five times during the first half, with two goals each by Chris Carr, the best player afield, and bustling Geordie Walker. The Western defence gifted two goals to Varsity, and further goals were registered by Morris, Mahon and Walker.

Gaels Upset Redmen 21-0

KINGSTON, (Special) — Roaring into the win column with a vengeance, Queen's Golden Gaels trounced the McGill Redmen 21-0 here Saturday.

Gaels romped over for two quick touchdowns in the first quarter and added an insurance major in the fourth.

A spectacular 90-yard pass and run play with Mike Wicklum resulted in the first TD. Three minutes later Joe Reeve's timely pass interception, and sterling play by Bob McAleese and Dave Sharp set up Terry Porter's two-yard plunge for the major.

Centre Ron Delisle intercepted a McGill pass attempt on their own 20, and a quick lateral to McAleese resulted in the final Queen's touchdown.

Jocko Thompson booted a single to round out the scoring.

two trips were required to rescue them.

Wilson made his escape within minutes of arriving at the farm. Only two men were with him, both of whom wanted to have a look at the farm. Wilson walked away the minute their backs were turned.

The kidnapping of Pharmacy's Ed Davies was successful. His friends raised $10 to release him, and brought him home from the farm Friday afternoon.

Also released was Charlie Ledger, Wycliffe's governor-general. Wycliffe students connected with Blinded Dog activities were threatened with expulsion if Ledger was not returned immediately.

Trinity's Doug Grant was picked up by friends on Friday after they found out where he was and raced to the rescue. The ransom money of $30 was turned over to the Blinded Dogs at the farm, and Grant was brought back to the city.

Up to this point the Society was happy. "We hadn't really expected to raise any money at all," said one member.

Victoria's Clark Leith escaped Friday afternoon.

Bill Davis of University College and his brother were the last to be released.

The 30-odd members of the Blinded Dog Society finished off Friday night playing bridge and cribbage with each other.

Members were happy with the way things had worked out. "For a bunch of greenhorns in this kidnapping racket, I think we did pretty well," said one.

The $40 is to be presented to campus officials today.

UTDU frantic:

SITUATION CRITICAL

University debating is floundering under a mass of student indifference, an official said last night.

Unless more applications for the University of Toronto Debating Union turn up within the next few days, "we just can't hold trials," UTDU chairman Robin Beamish said.

Application forms have been available for a week, and 18 applications were received by Saturday morning.

Two years ago 150 applications were filed in the same period.

Faced with an extra-heavy program for the year, UTDU officials extended the original Friday deadline to "absolutely Sunday night," and then had to extend it again.

A prospective team of 16, with four stand-bys, will enter three tournament tours throughout the United States. They will participate in three radio programs, appear on two national telecasts and tour Toronto schools.

The team will also represent

Toronto in debates with other Canadian universities.

If enough applications are received, contestants will debate the topic "Resolved, that Communist China should be admitted to the United Nations."

Applicants who have survived elimination will then compete in impromptu debates.

"The try-outs are a good opportunity to get experience even if you don't think you're good enough," Beamish said.

Each contestant will receive a critical appraisal of his speech.

Names of those eliminated will be given to chairmen on interfaculty debating teams, Beamish said.

Application forms will be available in the Students' Administrative Council office. Further information can be obtained there.

chapel soon

The new University Lutheran Chapel is nearing completion.

Rev. F. A. Gumz, the man who has guided the project from his arrival in Toronto four years ago, said the new chapel would be ready in two months.

The $250,000 building located on Spadina Ave., was built for use primarily by university students.

A serious religious crisis faces university students, he said, and efforts by individual denominations are guided to overcome this crisis, he said.

His campaign emphasized the necessity of having students develop in a Christian climate, for present day students would soon be leaders of the future, he said.

Five Resign In Protest Following Crowe Firing

WINNIPEG, (CUP) — One professor at United College has resigned and at least four others will follow suit because of the firing of history professor Harry Crowe last summer.

The University of Manitoba's student paper says it has learned from United College sources that five or more professors will leave the college next spring.

Crowe was fired by United Principal W. C. Lockhart and United's Board of Regents when a letter from Crowe to a colleague at the college was intercepted and read by Lockhart.

The letter was critical of several aspects of the college and discussed the recent federal election.

Resigning members of the staff have refused to publish their names. Such knowledge on the part of students would reduce the professors' teaching efficiency, they claim.

"To visit the sins of Dr. Lockhart and the Board of Regents on the students would not be just," a United spokesman explained to The Manitoban.

"Nobody can support the use made (by Dr. Lockhart) of private mail, both from a Christian and from a social and democratic point of view. Tyranny should not go unchallenged, above all in a church college," the spokesman said.

Chairman of the Board of Regents, A. H. Watson, said rumors of Dr. Lockhart's "reassignment" were "nonsense." He denied any possibility of Lockhart being fired in the near future.

An unofficial meeting of United College graduates last week broke up after three hours when it was decided there were not enough facts available to make any decision on the case.

Two of Crowe's former colleagues in the history department left the meeting when a motion was passed barring reporters from the meeting.

The meeting was originally called by Crowe supporters to ask for the resignation of Dr. Lockhart.

A resolution to form a committee to reconcile Professor Crowe with the college administration was defeated.

Russian Education Scanned In Special U of T Quarterly

The mysterious, rumoured, and frightening potentialities of education in the Soviet Union stand revealed today with publication of the October issue of the University of Toronto quarterly.

Under the editorship of Prof. Douglas Grant, and with the cooperation of Dmitri S. Chuhavin, Russian ambassador to Canada, the quarterly's comprehensive scanning of Russian education at all levels is built on 10 articles by 14 top Russian educators.

Running in the face of alarm that the Russian educational system is rapidly outstripping the West in production of scientists, the Quarterly concentrates entirely on the state of the humanities in the largest European bloc behind the iron curtain.

The 10 articles comprising the issue deal with objective descriptions of the teaching of Russian and foreign languages, Russian literature, history, archaeology, philosophical sciences, political economy, and Soviet publishing.

Also included are discussions of the teaching of music, theatrical and fine arts. All articles were produced with the full co-operation of the Russian government.

Tone of the articles, previewers say, is to a large extent free from propaganda. While elements in their educational system troublesome to Russian educational authorities are not emphasized, there are frequent frank admissions of failure in some fields and determination to improve.

Parts of the Quarterly dealing with Russian publishing reveal a strong demand by the reading public for foreign language books and for literature of all kinds.

One article deals with the volume of foreign books circulated through officially sponsored libraries, and popular lecture series in foreign languages.

Lead article in the Quarterly deals with instruction in languages in Russian schools. Three languages, English, French, and German are taught in grade school from the fifth grade to the 10th.

Against the belief that Russian education aims at teaching only useful skills at the exclusion of wider knowledge of the world and of ideologies and ways of life other than Communist, the Quarterly shows that the aim of language instruction is "to teach pupils to read and understand original texts of moderate difficulty."

It is also indicated, however, that large classes and conflicts with vocational training prevent full realization of this.

About 600 hours of language instruction are accumulated in secondary schools. Teachers use tape-recordings, radio and phonograph records to further the teaching.

At the same time, articles indicate that improvement is sought in methods of teaching languages.

Empty Hall has Nervous Echoes From UTDU's Gallant Fifty-Five

There were many nervous students in Trinity College's spacious Convocation Hall last night as tryouts began for the U of T Debating Union's team for this year.

The younger students, freshmen out for their first try at university-level debating, shifted nervously in the echoing chambers while older hands, veterans of perhaps several winters of debating threw their voices ringing into the hall.

The deadline for applications was postponed twice to get a sufficient number of students to apply. By Saturday morning there were only 18. But last night there were 55.

And last night some of the debaters—who include the largest female group the UTDU has ever seen—said they wonder how they had the courage to apply.

Union official Bev Ross said she was "more than pleased" with their number—and their calibre. She was also gratified by the number of engineers and medical students that turned up, she said.

The screening process continues tonight and tomorrow night in Trinity. The end of the week will see a second round—this time on impromptu topics.

The 16-man team, with four standbys will be announced at the end of this week or the beginning of next.

Novices who began yesterday evening telling each other how sick they felt were saying afterwards maybe it was worth the worry.

All erstwhile Varsity photographers are asked to make a brief appearance in the office today at 1.15. Mike Cavanagh wants to make a speech.

all-varsity revue and jazz at noon

Thursday will be, spiked, spiced, and spiced with variety.

Squashed into the twelve short hours 'twixt noon and midnight are two full-scale entertainments — mounted revue-style the way students like 'em.

'One is the Homecoming Variety show, scheduled for 8.30 p.m. in Varsity Arena.

Produced by Charlie Grieco with Blues' tackle Julian Porter as master of ceremonies, the show is followed by a pep rally dance.

Other big entertainment tomorrow is the United Appeal Variety concert.

A combination of jazz and comedy, the concert is held in Convocation Hall from 12 to 2 p.m.

High spot for jazz fans will be Mike White, now playing at the Westover Hotel's "Basin Street".

Banjoist Jerry Gray and two other "Mikes" — Mike Snow and Michael Kater also appear.

White played at the Maison Dore until he turned professional two years ago. Since then, Edmond Hall and Art Hodes—both well known American jazzmen—have played with his Imperial Dixie Land Jazz Band.

U of T Dentistry grad Jerry Gray who was in Dentantics last year will return to campus. Last week he and the Travellers made a successful appearance with Pete Seeger at Massey Hall.

Vibraphonist Kater and the players in his newly formed quintet are U of T students.

Comedian Dave Broadfoot will provide a change of tempo. The Toronto grad has played in Spring Thaw and Clap Hands.

Phil MacKellar, of That Fellar MacKellar fame, will be master of ceremonies.

U of M Council Blasts UAL's "Rendez-vous"

MONTREAL—CUP—University of Montreal student council has passed a motion officially condemning the University Action League for meeting with Quebec Premier Maurice Duplessis to discuss the province's education problems.

The motion received almost unanimous support from members of the General Association of University of Montreal Students.

The League had presented a brief to the premier without consulting the president of the Association or the Committee of Six Presidents — the group which has been trying since last January to meet with the premier.

The Association charged the League had tried to give the impression that it acted on behalf of all students, and that members of every faculty in every university were members.

The League had acted in bad faith towards the U of M student council in many of the actions taken by the official student group, the motion said.

Action taken in meeting with the premier threatened student unity and solidarity, the motion declared.

Sixteen council members voted for the censure motion, and three abstained. There were no opposing votes.

Check Bounces....

The United Appeal will have to subtract $10 from its accounts. The money was part of the ransom cash obtained by the Blindfold Don Society in its giant kidnapping last weekend.

But yesterday ED Charlie Testart received a note from the Pharmaceutical Society saying their $10 ransom cheque would bounce.

The Society would call in police if the BDS organized retaliation, the letter said.

The cheque was given to the BDS at Caledon Hills Farm last Thursday in return for freedom for Society president Ed Davies.

Inco Metals at work in Canada

To help insure the purity of the milk you drink, the tanks on most modern dairy tank trucks are made of stainless steel containing about 8% nickel. The stainless steel for these tanks is manufactured right here in Canada from nickel supplied by Inco. In Sudbury, Ontario, Inco workmen mine, mill and smelt the nickel-bearing ore. Then it goes to Inco's Port Colborne plant for refining. The refined nickel is sold to a Canadian steel company for the production of stainless steel. And Canadian fabricators use this nickel-containing stainless steel in the manufacture of dairy tank trucks and many other products.

There's INCO NICKEL in modern stainless steel dairy tank trucks... and it helps keep your milk pure STAINLESS STEEL is a modern miracle metal. It resists rust and corrosion. It won't stain or tarnish. It has a bright, shiny surface that is easy to keep clean.

No wonder so many modern housewives want stainless steel sinks in their kitchens... stainless steel tableware in their dining rooms. Architects have used stainless steel for years to brighten and beautify the interiors of the buildings they design... and now they're using it for the exterior walls of buildings. Food processing industries depend on it to help keep their products pure.

Take the dairy industry, for example. Modern farms and dairies are now using stainless steel equipment for handling and processing milk. The milk seldom touches anything but stainless steel from milking to bottling time. Even the tanks on the huge trucks that haul milk from the farm to the dairy are made with stainless steel to protect the milk from contamination.

These dairy tank trucks are manufactured in Canada. The stainless steel that goes into them is also produced in Canada. Most of the stainless steel made in Canada for dairy equipment contains Inco Nickel. Another example of the way Inco metals serve the Canadian industries that serve you.

Nato Conference Ends Successfully

Canada's first youth conference on the North Atlantic Treaty Organization ended in triumph in Ottawa last week.

About 30 delegates clapped and cheered as the two-day conference was closed Saturday by chairman Edgar McInnis.

Toronto delegates Bob Lee and Paul Druckman called the conference "very successful" and "worthwhile". And Mr. McInnis, chairman of the Canadian Atlantic Coordinating Committee sponsoring the conference said it was "just what we had hoped for."

Most of the conference agenda was shrouded in secrecy as reporters were barred from speeches by leading national figures. Only Wilson Woodside allowed his speech to be recorded.

But U of T delegate Druckman said delegates were able to talk to speakers "on a personal basis".

First speaker Maj. Gen. J.

V. Allard, vice-chairman of the General Staff, spoke Friday morning on "The Problems of Nato in the Missile Age". He dealt with the question of whether massive retaliation is a deterrent to aggression.

Wilson Woodside, director general of the United Nations Association of Canada, spoke Friday afternoon.

Referring to recent crises over the Suez, Lebanon, Jordan and Algeria, Mr. Woodside said Nato members should consult each other on political matters and plans of military action.

Ministers should replace ambassadors on the Nato council, he said. Council members could then make decisions rather than refer to their countries for directions before each move.

Paul Tremblay, member of the Department of External Affairs, led the last conference session. Mr. Tremblay was recently a member of the Canadian delegation to Nato.

He spoke on "Nato as a Political Alliance." This session was also closed to reporters.

Most delegates felt the conference was a valuable experience, U of T representative Druckman said.

CCF Students Elected To Provincial Council

Two University of Toronto students, Jerry Caplan (III UC), and Hugh Peacock (II UC), were elected members of the Ontario CCF party's provincial council during the party's convention over the Thanksgiving weekend.

Peacock was made chairman of the council's youth committee. He was at the convention as a representative of Toronto's Davenport riding.

Caplan, representing CCFers on campus, said his appointment to the council "came as a complete surprise."

As members of the provincial council, the two will take part in carrying out party policy formed by the convention as a whole.

During the convention, the CCF came out for the first time as in favor of completely free higher education, Caplan said.

New Colony For Canada In Fourth-party Platform

Canadian recovery of the 13 "lost colonies" of the Atlantic seaboard will be one of the main aims of U of T's new Social Revisionist Party, it was announced last night.

The proposal was part of a five-part platform issued last night by T. G. Drew-Brook (IV Trin) and R. W. Reid (IV Vic), co-founders of the movement.

The platform incorporates the Revisionists' stand on Canadian economic and cultural development and national expansion, defence and reforms.

"We, the Social Revisionist Party, now presume to offer to an enlightened public a brief list of our political aspirations and intentions," the statement began, "and, eschewing tawdry sentimentality and vulgar oratory, we boldly subject our program both to the coldly rational scrutiny of our contemporaries and to the inexorable judgment of history."

If elected, the party's founders said they will "translate Canada's vast but undeveloped potential into actual production figures."

"Appalled by the two-pronged menace of industrial barbarism and pseudo-intellectualism, the Party feels that the increased promotion of powerful national organs of dissemination, such as the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, is necessary for the revitalization of our national culture."

"In the field of national expansion we strongly advise a two-fold goal — the erasure of a formidable blot from the national escutcheon and the addition of a docile and valuable sphere of influence."

The Social Revisionists aim to do this, the co-founders said, "by aiming our foreign policy at the eventual recovery, gradual or otherwise, of the 13 Lost Colonies along the Atlantic seaboard."

"The resultant Canadian Raj would provide an excellent training-ground for young men who would later fill administrative posts at home."

Drew-Brook and Reid first announced the formation of the Social Revisionists several weeks ago.

Students To Catalogue No More Excavating

Reports that there will be no fall dig for Anthropology students this year, were confirmed last night by Dr. Norman Emerson.

Dr. Emerson explained that too much material had been accumulated over the 11 years that the digs have taken place, and that more time should now be spent in analyzing and cataloguing the material already found.

"We decided that it had to come to an end sometime," he explained. "Now I can devote my time to writing reports on our past work."

It was also felt that the pre-Meds, who had formed the nucleus of the groups, could profit more from bone study and lab work, than excavation.

The fall 'digs', which were started by the Anthropology department in 1947, have become an institution with student and amateur archaeologists alike. Indian sites at Woodbridge, Downsview, Scarborough and Markham have been excavated, and all have yielded rich material from Canada's pre-historic past.

wrong on rights

We were wrong.

Two weeks ago we told you the National Federation of Canadian University Students was handling the problem of aid to university students with maturity and intelligence.

It is not.

We also told you the Nfcus platform contained no "high-flown phrases about the right to education and the privileges of the individual". It didn't.

But it does now.

At the Federation's national conference in Ottawa last week discussion flowed over three major fields: support to students involved in political crises in other countries, aid to university students in our own country, and the situation in Quebec.

Pivoted against these backgrounds was the all-pervading question of a student's rights, his privileges and his obligations.

A special symposium was conducted midway through the conference on the subject. The idea was to clarify the Nfcus stand and to present a declaration representing the views of Canadian university students as a whole.

No such declaration emerged.

What did emerge were a series of slogans culled from the enlightened philosophy of the last two centuries backed-up by the remodded doctrines of the decadent thirties.

Delegate after delegate rose to stir indolent souls with thrilling words about our "innate and undeniable right to education", our "inviolable right to free speech" and rounding the whole thing off with wild generalizations about the "fundamental rights of man".

Only twice did tender consciences, reeling under the deluge of inflammatory demands, dare to question what delegates meant by the word "right" and suggest that certain obligations must go with it. Both objections were ignored.

Your Toronto delegation, with no remarkable oratorical powers, tried to temper the tone of the debate by suggesting that moderation would achieve more than ranting. They were called "timid".

A doctrine of rights of any sort involves more arguments than we could possibly outline here. Certainly more is involved than Jefferson's ringing statement that "all men are created equal; that they were endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness".

Such declarations, if taken literally and assumed without the corresponding duties implied, lead to nothing but anarchy.

Any national conference of Canadians should have the perception—if not always the intelligence—to realize that the demands of one segment of society must be considered in the context of society as a whole.

When such perception is lacking in a body purporting to represent university students, the situation becomes just a little tragic.

Nfcus would do well to listen to Rousseau, the prophet responsible for many of the inspired speeches made last week.

An acute politician as well as an excellent philosopher, he warned:

"Never exceed your rights, and they will soon become unlimited".

The Canadian Myth

Dear Sir:

Anyone coming to Canada from England has certain preconceptions of the American Way of Life stamped firmly in his mind. If he is wise he will be prepared to have his expectations upset in some respects, and yet in the experience of at least one person who made the trip, it was the features that he had heard most about that provided the biggest surprises.

It is known all over the world that in North America the personal comfort of man is lavishly provided for. From the cellar to the dome everything that could be desired in a seventh heaven is found, and it is inconceivable that what the house has the university lacks, for the scale of expenditure on establishments of higher learning in this continent is a wonder of the world. The shock to a newly arrived refugee from the horrors of Oxford, where it may be necessary to walk half the length of a football pitch in order to have a bath, on finding that he cannot have one here at all, unless he is prepared to crash a woman's college, is difficult to imagine. A shower is not the same thing.

The startled immigrant finds little reassurance in the field of sport. Again it is the disproportion between the money spent and the apparent facilities provided that is unexpected. With almost as many undergraduates as Oxford and Cambridge together the University of Toronto has only about one eighth the number of football fields. Investigation however reveals that at Toronto facilities for individual activities, in particular gymnasiums, are much more lavishly provided than they are in England. Yet at Oxford at least three quarters of the undergraduates regularly take part in some sport; once compulsory activity finishes, how many do here?

However these are minor stabs of bewilderment compared with feelings aroused by the official attitude towards alcohol and women, at least in so far as they are allowed in men's residences. With rare exceptions they seem to be completely forbidden, though whether for their soothing or their stimulating effects it is difficult to guess. It seems that the puritan spirit is much stronger here than it is in the country of its birth, for British universities as a rule place little or no limitation on the presence of liquor, and only moderate restraint on that of women in their undergraduates' rooms.

The impression given is that in these matters at least, the Canadian's boast that his country combines the essential features of both the American and British ways of life is not fulfilled. To this highly biased observer that seems to be a pity.

O. F. G. Sitwell, (SGS).

Come To The Aid

Dear Sir:

You will be pleased to receive this letter. I have risen to the bait and wish to voice my objections to your editorial of Oct. 14, "All Good Men."

I believe you are unfair, unfounded and unrealistic. Three weeks ago the Liberals proposed a tri-party debate on the record of the Frost government, a sorely needed discussion of an administration that has been getting away unscathed for years. The other two parties accepted the challenge stating, in terms relatively free of insults, their positions. Since then negotiations have broken down, but the political clubs have continued their activities.

The P.C.'s had a meeting with Frank McGee. The CCF heard Hazen Argue and put out a very constructive issue of Campus Comment. The Liberals haven't done anything. At Hart House the trade union movement was very vigorously discussed.

How about the proponents of the various fourth parties? They have all hurled invective and insults at those students engaged in politics. 'Grotesque, flat-footed, tawdry and inane' are only some of the adjectives used.

The student who is shocked at the thought of an atomic war, who is disturbed by unemployment, the crisis in education and the growing materialism of our society joins a political club to discuss these problems and proposed solutions to them. He works at getting his party elected and has fun doing it. I suggest that you and others, who, as I am, are disturbed at the level of politics in this country, support and work for the party of your choice, for the party system is the backbone of our democracy.

OPERA FESTIVAL

che bello ballo

King Ferdinand II of Naples and his censors ruined Verdi's opera, "Un Ballo in Maschera". Verdi was forced to change the setting of his opera from Pomerania to Boston! And Italian melodrama is quite un-Bostonian.

The current Opera Festival production of this opera at the Royal Alex under the stage direction of Herman Geiger-Torel takes the Boston setting too seriously, and mummifies the first act. In the last scene the static nature of the staging is almost a tragic flaw: nobody rushes to support Riccardo (his page stands still), nobody lays a hand on the villain, who has slain his beloved ruler before the eyes of all present. Such gross insensitivity can cause great anguish to an Italian, and did to me.

The production is blessed however, with the supremely satisfying Riccardo of Giuseppe Campora who looked, sang and acted the role as close to perfection as one could hope for. In fact, the musical performance is on a very high plain. Maestro Barbini who conducted used an enlarged orchestra of some of Toronto's better players which played rather well when compared to the former standard of orchestra playing in the Opera Festival.

Mr. Campora shone above all others in the cast because of his complete awareness of what he was singing. He had genuine feeling for the words, impeccable diction (including some niceties of the Milanese aristocracy) and his every gesture was suited to the text. These same important qualities were unfortunately lacked by many others in the cast.

Llona Kombrink sang Amelia with marvelous feeling and vocal dexterity, and was a perfect vocal match for the delicate tessitura of Campora's voice in the second act duet. I felt however, that she was more interested in maintaining a becoming stance than being sullied in the conflicts and depth of the opera. Once again, the staging may be to blame.

Harry Mossfield's robust Renato was very satisfying. The menacing, almost hollow tones which he can produce at mezza voce and which made him a success as Scarpia last year served him well in the third act of Un Ballo. His famous aria, "Eri tu", could have been more effective with more dramatic orchestral support; Maestro Barbini conducted with a noticeable lack of bite in this aria.

Of the comprimari, Jan Rubes and Andrew MacMillan as the dyed-in-the-wool villains, Sam and Tom, were the most satisfying while none of the others achieved real distinction. The Ulrica of Irene Loosberg although vocally uninhibited seemed inextricably bound to the red lantern at which she stared for most of her stay on stage. Somewhat immobile for a tempestuous sorceress. Shiela Piercy who delightfully sang Oscar, the page, and convinced most of the audience with her acting, was severely hampered by poor diction.

Sets and costumes are very good. The production is well worth seeing, and is exceptional for the singing of its principals. Vocally it is a triumph, and heralds a very marked improvement in Toronto's opera season.

Elmo Ciprietti

tall tales

The Tales of Hoffman, Jacques Offenbach's fantastic opera, despite glaring errors in production, still proved to be one of the finest presentations the Opera Festival has done in its ten-year history.

Based loosely on several of the German poet's gothic tales, this opera displays a considerable maturity in Offenbach's musical development. Veering sharply away from the more profitable channels of musical comedy, the French composer set out to write a serious opera, and strangely enough, accomplished this almost impossible task. It contains some of Offenbach's finest music, and provides a source of inspiration for imaginative settings, costumes, and staging. Unfortunately, these elements were noticeably lacking in this production.

The lighting, which should have been complementing and highlighting the atmosphere of each scene, succeeded in all but completely destroying it; the costumes should have been flimsy and fantastic; instead they were far too solid and real. The same applies to the sets, except for the Venetian scene, where at least some imagination was manifest. As to the staging, it was almost non-existent; the evil genius never seemed to budge an inch once he got on the stage, unless it was to make a sudden dash to the centre spot at the end of each aria.

The chorus was ragged, especially in Act One, where they were almost completely out of time with the orchestra, and seemed incapable, for the first two acts at any rate, of ending in unison.

Principal Jim Hawthorne has a very strong voice, but not an especially beautiful one; nevertheless, he presented the audience with a very unusual spectacle—that of a tenor who has not gone to waist. His 1958 haircut did not seem to fit into the whole scheme of things.

Morley Meredith sang well, but hammed up Dr. Miracle too much, and Dr. Coppelius not nearly enough. His Dapertutto was excellent, although the final notes of "So Gleom With Desire" could have been held longer.

Marguerite Gignac played Hoffman's four loves with her usual brilliance, particularly in the Venetian scene, where she had to ensnare the poet's soul in a very unsexy castume.

Jan Rubes was too self-controlled to bring fully across the frantic jealousy of Schlemil, though his Crespel was a nicely portrayed character. Perhaps the most pleasing singer of the evening was Joanne Ivey as Hoffman's muse, accompanying him on all his journeys in disguise. Miss Ivey combined a good singing voice with fairly competent acting.

There were several very interesting omissions in the score; one was the servant Franz's aria; the other was the section wherein Hoffman recovers his reflection by smashing the mirror. An extraordinary fast second act curtain may have been responsible for the latter cut.

All in all, it was a fine show, even if the Governor-General's entrance was the major production of the evening.

Warren Wilson

Orders To Kill

In the climatic sequence of ORDERS TO KILL at the International Cinema, Paul Massie brings a stone wrapped in a stocking down upon the head of his French host. The Frenchman, a petty Resistance contact man, whom Massie has been sent to kill for suspected collaboration with the Nazis, turns towards Massie before the final blow can be administered and asks "Why"? This "why" is the question that ORDERS TO KILL poses and tries to answer. It does not succeed.

Directed by Anthony Asquith, a respected director, one of whose recent movies was THE BROWNING VERSION, ORDERS TO KILL has been called "the most honoured British film in a decade". It has received high praise at half a dozen international film festivals, and was chosen to represent Great Britain at both the Stratford and Vancouver Film Festivals. Critics can find nothing since THE THIRD MAN to compare with it.

The praise is incredible. When ORDERS TO KILL is not simply ridiculous, it is downright embarrassing. It takes a vital theme and hangs on it all the clichés of the spy thriller culminating in a finale in which the hero, newly cleaned and pressed, slips the widow an envelope full of money and goes off into the sunrise feeling that all is right with the world.

Any value the movie might have had through tight pacing is ruined right at the beginning with a long training sequence. Between Massie's learning how to destroy from James Robertson Justice, and mother, Lillian Gish, imploring him to take care of himself, half the movie is frittered away before it comes to grips with its problem. And the problem itself is buried in extraneous considerations. Is the movie a denunciation of murder, no matter who is killed? If so, why is the question of guilt or innocence of the murdered man dragged through the movie like a red herring? Or is the point of the movie that it's a shame that the innocent have to suffer with the guilty? If so, why does the hero go through his great alcoholic agony prompted not by a question of the guilt or innocence of his victim—he is not sure of this—but simply by the reproachful, questioning eyes of a dying man, innocent or guilty?

With only the flabbiest idea of what it is all about, the movie gropes toward its soppy conclusion. And there is no help at all from the pedestrian photography, sluggish editing (except once) and pointless music.

The whole production, both in poignancy and pointedness is not worth as much as one short, sure, moment in THE BRIDGE OF THE RIVER KWAI, when the young Canadian soldier faced with his first military murder, cannot go through with it and must have it done for him.

Culture At Vic

The Park Gallery has finally taken down the miscellany of pictures that has been on display there since last summer. And an extremely interesting exhibition has been put up.

Marion Greenstone, claimed in the Park Gallery catalogue to be one of America's leading younger painters, has recently moved to Canada. This is the first exhibition of her work in this country.

The large room at the Park is filled with her oil paintings; the smaller room contains drawings and collages. The oils are large unframed compositions, arrangements of luminous crystalline shapes vaguely suggesting strange representations of the natural world.

These works can't be called abstract or non-representational. In

Vert Ego

Vertigo (Show of The Week) is Alfred Hitchcock's latest suspense film.

All the master's time-worn touches are here: colourful, out of the way locales (this time in and around San Francisco); a fast-moving opening sequence; eccentric characters (a trumpy hotel clerk); Mr. Hitchcock's traditional walk-across part; long, heavily directed clinches (James Stewart and Kim Novak); meaningless, but delightful conversational bits on off-beat subjects (brassieres); everything, in fact, except suspense.

For this Director Hitchcock can blame no one but himself. Whenever a situation fraught with suspense arises, Alfred invariably tips his hand like a big-hearted poker player unwilling to fleece his buddies. From then on the viewer simply follows the action through to its already known, contrived conclusion. These doubtful high points are bridged by an amorphous mass of tedious dialogue and a studiously involved story line that would test the ability of Theseus. The result is not "vertigo" (medically defined as giddiness), but rather "acute boredom".

On the credit side of the cinematic ledger are some picturesque shots of San Francisco and environs, a colourfully bizarre dream sequence and some fantastically abstract opening credits. Jimmy Stewart draws and shambles his way through another competent performance. As for Kim, she is suitably bovine, but spends most of her time as the usual Novacuum.

The film's most telling line comes from Actor Stewart who, quaffing a tall Scotch, comments, "I sure need this". And so did we.

As the exhibition at Vic proves, Lillias Torrence Newton is a competent portrait painter who captures a likeness, and provides her sitters with a pleasant painting as well. Hardly the person to be chosen to represent Canadian art on the international scene as she was last winter, but certainly not bad enough to ignore.

Committee Plans Union Financed By University

Funds for University College's proposed student union will come from the full-scale U of T expansion fund campaign next spring.

Originally money to build the union was to be subscribed from alumni, but the U of T Board of Governors have agreed that cost of the union will come out of finances for the main university expansion fund.

UC Literary and Athletic Society vice-president Jane Weber has announced plans for the new building — to cost more than $1,000,000 — would be laid before a special Board committee before Christmas.

A Lit meeting Wednesday approved formation of a committee to investigate possibilities of a union for the college.

The proposed building will include recreational facilities for the whole college. Plans would necessitate a four or five storey building, Miss Weber said.

Logical site for the union would be the present Women's Union on St. George St. A large cafeteria, a large theatre, music rooms, locker rooms, and common rooms are included in the plans.

Discussion Of Principles At First CCF Meeting

The campus CCF will justify its existence Thursday night.

A club executive meeting last week decided the party had two obligations to fulfill on campus. First, the club should "illustrate to those who have no political knowledge that the CCF is a vital and dynamic group", party chief Gerry Caplan said last night.

Once this awareness has been formed, "we must educate people on campus in all the aspects of democratic socialism," Caplan said.

The first aim is adequately fulfilled by party debates and statements, he said.

Now the club has decided to organize discussion groups every second week for educational purposes.

Thursday a club open meeting will discuss what the party would do in fields of economics, education and culture if it were put in power, Caplan said.

The meeting will be held at the home of Trinity professor George Greebe at 5 Washington St.

Prof. Greebe and his wife are both active in CCF affairs. Both have run for election on federal and provincial tickets.

Conservatives will also open their doors in a meeting this week.

A provincial parliament member will speak to the club today at 4:15 p.m. in Rm. 37, University College.

MPP Robert Macauley will defend the Frost government record at the club meeting.

Mr. Macauley is vice-chairman of Ontario Hydro in the provincial cabinet. He has challenged Paul Wintermeyer, Liberal candidate for party leadership, to public debate.

Tim Reid Scoring Leader "Choo-choo" One TD Back

A veteran Varsity Blue backfielder has taken a six-point lead in the individual scoring race as Intercollegiate play nears the halfway mark of the 1958 season. Tim Reid, although held scoreless in Saturday's clash with Western Mustangs, has counted five touchdowns in three games for 30 points. He's trailed by Western's Lionel Conacher with 24 points on four touchdowns. Varsity's Peter Joyce and Wally Bulchak of McGill each have three majors for 18 points. All told, Blues have eight men among the 28 who have scored so far this season. Western has nine, Queen's seven and McGill four.

Halfback Walt Adams follows behind team-mate Joyce and Bulchak with 13 points, accumulated on two field goals and seven converts. Adams leads the league in field goals.

Interfaculty Summary

Trinity College Black Panthers open defence of their Mulock Cup Football championship this afternoon, tangling with Senior Skule on the Back Campus at 4 o'clock.

Elevated to Group One following their unbeaten season in 1957, Trinity faces tough competition from the senior Engineers, St. Mike's and Victoria.

Action continues tomorrow with Forestry and Pharmacy battling in one game, and Victoria meeting St. Mike's in the other.

In soccer play yesterday, Schutz and Crawford tallied to give Pre-Meds A a 2-0 win over UC.

Ward and Cooke counted second-half goals to give Wycliffe a 2-0 win over Knox in the other encounter.

Lacrosse and volleyball schedules also begin today as the intramural program swings into high gear.

Queen's ace Jocko Thompson, although far down in the scoring lists, leads in singles, having amassed four in three games.

Gaels' top point-getters are halfbacks Mike Wicklum and Terry Porter, each with two touchdowns.

Reid and Joyce will be out to improve their records when Blues entertain Queen's surprising Golden Gaels in Varsity Stadium this Saturday.

Frank Tindall's Tricolor pulled the upset of the year in a typical touch of McManus color): "Queen's murdered 'em!"

It was a result no one expected, particularly after Western had clobbered the Gaels 46-16 in London two weeks ago. Queen's were bruised and battered after that slaughter, but have apparently lost none of that Scottish grit.

Intercollegiate grid activity, blanking McGill's hot-and-cold Redmen 21-0 in Richardson Stadium, Kingston, Saturday.

It was not a succession of breaks that gave Queen's their first league win in two years. Gaels out-played McGill all the way, and came close to increasing the margin on occasion.

Varsity assistant coach John McManus, who scouted the game, opined yesterday (with

by john brooks

varsity sports editor

Varsity Blues stole a page from the annals of Western Mustang history and converted it into a resounding victory in Varsity Stadium Saturday afternoon.

John Metras' Mustangs have, through the years, gained repute as a fourth-quarter ball club. They have pulled many a game out of the fire in the dying minutes.

The first contest here this season, with Western knocking at a six-point Varsity lead with the minute flag up, was a good example.

Saturday, the shoe was on the other foot.

Perhaps it was one touchdown that fired the Blues and exhausted the Mustangs. Perhaps it was an inevitable burst of scoring power that swept Varsity to victory.

Or perhaps it was because the sun shone through the clouds to start the final period. But whatever it was, it floored everyone in the Stadium, including 11,483 damp fans.

And it stunned the Mustangs most of all. With only a three-point lead early in the fourth period, Blues struck for two quick touchdowns that virtually eliminated any chance of a typical Mustang revival.

It was a nifty bit of brain-work that started the final onslaught. Running a pass pattern in the third quarter, Varsity's Dave Creswell had discovered a clear path down the centre.

This he mentioned to quarterback Brian Aston, and this the duo put into operation two plays after Western had marched 80 yards to boost the score to 18-14.

Creswell knifed through the middle, took a perfect pass in the clear, and out-gunned Doug MacKenzie to pay dirt. It was a beautifully-executed play to watch, as was the avalanche that followed.

Solid defensive work set up the next major. Tackle Sandy Bell sliced into the Mustang backfield to block a third-down kick by Art Turner and, end Doug Baird recovered on the 11.

It was interesting to note the actions in front of the Western bench as Turner sadly watched Baird leaping on the pigskin. Coach Metras removed his white stetson in haste, and dashed for line coach Ed DeArmon.

He grabbed DeArmon by the arm in most uncomplimentary fashion, and gesticulated wildly toward the field while undoubtedly telling his assistant that kicks are not meant to be blocked.

At that point, however, there was not much Metras, DeArmon, Western fans, cheerleaders or band could do about it. The Mustangs were licked.

Brian Aston, who had contributed a whale of a ball game (including 12 completions in 18 pass attempts for an average gain of 23.8 yards) dove across to make it 30-14.

It was after the "convert that One-Eyed Benny, who had predicted a 33-21 win for Toronto, sat back and said: "It is now being time for the Horsies to count a touchie."

Captain Curt Russell and end Dick Risk had other plans. The clock read 14 seconds to play when Russell intercepted a Western pass, and a bit less when Risk hauled in an Aston pass and dove across for the final major.

The Western denouement was complete. And not too many people we talked to think Mustangs have enough to come back and win the November 1 game in London.

But J. W. Little Memorial Stadium has been a some-time jinx for Varsity teams, and Western will have their backs to the wall, as well as to a solid throng of supporters.

Teams don't often bounce back to victory from a 24-point losing margin. (And don't say: "But look what Argos did to Hamilton" — Western isn't likely to add a Ronnie Knox by next month.)

Nevertheless, we don't eliminate the possibility, particularly when it's Western Mustangs. And if you haven't already made arrangements for the November 1 weekend, get cracking.

There could be a celebration any red-blooded Varsity fan wouldn't want to miss.

Matmen Open Training Today With 18 Positions Wide Open

The Varsity Intercollegiate wrestling team commences practices today in the Hart House wrestling room. Coach Jack Amos expects a large turnout for first night practices as nearly all of last year's Varsity team are back, as well as several other wrestlers from OAC and Western who are taking post-grad work here.

However, Amos wants to emphasize the team's never-ending need for freshman wrestlers. This is an ideal sport for anyone who is too small for football and yet wants to take part in a vigorous activity.

The team is composed of nine men—one at each of the following weights: 123 lbs., 130, 137, 147, 157, 167, 177, 191, and heavyweight. No matter what your size is, there is a place for you on the team, and with a Senior and Intermediate team, there are 18 positions to be filled.

The schedule consists of weekly meets with Western, OAC, Queen's, Buffalo and Rochester Institute of Technology, as well as other exhibition meets.

Beginner wrestlers are urged to come out immediately for practices as they are guaranteed individual instruction from the coach and more experienced wrestlers. Scheduled practices are on Wednesdays and Fridays, but many of the boys will be working out every night of the week. This team promises to be the best in many years and has an excellent chance of capturing the Intercollegiate crown.

Two-Party Debate Planned As Accusations Die Down

U of T's tri-party accusation furor has simmered down to concrete plans for debate—minus one party.

Campus Liberals and Conservatives are putting finishing touches on arrangements for a verbal contest on the topic "Resolved, that the Frost government is aged, incompetent and irresponsible."

The controversy was sparked two weeks ago by Liberal challenges to Progressive Conservatives. Liberals offered the topic as a starting point for a Liberal-PC debate.

Conservatives immediately accepted the challenge, and suggested the CCF be included in a tri-party debate on the topic. CCF spokesmen replied they would be happy to debate the other parties, and added the topic applied equally to Liberal party leaders.

Now a debate is planned for the end of October, but the CCF will not be included. "It was strictly a Liberal challenge to the PCs," Conservative publicity director Dave Crane said last night.

"Besides, the Liberals and PCs are the main parties in Ontario, and a two-party debate has proved more successful than one with three parties," Crane said.

CCF spokesmen were not available for comment on the development last night.

Because of recent club activity, PCs have postponed election of a campus parliamentary leader until Oct. 20, Crane said.

Ex-PC president Del O'Brien has been elected to the Ontario Young Progressive Conservatives, he said. O'Brien will represent the PC student federation.

The Varsity, as always, needs reporters. Reporters are the life blood of any paper. Give—and learn. Besides—it IS thicker than water.

Crestfallen Student Told Can Stickers - "Or Else"

The Students' Administrative Council stuck to past policy last night and gummed up a city-wide commercial venture by a U of T student.

SAC denied Ronald Raisman, IV UC, permission to use the University of Toronto crest on his decal car-window stickers, and told him to withdraw the stickers from circulation within seven days.

The SAC is official custodian of the crest.

Advised last night of the SAC decision, Raisman said he deserved "commendation" rather than "this SAC action" for his "initiative."

"I think the University should offer an apology," he said.

Raisman's stickers, designed and distributed by himself, are available in some 12 outlets. Only two of these are on campus.

Raisman said profits on the enterprize were "minimal". The stickers have been available for nearly a year, he said.

The sticker issue came up last night after SAC heard a formal letter from Raisman asking permission to use the stickers.

In his letter, Raisman said he had not known until recently that the SAC was official custodian of the crest.

A unanimous motion passed by SAC said the crest could not be used for private commercial ventures without permission.

SAC secretary-treasurer A. E. MacDonald said several commercial firms, among them a pyjama company, had asked to use the crest in past years.

Permission for such requests has always been refused, he said.

Another motion, passed 20 to one said Raisman should be told permission has been denied, and asked to withdraw his stickers within seven days.

The motion added the University should be asked to take appropriate action unless this were done.

Other car-window stickers printed by the U of T press, are available to students. They do not incorporate the crest.

"My crest is superior to others and fulfils a need", Raisman said in a telephone interview last night.

"I didn't bother the SAC with this originally, but took the initial risk myself," he said.

In debate on the motion, University College rep Sue Davis asked the council to be "realistic" and commend Raisman on his initiative.

Pharmacy rep Irv Gildberg suggested the SAC be careful because the federal government might consider the custodianship a "monopoly".

Raisman refused to say what action he would take on the SAC's motion.

Escort Kingston Marathon As Cavalcade Goes Forth

KINGSTON, Oct. 15.—CUP— A 24-hour relay run involving an estimated 100 runners, the co-operation of two police forces and a fleet of about 20 cars will usher Queen's University contingent to Toronto's Homecoming Weekend.

The event, termed one of the biggest in the history of Canadian football stunts, will see the 100 Queen's students endure an all-night relay run to arrive in Toronto at 12.30 p.m. Saturday.

Backed by Queen's Alma Mater Society, the scheme was hatched Oct. 8 and announced by AMS president Morton Low. Student support of the scheme, AMS officials say, has been overwhelming.

Runners will leave here at about 1 p.m. Friday following a pep rally in front of Fleming Hall and will bear a torch and a replica of the football used in the first Queen's-Toronto game 50 years ago.

The 167-mile run will terminate in the T. Eaton Co. parking lot on Hyter St. at 12.30 p.m. Saturday. A Queen's parade involving a pipe band, brass band, Queen's University mascot, cheerleaders and marchers will move off from there to Varsity Stadium.

The replica football will be presented to U of T SAC president Vincent Kelly by AMS president Morton Low on the 35-yard line immediately preceding the game at 2 p.m.

Low will also read a proclamation prepared by the AMS citing the Queen's-Toronto game as "unsurpassed in the annals of Canadian sport."

Conditions of the proclamation will also specify that the replica ball be returned at the time of every Queen's-Toronto game to the home university until the next game.

Runners will leave Kingston in track dress. Overnight runners will wear heavier clothing.

A score of cars will take runners to their relay points on the Kingston highway where they will take up the ball and torch.

Ontario Provincial Police have agreed to co-operate with the run along the highway and will escort runners and direct traffic during relay changes.

Kingston radio station CKWS will operate all night to cover the run, and arrangements are being made for press and media coverage of the event.

In Toronto, Metropolitan Police traffic department has agreed to assist in controlling traffic for the Queen's parade from Hayter St. to Varsity Arena.

Reform Church Aids Apartheid

A Rabbi from Johannesburg last night told students the white policy of segregation in South Africa is the essence of "tribal mentality and hard-headed stubbornness" in the Canterbury Centre.

Speaking on "Race Problems in South Africa", Dr. Andre Ungar said while "the negro population has become detribalized, the white population in turn is becoming tribalized in its present attitude toward race problems."

The Doctor was expelled from South Africa because of his violent opposition to the present segregation policy of the government.

The purpose of segregation is subordination, and the first intention of the white is to keep the negro down, Dr. Ungar said.

"The platforms of the government may be carried out under different flags, but nevertheless all the forces of the present administration are directed toward the suppression of the black race," the Rabbi said.

Calling South Africa a "tragic and beautiful country," he said the whites are re-establishing a "fence policy" by thinking of the negro in terms of "we" and "them".

Referring to the ten million blacks and one million whites, Dr. Ungar said the whites will have "their throats slit" if they persist in antagonizing the majority.

He blamed the Dutch Reform Church as the radical element behind the government, responsible for much of the present racial friction.

Forecasting the future of South Africa as "grim", Dr. Ungar said world opinion has a great deal to do with a possible solution to the problem.

"South African whites look to other whites for support," he said. "If they see there is no sympathy for their actions it will contribute to softening their hard-fast policy."

UofM Student Council Says Bistrisky Non-U

The University of Montreal students' council denied last night that the new National Federation of Canadian University Students president represented U of M.

Although Mortimer Bistrisky is a first-year law student at U of M, he is actually representing Montreal's Sir George Williams College for NfCUS, the council said.

Bistrisky sat on the Sir George delegation at the NfCUS national conference in Ottawa last week. He graduated from Sir George last year, and sat with their delegation because he was Quebec regional chairman at that time.

Since he was nominated by and sat with the Sir George delegation, he cannot be considered a U of M student — even though he is one, or was one until he took the full-time job.

The council said it did not wish to prejudice chances of a U of M student winning the presidency next year through the error.

"We nevertheless want to congratulate Mortimer Bistrisky on his recent election and assure him the U of M as a whole will give him complete support in his every initiative," the council said.

UTDU Is Still Minus Many U's

Hopeful debaters can still apply for admission to the University of Toronto Debating Union.

About 65 applications have been received so far, UTDU chairman Robin Beamish said last night. But officials won't close applications until at least 100 students have applied, he said.

Debating calibre of those who have tried out has been very good,

Beamish said. But officials want a larger selection to choose from, since the team will "represent the university in over 20 United States colleges and universities, and must represent the best debating at Toronto."

The final team of 16 members and four stand-bys will make three debating tours in the United States and make five radio and television broadcasts.

Carabins

Applications for Carabin weekend are running a little below last year's record. Weekend chairman Dave Lee reported at last night's Students' Administrative Council meeting.

About 60 applications were received by yesterday afternoon, Lee said. Last year there were over 200 applications in five days.

Forms will be available in the SAC office today and tomorrow.

Canada Heading Back To Jungle

A Liberal Senator said last night the Diefenbaker government seems to be taking Canadian social welfare "back to the labor jungle" of no unions and the open shop.

Senator David Croll, addressing some 80 campus Liberals, said this was exemplified by the recent compulsory arbitration of the Canadian Pacific Railway strike in the West.

In contrast, he likened the previous Liberal regime to a "mosaic" of welfare and security legislation.

He also criticized the present government for announcing it would support admission of Communist China to the United Nations and then voting with the United States at the UN to reject China.

The Canadian people's "honeymoon with the Tories" won't last long, he said. The Conservatives suffer from "reactionary inertia."

The senator also said the Canadian party system leaves plenty of room for differences of opinion.

"To avoid controversy is not a sign of respectability."

He suggested women should run often for public office.

Hart House Radio Club Technical Talk Monday

The Hart House Amateur Radio Club will begin its 1958-59 season Monday with an open meeting and a talk on technical radio problems.

Mr. S. F. Love, instructor in the Electrical Engineering Department, whose topic will be "Microphones and Other Tube Problems", will also show a film on "Amateur Radio".

The club station in Hart House holds conversation with many parts of the world including the South Pole and Moscow.

In addition to inter-university contests and other activities, the club performs a number of public service functions, such as in civil disasters.

Two thousand dollars worth of equipment, including a high-powered transmitter and antenna, were installed this summer.

Monday's meeting, in the Hart House Debates Room at 8 p.m., will be the first of several this year.

Girl's Football League Plans Heavy Season

A traditionally masculine sport has been invaded by the women of the University of Toronto. Feminine football teams from University College, Trinity, Victoria and Physical and Occupational Therapy and have been practicing daily.

While the sport is not recognized by the athletic administration, the teams are planning a full schedule of games.

Two years ago, there were two teams. This rose to three and then to the present four teams this year.

The teams are coached by interested males who know something about the sport. One coach commented yesterday, "We'll play lady-like football."

Residents of Loretto College and St. Joseph's said teams had been considered, but it was felt there would be opposition from the administration to women participating in this rougher game.

Enthusiasm remains high, although some players and coaches carry the scars of scrimmages.

OFFICER CAREERS FOR UNIVERSITY MEN - IMMEDIATE OPENINGS

You can complete your present University course with subsidization, summer employment and other benefits—and begin your career as a professional naval officer NOW!

The naval officer is a member of a challenging and highly progressive profession. A wide range of opportunity is open to university undergraduates who can qualify for naval cadetships today. There are two plans leading to commissioned rank in the Navy about which every undergraduate should know.

ROTP

The Regular Officer Training Plan, as it applies in the Navy, is now open not only to those in science and engineering faculties, but also to those in other baccalaureate courses with at least two years physics, and mathematics including calculus. It leads to a permanent commission in the regular force. Those accepted receive basic naval training; pay and allowances during the university year of $120 monthly plus tuition fees, and a further allowance for books and instruments. Uniforms are furnished by the Navy. Full-time annual training includes foreign cruises. Thirty days annual leave is granted with full pay.

UNTD

The University Naval Training Divisions (open to students in any faculty) provide basic naval training, including assured summer employment, and lead to commissions in the Royal Canadian Navy (Reserve).

Cadets in the UNTD in acceptable courses may transfer NOW to ROTP. Former cadets now holding commissions in the RCN(R) are also eligible for transfer to ROTP.

Full information on officer careers in the Royal Canadian Navy, and service in the Royal Canadian Navy (Reserve) can be obtained from the tri-service Resident Staff Officer on the campus, or by forwarding the coupon to Officer Careers, Naval Headquarters, Ottawa.

Black-ties Opening All-Varsity Revue

U of T's original All-Varsity Revue will open with pomp and ceremony, AVR chairman Irv Goldberg announced last night.

Goldberg told Students' Administrative Council members the opening night on Feb. 9 will be a black-tie affair. A limited number of tickets will be available for students, he said. Most tickets will go to patrons and university officials.

Tickets for Feb. 10-12 will be on sale at $1.50 per person, Friday and Saturday, tickets will cost $1.75, Goldberg said.

The original bookshow is a "whimsical story set in Rome, 59

A.D.," Goldberg said. "It concerns the attempts of Nero to save his throne from the plots of Senators," he said.

Nero has a cultural solution to Rome's economic problems, Goldberg said. A love affair is thrown in as "an added twist".

Casting auditions for the show have been set for Nov. 13-19. There has been no advance casting, Goldberg said.

Initial AVR financial estimates show a profit of about $11, Goldberg said. The estimate does not include possible ticket sales for opening night.

Last year's production ended up with a sizeable deficit, Goldberg said. The SAC has budgeted for a possible loss this year.

Homecoming Biggest Yet

Tonight's Homecoming Show in Varsity Arena promises to be bigger and better than ever this year.

Blues' player Julian Porter will introduce performers and do a routine "unlike anything you've ever seen Julian do before — a satire on modern love," producer Charile Grieco said last night.

Last year's Vic Bob hit team Dick Dean and Pat Coulton will team up with Stan Farrow for three numbers. The three wrote songs and music themselves, Dean and Farrow wrote this year's original All-Varsity Revue bookshow.

Trinity's Diana Ede will join a 16-member girls kick line. Miss Ede is choreographer for the show.

Hagood Hardy and his jazz group will come directly from a television performance to play four or five numbers at the show. Hardy has played nightly in the Park Plaza Room for several months, and performs regularly at the House of Hambourg.

The group will appear on the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation's telecast of "Musicians '59" half an hour before playing for the Homecoming Show.

SAC at a glance

Besides getting all gummed up with stickers, the Students' Administrative Council last night:

— learned all kinds of wonderful new motions from chairman Jerry Case.

— swore in Marv Catzman from UC and Margo Rudolph from OCE and a few others who missed the boat last time.

— giggled when Associate Secretary Miss A. E. M. Parkes asked where one would put a crest on a pair of pyjamas.

— acclaimed SMC rep Sue Morin in "Poppy Captain" for university district on Remembrance Day.

— presented past chairman Murray Mogan with a gavel — looked grim when it learned new seating arrangements would be instituted at meetings — looked coy when SPS rep Robin Beamish disappeared at a crucial point in the meeting

— looked crestfallen when Beamish returned with cough-drops — approved "in principle" an all-campus Lit magazine.

— cheered when WUS chairman Sue Evans gave the chairman a B.C. Centennial bib campaign in full force returns slow in coming

The United Appeal campaign was off to a bad start yesterday as returns dribbled in from faculties and colleges.

Only $130 in returns from three groups has been received by campaign officials.

Three faculties have not even reported on the progress. The Faculty of Dentistry has not yet appointed a campaign canvasser.

Theological colleges have the best showing so far. Canvassers from Knox, Emmanuel and Wycliffe report their receipts are nearing college quotas.

The Faculty of Engineering plans an auction today to boost campaign returns. Skule canvassers are also selling "belly buttons" for United Appeal. Engineers have a choice of buying the "buttons" for $1 or paying three cents an inch in waist measurements.

Victoria College campaign manager June Pollard issued a challenge on percentage basis to University College last night. The challenge has not yet been accepted by UC.

Within Vic itself, campaign officials announced two special events to spark the UA campaign.

Vic students will be able to buy two pancakes for a quarter Friday in the Wymilwood coffee shop from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m.

Monday and Tuesday a quarter will buy a raffle ticket for a blind date to the Vic Bob opening night. A male and female winner will be announced after a draw Tuesday noon in the Wymilwood coffee shop.

The winners will be taken to the Bob opening by Mr. and Miss United Appeal, two anonymous, Vic students.

The star-studded United Appeal Revue will start at noon today in Convocation Hall. No admission will be charged for the show, but United Appeal donations will be requested. Lunch may be brought to the show, and students will be allowed to enter and leave during a break at 1 p.m.

The campaign objective is $10,000 — less than $1 per student, UA chairman Charlotte Hubbell said last night. Last year's goal was $12,000, and returns totalled just over half of the objective.

With a lower objective, "we won't be satisfied with two-thirds of the quota. We're making an all-out effort to go all the way," she said.

officials but sincere

A mediaeval Jew was considering conversion to Catholicism. As part of the conversion process he planned a pilgrimage to Rome, but his Christian friends—some of his best friends were Christians—discouraged the pilgrimage fearing that a look at the erratic and corrupt bureaucracy running the Church would put him off his conversion. But he went and returned a firmer Christian than ever. To his incredulous friends he explained "If the Church can be run by the bureaucracy I saw in Rome, and still manage to survive, it must be sustained by God Himself".

This story, the first in Boccaccio's Decameron, was written about 500 years ago. Bureaucracies are still with us, stronger than ever, but to-day when we are not as sure as we used to be that God is counteracting the evil they do, they have become a serious problem.

The universities are high on the list of organizations suffering from bureaucracy. At the University of Toronto, about half of the staff is made up of administrators processing countless forms, all in triplicate. No decision can be made until it has been filtered through an enormous hierarchy from the secretary of the sub-sub assistant so-and-so up to the president.

They all work hard, but it often seems that if they suddenly stopped, the real work of the university would not suffer in the least. It might on the whole run a lot more smoothly.

Unquestionably a bureaucracy fills real needs. Snap decisions are ruled out in favour of an agonized thrashing out of every issue. And a bureaucracy does keep people employed. Keeping people employed is important, even if half of them are digging a hole and the other half filling it in.

But the basic evil of bureaucracy is becoming more and more pervasive. This evil is depersonalization. A bureaucrat can move from employment in a soap factory to employment in a university without the least change in what he does or the terminology he uses. Ends tend to drown in a sea of extraneous means and the production of mature men and women becomes as impersonal a process as producing a bar of soap.

What must be fought is not bureaucracy itself—its advantages should be preserved—but the depersonalization that it breeds.

To purge all administrative organizations of most of their members, as a Russian commentator recently suggested, is not the answer. One man by himself can form a bureaucratic clique if he allows the techniques and procedures—the red tape of his job to transcend the purpose it exists for.

It is questionable whether any large organization can be run without a large administrative staff. But this staff must acquire a sense of its contribution to the total process, the end that its means serve.

The job of an administrator is to administer to the needs of some productive process. An overblown bureaucracy destroys not only the productive process but itself as well.

Nothing is as potentially vital to an organization as an able administration, aware of what it is doing, and why. But a blind bureaucracy that has lost its contact with all other levels of society and is running around in circles, although it may be of immense use to itself, is of use to no one else.

Freedom Is Hell

By H. E. YOUNG

I cannot sit by and see Mr. Hockings go on about the burdens of the past. Nor can I tolerate his "more freedoms-less anarchy" anecdotes. Such relativistic pother should rather find its place in a ladies' fashion journal. He has written (this is the substance and the appeal of his article): Let us be nicer and the world will be a nicer place. He cares not what you believe, what you do, what you are; he commands you to lightheartedly "reject authority".

It is true that university students should reject authority but this cannot be done lightheartedly or with any sense of finality. An adult accepts the authority that sanity and experience dictate he should accept. The world runs on what Hockings obviously has little or no regard for; honour, morality, respect and self-respect, all of which concepts involve complex notions of authority, internal and external. Evidently, also, Mr. Hockings believes that very few persons think as he does. This is so far from true that he must be disconcerted that the world is not a much happier place.

We are dealing with an optimist. I fear a man who feels that one's beliefs interfere with one's (sensual) happiness. For him, I suppose, life has a meaning in itself, the appetites suffice. All great men have disagreed. I need say no more on this, I trust.

Perhaps the university would be a better place if the following changes were made (or at least contemplated).

Two thirds of the university population should be shipped away to trade schools, business colleges, finishing schools, etc.

2. A university being a thinking place, it should be isolated from the din and distraction of commercial life, and, with the expulsion of its female portion, be made to resemble, as far as possible, a monastery.

3. All psychology, sociology, and anthropology courses should be dropped or allowed only to deserving senior students. These so-called sciences are in fact arts and probably "black arts".

4. There should be more meeting places for discussion. An educated man is one who can talk intelligently, intelligently, and perhaps, wisely.

5. A general dictum — All persons should be made to remain alone a part of each day here.

I should like to close on a sour note. My distaste for the omnipresent trash that I have discussed, this free-love, relativistic, let's-be-free-kiddies nonsense, rests upon one great, pervasive, childish mistake; the notion that freedom is heaven. Freedom (the abdication of respect for authority and the denial of the reasons for the institution or particularisation of that authority) is a useless commodity. Indeed, freedom is hell. Hell is where all things are possible because nothing is ever done. The university is the place for intellectual brutality. Authority is brutal and necessary. We need more who will be educated to proper and willing obedience.

There is always being Benny

Dear benny.

I'm being in great joy to read from you again since I'm not reading you around the campus and have not been able to hear your wisdom words lately. You are getting smarter, benny, and I am getting prouder and richer. (You see I place bets too!) I see you agree with university life, and it agrees with you, or so it seems from the way all the football teams listen to you almost to a T-formation. To know you are smart, I have always, but to know you are a prophet is a new knowess—but benny, with you being such a show-off and writing in almost-daily newspapers is not so good. First from everything,—if you have a hot tip, why you broadcast it so the whole world reads — why not shut your mouth and place bets and make money, and don't be such a glory-getter. Second from the last, if you tell the whole world you make bets, you better start running, because now, benny, we is privileged to have a female on the Bored from Governors, and females never like betting, you know. I guess now they change the name to Bored from Governors and Governesses, eh! And first from last, your english is not definitely so hot and your mark this year is F.

Now benny you are so smart, maybe you can for me a question answer. When our friends in the Nafeciuousu was passing a motion for the 'ol boozer, Mac du Plurisy for why was "with the Toronto delegates abstaining?" For why, benny, after all these speeches written in the wonderful Varsity? For why benny, after all those pictures from swastikas on top from the fleur-de-lises? For why benny? You smart boy, tell me.

—Your little fishy, Semmy (with a capitol).

...and apathy

Dear Sir:

In your editorial space in Tuesday's paper you stated some opinions about student political parties. I would agree with what you said, but I would go further.

Campus political parties might have some purpose and serious intent if they had any relation to real life. As it is, they have no effect on the provincial or national groups, have no voice and no responsibility, and consequently, no one can possibly take them seriously. This situation leads to the irresponsible struggle for predominance inside the groups and endless bickering among the three parties.

In England, until recently, the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge both elected members to parliament. In this case there is an obvious reason for campus parties, and a real stimulus to life.

These facts merely serve to point up again the general political malaise in which we are contented to drift. On campus we speak often of student apathy. But this apathy exists everywhere. We have it too easy. We have been handed everything on a silver platter and asked only to enjoy it. As long as we have the security and health, the ease and comfort, the enjoyment and sense of belonging that we crave, we are glad to let our minds and thoughts go as they will. We don't care.

DAVE LEE, III Vic.

I've heard that Dante once said of his Beatrice

Cutlet queen from his home town

That first in a list of her beauties

Would rank her eyes of Floreptine Brown.

Now Dante can make a mistake

But even without a test

Any modern Italian could tell you

The mouth comes ahead of the rest.

Now it's just this kind of dante dogma

That a liberal man would seek to disprove

And Sally, with your kind concurrence

Let's show he's not in the grove.

SHUSSELS — (CP) — The choir and orchestra, which performed at the fair, were highly praised by the Belgians.

The Hart House Orchestra Associates are facing a crisis. The recent CBC decision to broadcast the CBC Symphony on Sunday nights has forced the Associates to abandon its former plans and reschedule its concerts.

Saturday night seemed the best time for the concerts and the Associates plan to go ahead with this plan. But precious time was lost and the sales campaign was delayed two weeks.

The Associates are now making an urgent appeal to all university students who are interested in preserving this excellent orchestra. If the next two weeks do not bring results and subscription sales the Associates and even the orchestra may cease to exist.

After the orchestra's glorious showing at the Brussels World Fair and the help of the Canada Council, it would indeed be tragic if the Hart House Orchestra ceased to function. To this campus is entrusted the obligation of preserving this wonderful group which represented Canadian culture so well at Brussels.

Many students and faculty members would complain in the event of such a tragedy but the time for action is now. In the fifteen days remaining before the first concert the Associates must sell about four hundred subscriptions to be successful.

The Hart House Orchestra, composed of thirteen of Toronto's leading string players, will again give five concerts this season. The serene atmosphere of the Great Hall of Hart House, where the concerts are held, is perfectly suited to the music the orchestra plays—the music of the baroque and classical eras.

The concerts had become an institution on Sunday nights which were otherwise dead in blue Toronto. After the now famous row of two years ago with the Lord's Day Alliance over concerts on Sundays the Associates have been forced by circumstance to change to Saturday nights at 9:00 p.m.

The dates and programmes appear below but all the guest artists have not been booked yet. Oboeist Perry Bauman who toured Russia with the Philadelphia orchestra will be soloist in the Mozart divertimento at the first concert. Nicholas Fiore, first flute of the Toronto symphony will be guest artist at the second concert at which he will play a piccolo concerto as well as a flute concerto by Vivaldi.

The last concert will have the Royal Conservatory Opera School (which formed the bulk of the chorus at the opera festival) singing with the orchestra in a Bach cantata and the beautiful Mass in G minor by Franz Schubert. Maestro Ernesto Barбини, former conductor at the Metropolitan and currently conducting the Opera Festival's production of Un Ballo in Maschera will be choral director.

Dr. Boyd Neel, Dean of the Faculty of Music of this university and who needs no introduction on this campus will conduct all the concerts.

The following are quotations from the reviews in European newspapers after the concerts abroad this summer:

Le Derniere Heure, Brussels.
 August 27: "... this chamber orchestra is outstanding in every respect ... clarity in its group playing ... homogeneity combined with perfect rhythmic perfection ... a beautiful concert, with sustained artistry and unflagging enthusiasm".

La Libre Belgique, Brussels.
 Aug. 27: "The Hart Orchestra can take its place among the best chamber orchestras of today."

New York Times, New York.
 Aug. 26: "... interpretation of a high order ... Dr. Neel made the most of the orchestra's potentialities".

Never has a group of Canadian musicians met with such acclaim at home or abroad! And this orchestra is right here on campus for you to save by your support.

Subscriptions for the season of five concerts are available to students, male and female, graduate and undergraduate, for $3.50 — 75c per concert! Non-students $7.00. Sustaining subscriptions $10.00, Patronage $25.00.

SOCCER BLUES SEEK 3RD WIN

UNBEATEN IN FIRST TWO STARTS MEET O A C AGGIES IN GUELPH

Both Varsity soccer teams travel away to play in Guelph against the OAC Aggies. The Senior team will be out to protect their so-far perfect record this season of two shut-outs in two starts, while BabyBlues will try for their third win in as many outings.

No serious injuries were sustained in the games played last weekend against the Mustangs from London, although several players showed at practice on Tuesday night with assorted bruises.

Senior fullback Jim Watson is still troubled with a pulled thigh muscle which is responding very slowly to treatment. Brian Michcz, who played a fine game against the UWO team, also has a sore leg and took it easy at practice. Neither injury is considered serious enough to stop Brian or Jim from playing in Guelph.

Blues will find out on Thursday just how good their teams are. OAC squads always give Varsity teams a tough battle. Last year Blues edged Aggies in Toronto 4-3 and had to settle for a 2-2 tie in Guelph. The outstanding features of the Guelph teams are their speed and determination.

In the game in Toronto, Blues were beating the Guelph team by four goals but Aggies came roaring back to make it close. The game in Guelph saw a keen home team beating Blues by two goals before the Varsity team woke up to snatch a tie.

Today's game is all the more important because on the following Saturday Blues will be playing hosts to McGill Redmen, another team which always give Blues a tough time. If the Varsity team slips up today and loses the task of beating the Redmen will be all the harder.

Coach Tom Duncan plans no special changes for the game but will go with the squad that overpowered the Mustangs on Saturday. The only change will be the addition of Roger Peretz, who played for Blues two years ago. Roger was a key man on the Varsity forward line when he played. He was ineligible to play last season but has come back this year.

The Senior squad will be Soots; Watson and Avis; Green, Williams and Shepherd; Michcz, Duncan, Primorac, Bertolin, Webb, Peretz and Bell.

Once again the Intermediate team is somewhat unsettled as players appear at practice and then disappear again. Tom Hanny, a star in the McMaster game of two weeks ago, has turned up again and may see action on Thursday. Bobby Morris, their outstanding left wing, has had to call quits for the season and with Peter Casey still out with knee trouble, Baby Blues may be weak on the left wing.

All in all, however, Baby Blues, with their strong defence stalwarts like Doug Taylor and Ted Jensen, are stronger than last season and should come out on top.

Panthers Open Title Defence With 7-0 Win

Led by veteran Tony Boeckh and former Malvern ace Lynn McMurray, Trinity Black Panthers opened defence of their intramural football title in successful fashion yesterday.

Elevated to Group One, and consequently facing stiffer opposition, Panthers dumped Senior Skule 7-0, although holding a much larger edge in play than the score indicates.

Boeckh counted the game's only major in the fourth quarter, crashing through centre after taking a pass to put Trinity in scoring position. His convert attempt was blocked.

Trinity had opened the scoring in the third quarter, when a fumble on the Skule one was recovered by Engineers under a pile of Panthers in the end zone.

Late in the game, quarterback Brook Ellis marched his team to the Skule one again, but another fumble nullified the scoring attempt.

Today's action pits Victoria against St. Mike's in a Group One game, with Forestry and Pharmacy meeting in a Group Two battle. Both games start at 4 p.m.

Shallow Tricolor Bench Could Be Telling Factor

If statements issuing from Kingston are correct, Varsity Blues could embark on a scoring rampage in the fourth quarter of Saturday's Homecoming Weekend game against Queen's in Varsity Stadium.

Golden Gael mentor Frank Tindall, quoting to the fourth estate, has suggested his team is bigger than last year and can "give anybody an argument for a while."

"It's just a question of how long we can last with so few reserves. We're second now which is a pleasant thought. I only hope our thoughts are as pleasant after Saturday," Tindall added.

Tindall's opinion was supported in last week's battle with Western Mustangs in London, Gaels held the fort fairly well for three periods, but staggered under a 20-point attack in the final quarter.

Boasting 10 returnees from last season's team, Gaels present a fairly formidable starting lineup, but that's where the power stops.

The bench is lacking in depth and experience, two factors essential for winning football championships. Of the 10 players back, only six were regular performers in 1957.

Three of them—Mitch Waksli, Dave Wilson and Ron Delisle—anchor a wingline that's big and Varsity Blues walloped Barbarians 31-6 Saturday for their second straight win of the season and a morale-booster for the Intercollegiate clash against McGill this weekend.

Blues dumped London Foresters 25-0 the previous Saturday after dropping their season opener 14-0 to unbeaten Irish.

The Varsity team is host to McGill Redmen this Saturday in the first of a two-game total-points series for the Intercollegiate title, which McGill has held since 1950.

But Blues have a new look this year, strengthened by the inclusion of six players from countries where rugby is a dominant sport.

Three former team-mates from the University of Western Australia are in the side—forward Neville Nankivell and backs Jim Keating and Warren Walker. Forward Bill Nelems is from South Africa and British newcomers are hooker Paul Chapman and centre Bill Hutchison.

Blues' scoring Saturday was paced by wingers Jack Burger and Walker, who each went over for three and two tries respectively. Other tries were scored by fullback John Brebner, scrum-half John Ward and front-row forward Nelems.

Ray Cornhill added two points with a conversion but left the field late in the first half with an ankle injury and was taken to hospital. The team played a man short for the remainder of the game, no substitutions being allowed.

Nankivell scored three points on a penalty goal and booted a convert.

The forward pack gave the backline a good share of the ball and dominated lineup play. The Barbarians held even in the set scrums and had an edge in the loose rucks.

Ward played a great game at scrum-half, getting away a good delivery to Keating and topping his performance with a brilliant blind-side try in the second half after Varsity had picked into touch a few inches from the corner flag.

Keating, at fly-half, initiated many of the scoring movements. He drew his man, eluded the wing-forwards and sped the ball out to his centres who in turn gave it to their wingers in classical corner-flag scoring movements.

The Intermediate Baby Blues are also in a winning mood. They won their first two regular-scheduled games and on Saturday lost a hard-fought decision to Toronto Wanderers in an exhibition tilt. Wanderers fielded a much heavier and more experienced side, but play in a higher league.

The Varsity Second team plays in Toronto's Seaway League. The Seniors play in the Ontario Intermediate A League, which includes the Ontario Agricultural College at Guelph.

Promising second team players include Conrad Heidenreich, who played with the Seniors Saturday, and scrum-half Roger Kirkpatrick of Trinity College.

Saturday's win was a tribute to new coach Dr. David Penman, a University of Edinburgh graduate now on the staff of the School of Hygiene.

Dr. Penman, who has been in Canada only six weeks, played rugby for Trinity Academicals in Edinburgh, Scotland, was captain of the Royal Navy's Far East team during its 1953-54 season and vice-captain of the Combined Services touring side to Thailand.

He has been coaching Varsity for only a week but the club has shown a marked improvement during that time.

With a Navy man at the helm, Blues are hopeful of upsetting McGill this weekend. The game is scheduled for 11 a.m. on the Back Campus.

Skipper Roger Hirst, who missed Saturday's match with a chest injury, will be back in the lineup for the McGill contest.

Interfaculty Summary

University College Redmen took up where they left off last season in interfaculty lacrosse play, whipping Skule Firsts 12-3 in yesterday's opening game.

Clever forward Bert Naylor paced Redmen with seven goals. John Spence had two and Hill one. Thomson scored twice for Skule, with Richardson netting a singleton.

Trinity B and Skule Thirds battled to a 1-1 soccer tie. Mueller counted for Panthers in the first minute, but Engineers' Walton came back to knot the count.

Emmanuel and Law tied, 0-0, in the other soccer tilt.

SPORTS STAFF

With the interfaculty football program in full swing, The Varsity sports' department finds itself lacking two reporters whose services would be available for afternoon games.

The entire staff congregates in the office tomorrow at 1:30, and any gentlemen (or ladies) interested in joining our string or parties, is warmly invited.

We're also after a volunteer to step in and take over the make-up reins. This, incidentally, is a paying job.

heavy, but also a shade on the green side.

Returning to the backfield are Terry Porter, Terry Dolan, and ex-quarterback Bob McAleese, now running from the halfback position. Porter and Dolan make up the double fullback threat.

Best of the rookies is quarterback Cal Connor, who arrived at Queen's an unknown from Burlington High School. Connor has a good arm, and good football sense, but also lacks the experience.

Defensively, Gaels' weakness is at end, a position that Varsity's powerful option play is accustomed to exploit.

"But our defence certainly has improved over last year and we have a bunch of youngsters who are willing to learn," concluded Tindall.

UF Tournament Here

For those who still retain fond memories of fleeting youth, of days way back when, of football afternoons — not weekends, on Friday night at Varsity Stadium lies the opportunity to relive it all.

It's the United Funds Football time again. Six top Ontario Collegiate grid teams vie for the Golden Rule award; the award that epitomizes all the finest qualities of the grand old game of Canadian football.

Royal York Collegiate, fresh from a resounding victory over Runnymede, will represent the TDIA.

TSAA will be represented by the Central Tech powerhouse, Ottawa Glebe Collegiate, the giant EOSSA choice, will be coached by Wally Mellor, once a star Red Feather performer himself.

Sarnia Central's Centaurs, will carry the WOSSA banner. Saltfleet District Collegiate bring an impressive record from the SOSSA.

From the distant north, the NOSSA place their hopes on the worthy contender from Sault Ste. Marie.

The United Fund Golden Award championships, played for the first time in Varsity Stadium, promise to be a thrilling evening of football.

The first game begins at 7:30, Ottawa facing Sarnia.

Foreign Cars Decreasing Report At Club Luncheon

The automobile industry got a vigorous defence from a Ford of Canada official at yesterday's annual, Commerce Club luncheon.

No Parking On Campus

Parking on campus this Saturday is prohibited north of Convocation Hall until float parade activities have finished, University Constable M. Robb said today.

Students may park cars on Tatle Creek Rd. south of Convocation Hall, but the rest of the main campus must be kept clear until the parade is over about noon.

Normal parking for Saturday will be resumed for the remainder of the day, Robb said.

Mr. James Smart, Ford Motor Company controller said, "If there is no business like show business, then the automobile industry runs a close second for glamor and excitement. Static highs and gloomy lows are dependent on the individual whims of the consumers, making this a pretty exciting business."

Mr. Smart was well-primed with the history of the auto industry. From 535 cars produced in 1904, the industry has grown to manufacture the four million now on North American roads, he said.

The foreign car has made its presence felt, the controller said, but he believes the demand for European cars is levelling off now. The Canadian industry is geared to produce the North American-type car at a fair profit.

The Ford Motor Co. offers scholarships to children of employees. Thirty-one students have won scholarships for four years of study at the universities of their choice.

"Commerce and finance courses offer a fine training for the entire auto industry," said Mr. Smart. Ford has made substantial grants to a number of Canadian universities.

Automobile sales have doubled since 1947, and should double again by 1975, Ford of Canada believes that in the future cars will play an even more important role in transportation.

Big Caledon Weekend With Many Activities

Not a freshman applied for this weekend's frosh jaunt to Caledon Hills farm yesterday, undergraduate secretary John Becker said last night.

But this was not an indication nobody will, he said. He'd like 20 and could accommodate 45.

Last year's was a "magnificent weekend", he said, but "very cozy". There were six frosh there.

But they must have liked it — three are on the Caledon Hills committee this year.

The weekend should include a hay-ride, a wiener roast, tramping around and a dance, Mr. Becker said. "Lots of good food—not too much sleep."

Erratum

The U of T Board of Governors has not agreed to finance University College's proposed students' union as was erroneously reported in yesterday's Varsity.

A group is being set up by the UC Literary and Athletic Society to co-operate with a parallel group being organized by the college in preparing a brief for the College Committee of the Board of Governors on the subject.

Still Game For Marathon Despite Police Warnings

Organizers of the 24-hour relay run trundling up from Queen's today have been warned against the stunt—but are going through with it.

Neither of the two police forces slated to "escort" the 100-man, 200-car cavalcade think very much of the idea.

Called the biggest stunt in Canadian college football, the marathon is backed by the Queen's Alma Mater Society.

Plans call for runners to leave George Richardson Memorial Stadium in Kingston about 1 p.m. today and arrive in downtown Toronto about 12.30 p.m. Saturday.

Runners will carry a torch and a replica of the football used in the first Toronto-Queen's game.

Ontario Provincial Police don't think much of the idea, and have warned stunt organizers of possible consequences—but they say they will co-operate.

A press release from Queen's AMS says OPP and Toronto Metro police will escort the marathon and parade.

"We're not supplying any escorts. We can't, and besides we don't hold with this sort of thing," OPP Assistant Commissioner Thomas Trimble said yesterday.

"If anyone gets hurt, the organizers might find themselves on the tail end of a $100,000 civil action suit."

A Queen's AMS official contacted yesterday said the marathon would still come off. He said the stunt had been cleared by Kingston OPP.

"It's been a hell of a fight, but we've done it," he said. Stringent precautions are being taken by runners and cars involved in the 185-mile relay.

Runners must wear white shirts and keep on the shoulder of Highway whenever possible. Organizers say absolutely no drinking will be allowed.

Local pedestrian traffic rules must be obeyed at all times and cars waiting for runners must park off the highway.

Enrolment Down In Old McGill

Montreal, Oct. 17—CUP—McGill's over-all enrolment is down by 41 compared with figures this time last year.

The university administration announced yesterday the Engineering faculty showed a drop of 229.

Arts and science faculties were up by only 169.

McGill President Cyril James said main reason for decline was higher fees and higher entry standards.

United Appeal Returns A Mystery As Big Drive Closes Third Day

No grand totals were available last night as the United Appeal campaign ended its third day of canvassing.

A challenge issued within the Engineering school brought returns rolling in from the south end of campus. Engineering Physics challenged the rest of Skule on a percentage basis. The group has $80 in profits from an auction yesterday, while Skule returns as a whole totalled $670 last night.

Proceeds from the United Appeal Revue yesterday more than doubled last year's totals. About $195 was collected by canvassers, and an estimated 650 students attended the show.

Only eight canvassers have volunteered for Saturday's Tag Day chairman Judy Harmon said yesterday. Volunteers are asked to give their names to UA faculty and college representatives.

Monday's Las Vegas night, bright spot in the campaign, has been completely arranged. UA campus chairman Charlotte Hubbell told the Students' Administrative Council Wednesday. UA campus officials completed a mass of municipal red tape to get official permission for the proceedings, she said.

After getting a verbal approval from Mayor Nathan Phillips for the proceedings, UA chairmen contacted the morality squad and arranged to have two plainclothesmen present at the affair to set straight any policemen who might attempt to stop the gambling night.

Real money will be used in gambling. The Las Vegas night will last from 8-1 a.m. Monday in the Drill Hall. All fraternities are encouraged to adjourn to the hall after their meetings.

French Need DeGaulle —SMC Government Falls

Two St. Michael's College Senators crushed a government resolution supported by two women orators at a debate in St. Joseph's last night.

A packed house overthrew the government, which had presented the resolution "De Gaulle's administration is not the answer to France's problems."

First opposition speaker Denis Barber said: "All Frenchmen have a desire to regain the former military and economic glory of their past."

"In De Gaulle the French have found a leader capable of uniting the conflicting interests and putting the nation on the brink of capturing world prestige," Barber said.

Mimi Kravis (I SMC), second government speaker, said: "De Gaulle's ignorance of economic affairs has increased the drain of money on the already overburdened taxpayer."

Calling De Gaulle a "hero of the 18th century," Miss Kravis said the president "has done absolutely nothing about building up the economic strength of the country."

Speaking second for the opposition, Vincent Liddy (II

SMC) said "the people of France have found their champion in Charles De Gaulle and his 5th Republic."

Referring to De Gaulle as "a fountainhead of power," Liddy said "for the first time since Napoleon the French have actually gotten together and are clinging to one man."

Speaking from the floor on the opposition's behalf, Lloyd Gray (I SMC) said: "De Gaulle by assuming supreme authority has ended the long reign of comical governments which have plagued France since the end of the second World War."

Education Termed State Opportunity

An Ontario cabinet minister told campus Progressive Conservatives yesterday a university education is not a "right" but a "state opportunity", and since the state is paying, the taxpayer has every right to require the highest standards.

Hydro Vice-Chairman Robert Macauley, addressing the PC club on the educational policies of the Frost regime, said "no nation could afford to provide a university education for people who could not possibly assimilate it."

"There's no such thing as free university education," he said, "for someone pays for it." However if free university education means that the pupil pays nothing then that is another matter."

Macauley termed as "shabby demagoguery" the desire of some "ill-advised democrats to open university doors to every person who is eighteen years of age and still alive."

"The ultimate goal of a university system should be to possess high entrance standards not necessarily based upon examinations, to provide bursaries to students whose marks are at a prescribed high level and to make reducible loans to university graduates who intend training further with a view to teaching. Such loans would be reduced by 20 per cent for each year the recipient teaches after graduating."

"In this way we will train the people whose higher education and training will benefit the nation in industry and research and as well, will add to the role of the highly qualified teacher," he said.

"The provincial government has made advances in this direction by awarding thousands of bursaries and by having made $3,000,000 available for student loans," Macauley said.

Macauley outlined the problems facing the Frost government in the field of education and detailed the steps the government had taken to meet these problems.

"We are faced with an additional 80,000 young people coming into our schools each year," he said, and more pupils have, of course, meant more money, more schools and more teachers."

"To meet this the Frost regime is paying out $155,000,000 a year towards education, whereas during the period of the Hepburn regime — from 1934 to 1943 — the government devoted about $15,000,000 annually to education," Macauley said.

"The figures speak for themselves," he said.

OAC Nappers Broke After Their Waterloo

GUELPH, Oct. 16 (CUP)—About 50 students at the Ontario Agriculture College here are going in debt to the total figure of $1,000 as the result of a kidnap raid on Waterloo College Tuesday.

Of the 50 students involved in the raid on rival Waterloo, 15 were identified and suspended from classes until the fine is paid.

"It was paid today, and the incident is forgotten," OAC President J. D. MacLachen said.

Tuesday's raid culminated a series of incidents between the two colleges. It is believed the rear door of a Waterloo home was smashed in an attempt to kidnap two students.

Other incidents have included the kidnapping of two students, the shaving of their heads, and burning of the letters OAC in the turf at Waterloo College's football stadium.

Varsity Staff Reporter

Last night's Homecoming Show in Varsity Arena looked like a good performance. But a lot of people there wish they'd heard more of it.

The show opened with a kick-line. These don't have to be heard. And at least one gentleman, leaning away over the back of the next row, said the girls "weren't bad."

Some 25 minutes of jazz followed, against a background of big red balloons. Reaction was mixed. Afficionados snapped their fingers and nodded their heads with the beat of the music while those who'd come for the dance after, talked.

But when the drummer started, there was cheering.

The crowd was also moved to sing when the Blue and White Band played (audibly) the Toronto Song, but remained unmoved while nine cheerleaders sweated through several Varsity yells. Their cartwheels received the usual response.

Each member of the football team was introduced to the audience by master of ceremonies and Blues' tackle, Julian Porter, with appropriate remarks which sounded as if they might be amusing.

Highlight of the entertainment was a satire "based on love" read a la Shakespeare out of a comic book by Porter. He had a relaxed manner but had to fight constantly against the deficiencies of the public address system and the distractions of hecklers.

The review closed with a rowdy rendition of last year's Victoria Bob Revue hit "The Opposite Sex", sung by Pat Coulton and Dick Dean. And the 1,200 members of the audience prepared to dance away the evening.

City Streets Host Homecoming With Drums Rolling Down Bloor

Drums will roll along Toronto's staid Bloor St. tomorrow as the Homecoming Weekend float parade makes its way toward campus.

About 20 floats will assemble on Devonshire Place between 9.15 and 9.45 a.m. The parade will begin at 10 a.m.

Parade route as planned is: Devonshire Place to Bloor St., Bloor to Yonge St., Yonge to College

St., College to King's College Rd., King's College Rd. to Front Campus.

U of T President Claude Bissell, Alumni President W. W. Breslin and students' council secretary Adrienne Poy will judge floats from the front steps of University College.

Almost all colleges and faculties will be represented by floats. Queen's band and cheerleaders will march with their Varsity counterparts.

The judging is scheduled to begin at 11 a.m. SAC's three pretty secretaries will ride in an Edsel convertible, but will not be eligible for judging.

Parade chairman George Wilson praised entrants for their originality last night. "Some of the ideas are tremendous," he said. Theme for the floats is "Be Angular".

Ross On Education: The Danger

Dr. Murray Ross, vice-president of the university, last night took a wide swing at the attitude of university students today.

He accused them of failing to "accept their share of responsibility" in the partnership of teacher and student, and added a threat: that "Soviet learning is superior to our own."

Dr. Ross, who travelled widely this summer in Russia and China, was addressing the annual Charter Day dinner at Victoria College. In his speech he compared Canadian and Russian methods of teaching and the quality of student response and found Canadian students dangerously lacking.

"The Soviet student," he said, "expects less of his teacher and accepts more fully his role as receiver, evaluator and user than the Canadian student does."

Dr. Ross' basic thesis, he said, is that Canadian teachers perform "fairly well," but students are not living up to their duties.

He laid the blame to two factors—the social trends among teenagers in North America that makes learning a social disadvantage, and the absence of any real incentive for students to acquire learning.

He said that while he was in the Soviet Union he talked with teachers and got the impression that their teaching is entirely "confined to an exposition of the facts and that the classroom is a place of business."

The Russian student, however, he added, learns he must work hard and does so, unlike most in Canada who rely on the instructor doing all his work for him.

Root of the problem, he concluded, was in one sense the attitude of pre-university students, and beyond that, the culture that produces them.

He compared the apathetic student today to professional boxers who have lost their drive, who have ceased to be what made the profession great at one time—"hungry fighters".

"I believe," he said, "our whole North American society can be characterized as one in which the number of 'hungry fighters' has declined in all areas of life."

In the act of striving itself, he said, there is value, as well as in the ends that are striven for.

The state of "teen-age culture", he said, indicates a resistance "to certain ideas likely to be found in adult culture."

Here, Dr. Ross said, "one finds not merely opposition to the idea of struggle and striving, but a carefully cultivated habit of inexactness, sloppiness, indifference and imperfection.

The great danger, he said, to the university today is that the "pernicious attitudes and habit of work and study" found among teen-agers and to some extent in society as a whole, will come to be dominant in the university."

Tb Cases Decreasing But Get Your X-rays

Some 300 students were X-rayed today, as the annual University Health Service finished the first day in its eleven-day chest X-ray program.

About 5,000 people are expected altogether. The X-rays are compulsory for all first and last year students, all students not born in Canada, all Nursing students and all Medical and pre-dental students.

The X-rays are available to others on a voluntary basis.

The transportable X-ray equipment has been set up in the coach house behind Falconer Hall (84 Queens Park). The program is being directed by Mervin Fisher and his assistant John Goss, both of the Gage Institute.

The program, a joint effort of the Gage Institute and the Health Service, is almost entirely financed through the Christmas Seal drive. How many cases of tuberculosis will be detected?

"About five out of every 10,000 people X-rayed," said Mr. Fisher. "But that figure gets lower every year," he added.

School Of Nursing Celebrates Their Twenty - fifth Anniversary

This weekend the University of Toronto campus will be transformed with Homecoming Week-end activities.

The three day festivities will include many things — football games, float parades, cheering crowds, traffic snarls, dances and reunions.

But for graduate nurses returning to their Alma Mater it will mean more than that, for this weekend, U of T's School of Nursing celebrates its twenty-fifth anniversary.

Much time and thought have been given to celebration plans which include tours, displays and a tea for visiting grads.

When nurses begin reminiscing on "the best years of their lives", many will remember the School in its early years.

A mounting protest against the series of nursing courses offered at the university was climaxed in 1933 when Dr. Kathleen Russell organized the School of Nursing. The "training school for nurses" was the first independent school in Canada not administered by a hospital.

Since then there have been many changes. Most noticeable, of course, is the new St. George St. building opened in 1953.

The modern red brick building on the periphery of campus is fully equipped for class and demonstration work and boasts one of the most comfortable libraries on campus. Here students can lounge within arm's reach of the well stocked shelves.

The Library was furnished in memory of Jean Isobel Gunn, Superintendent of Nurses for 28 years and leader in national and international nursing organizations.

Spacious Cody Hall, familiar to many students as one of the quieter examination rooms, is used for all main functions. It is now transformed with flags, flowers and display material for the celebration.

Courses, too, have been altered. Those now given fall into two main categories — degree and certificate courses.

The basic four year degree course leading to the Bachelor of Science in Nursing provides an integrated approach, combining a study of humanities and sciences with practical nursing experience.

There is also a three year degree course for graduate nurses' giving professional specialization.

Four one year certificate courses for grads lead to jobs in hospital nursing service, nursing education and public health nursing.

But they haven't always been this short. The first course took 39 months to complete. This led to a diploma qualifying the graduate for general staff practice in clinical and public health fields.

A five year degree course replaced this in 1942.

About 300 students are enrolled in basic and certificate courses under a staff of 15.

The three day open house planned by Anne Mahoney for this weekend includes tours of the Nursing School with a special display, a symposium on nursing research, open classes and an alumnae association tea.

The display which opens Friday as high point in the anniversary, includes pictures and write-ups of grads' work in Canada and abroad.

They have written from all over the world describing their work. The majority have returned to their homeland to teach nursing because of the acute shortage of nursing schools.

The display also contains information on courses and jobs. This will show the public, especially high school students interested in nursing as a career, the work they are doing.

Simpson's has set up a display denoting the various training stages.

"It all started out as a very modest celebration," said lecturer Mrs. W. Brehaut, "but we had no idea so much would be involved."

All Varsity Staff, from every divergent section of the paper and including all newcomers, oldgoers and hangerson are invited to a party Saturday night.

Details of the party are available in The Varsity office or through verbal communication with anyone suspended on the masthead.

book exchange closes after successful season

The Students' Administrative Council Book Exchange closes its doors today at 5:30 p.m. after a fairly successful season.

Although business has slackened off this past week, SAC will finish approximately $200 ahead. Sales should total $3,000 to $9,000.

At the end of next week, they will move out completely to allow women's physical education classes to again use the dressing rooms.

Next Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday, from 12:30 to 5:30 each day, the Book Exchange will be settling accounts for those books which have been sold. Students are reminded to bring their stubs.

As this year's operation period for the book exchange winds to a close, students are as enthusiastic as ever about its system.

Basic method for the exchange is that the student names his price and if the book is sold for that price during the period the exchange operates, he gets his price minus commission.

Students make a further gain from SAC's book shop due to the fact that only students are employed.

Group Discusses Archeology Finds

The head of the Royal Ontario Museum's department of Art and Archaeology Wednesday night described three extraordinarily advanced civilizations of the seventh millennium B.C., clues to which he recently helped unearth in Jericho.

Speaking to the first meeting this year of the U of T's Fine Arts Club, Dr. A. D. Tushingham cited a tower of solid stone, unearthed in 1952 in the Jordan valley. This, he said, is unusual evidence of a tendency to settle down on the part of the characteristically nomadic neolithic peoples.

Among relics of this civilization, which flourished about 6800 B.C., Dr. Tushingham found extraordinary examples of engineering skill not only in the tower, but in the skilful vaulting of their beehive mud-mortar and mud-brick subterranean dwellings.

In a later civilization, dating from about 6200 B.C., the noted archaeologist found signs of significant development in provisions for comfort in private homes — including plastered, polished floors and walls together with spacious courtyards.

Basing his discussion on these two cultures, Dr. Tushingham traced the development of a "formalized religion" based on a fertility cult, ancestor worship, and the use of the skull as a religious artifact.

These culminated in a third culture, flourishing around 6000 B.C., where the use of real skulls was abandoned in favor of plaster models of their deceased.

Despite their not having developed the skill of pottery-making, these people lived in relative comfort, he said. Signs of such conveniences as reed mats had been unearthed, he concluded.

Say Maybe To Magazine

The Students' Administrative Council Wednesday night approved publication of a university literary magazine — in principle.

Publications commission Alex Havrlant told the SAC passing his motion would not bind the council to publish a campus magazine.

Havrlant recommended the council exercise more control over the magazine this year. He said the magazine now under consideration would include more representation from professional faculties.

Law rep Art Lowe asked if "more control" meant the council would dictate policy. Havrlant said control would lie chiefly in choice of an editor and editorial board for the magazine.

Purpose of the control would be to avoid mistakes made in last year's magazine, Havrlant said. Last year the editorial board was made up of representatives of the four Arts colleges, and contact with professional faculties was poor.

A new name would also be chosen for the magazine if it was published, he said. University authorities objected to the use of the university's name last year.

Beyond The Russian Rumor Clouds

By FIZ BINKS

Much is said in democratic countries about the four freedoms—speech, religion, private property and press. Their citizens boast with justifiable pride of their rights as individuals and speak in ringing tones of their privileges.

Unfortunately these freedoms are not always as great a protection of truth as they might be. Fear and resulting rumor tend to cloud men's minds even in a so-called democracy and from fear come prejudice.

This is perhaps what has happened in the case of education and social development in the Soviet Union. Progress behind the Iron Curtain was regarded sceptically by Westerners for many years. The advent of the Sputnik era quickly disbanded scepticism and admiration and fear took its place.

"Scoop" may not be the right word to apply to a scholarly journal, but the Fall issue of the University of Toronto Quarterly stands unique among Western publications in its presentation of Russian teaching in the humanities.

Under the title "The Humanities in Soviet Higher Education", the quarterly presents 10 articles by 14 noted Soviet educationalists, on subjects ranging from foreign languages, history, art, music and political economy.

Eight months ago Quarterly Editor, Professor Douglas

Grant approached H. E. Dmitri S. Chuvahin, Russian Ambassador to Canada. He said he wanted scholars to talk about their subjects—with as little propaganda as possible. He outlined a list of topics and waited for results.

And when the results, translated at the Russian embassy, began to filter across the editorial desk, little changes were necessary.

"In fact, it was just like a normal issue," Miss Halpeny said. "Few changes were made and we were thrilled with the cooperation we received."

The authors are professors from Moscow State University and various Moscow academies. They know their subjects and make no attempt to distort what is being done—many articles contain frank admissions of failure in some fields and determination to improve.

But the articles speak for themselves. It is the initiative of Professor Grant and his staff which deserves special mention here. They have disproved once and for all the popular fallacy that a scholarly journal is a merely soapbox for pedantic inhabitants of ivory towers.

Socialism: Forty Years On

By MARK NICHOLS

A mild-mannered veteran socialist took stock last night and came under fire from the group of young socialists who had come to sit at his feet and listen.

In the living room of his home, Prof. George Grube—a socialist for 40 years—a member of the CCF Ontario council, and head of the University of Toronto's department of classics, explained to members of the campus CCF club his conception of socialism today.

"I'm not a philosopher," he explained to the young people who sat strewn about his book-lined living room, "and I'm not too interested in ultimate aims, but in the means of disposing of misery that exists."

"That's why I'm a pragmatist, not a theoretical socialist."

At the outset of the meeting—called for the purpose of giving campus CCF'ers more of an idea of what they believe—Prof. Grube explained his basic view of life and socialism.

"You can't," he said, "look at this in black and white. It's gray. And that's life." "We have learned," he said, "it is dangerous to socialize completely. It is foolish even to want to."

He said that what they had to deal with as socialists today, is an attitude of mind that stemmed from the activities of the industrial empire-builders of 50 years ago.

The big corporations, he said, had ceased to represent free enterprise because they were nearly all-powerful. On the other hand, he added, "no body or group in the country is completely in favor of free enterprise. That's why we have Ontario Hydro and some socialized industries."

But many more industries than are socialized now ought to be, he added.

Prof. Grube gradually got into hot water with his listeners. One wanted to know if the CCF could reasonably continue to call itself socialist.

"Isn't this doctrine of yours more an enlightened capitalism than socialism?" one wanted to know.

Prof. Grube said the phrase "enlightened capitalism" was a contradiction in terms. "Our aims are threefold: protection of the community against exploitation, the freedom of the community to plan ahead without hindrance from corporations and their plans, to protect the workers."

"We want to minimize the differences in financial status. But how could we eliminate them entirely?" He pointed out that in order to talk about an "egalitarian society" as the Canadian socialist David Lewis does, it is necessary to define the words and in his opinion no such "classless" society was possible.

All that is important, he said, is that no worker is exploited.

Two great technological strides forward on the part of the US cast all other news into the shade this week. They were the "Pioneer" moon rocket and the hula hoop.

A slight error slowed the rocket by a mere 1,000 feet per second and prevented it from overcoming the earth's gravitational pull, but the height it did reach, 79,000 miles is at least 70,000 miles further than man has ever penetrated into space. Valuable data on radiation has been gathered and the US is all set for another moonshot—one that will reach its destination.

Somewhat less spectacular, but with its endless windings and gyrations, much more representative of American policy, was the hula hoop. Also representative of American policy was the rather cool reception given the hoops in Europe early this week.

Having thoroughly mastered the technique of keeping the hoop twirling, US Secretary of Defence Neil McElroy went off on Monday to pass the gentle art on to Chiang Kai-shek. Taking advantage of the Communist extension of the cease fire in the Formosa Strait, McElroy was looking for the near impossible: an unembarrassing solution to the Quemoy crisis.

The US would naturally like to have its Formosa rice cake and eat it too. On the one hand she would hate to give up the potential value that Chiang could have as a thorn in the side of Communist China. On the other hand Chiang has up to now been a much more effective thorn in America's side. Hence the solution McElroy took with him to Taipei this week—really no solution at all. Let the Nationalists relinquish their garrisons in the offshore islands and the US will increase military aid to Chiang. What this solution is missing is that the offshore island squabble is only a rather small part of a larger problem; the existence of Formosa itself. It can be an effective solution if it is a first step toward offering Chiang a garrison in some American old-folks' home in return for relinquishing this garrison on Formosa.

In the United Nations, The Soviet was as usual busy smothering one more Western disarmament proposal. The US and its 16 co-sponsors want a year's suspension of nuclear tests. Further suspension would be conditional on progress made within the year toward a nuclear disarmament program. The Russians want an unconditional ban.

While the young United Arab Republic is running into all sorts of new problems—the latest being Tunisia's breaking of diplomatic relations—France seemed to be finally solving some of her old ones. With the aid of Algerian strongman, General Raoul Salan, Premier de Gaulle began to implement a bold and forceful plan for Algeria.

As if president Eisenhower does not have enough to worry about, his old war-time buddy Lord Montgomery published the first installment of his memoirs in Life magazine and charged the war could have been over in 1944 had Eisenhower taken his advice. Pausing on the 18th hole, Eisenhower said—in what must have been the understatement of the year—that he had been criticized before.

Hardly noticing all the excitement, Toronto devoted more energy than the moon rocket had devoted to breaking away from the earth toward the thorny problem of getting its pedestrians across its streets with nothing worse than a bad fright.

And as the week ended the discouraging news came that Prime Minister Diefenbaker may have been omitted from the Social Register of Canada. Things are tough all over.

Background On Religion

By PHILIP WARD

First of a series on religion written by students with various creeds and published weekly.

Religion is a peculiar thing; everybody has a religion of some kind, inasmuch as religion is what is most vital in the feeling, belief and performance of every human being.

But just as personalities differ by the thousand, so there are myriads of different beliefs. An article by A. R. M. Lower in the current issue of Maclean's has shown how material some of these objects of worship can be. But not all gods are so obviously of human manufacture; and there is one whom many consider to be sole and infinite.

There have been three distinct but interesting stages in what may be termed the history of religion: animism, polytheism and monotheism. Animism is the most primitive form, and comes closer to superstition than belief; such objects as trees, rocks, animals and the solar system are believed to contain spirits or some other power that can bring good or ill upon man. Certain kinds of animism are still to be found in parts of Asia, Africa and South America.

Polytheism is most easily exemplified in the gods of ancient Greece. Each god or goddess was believed to control a certain segment of society, with one god being chief above all others; the individual prayed to the deity appropriate to his problem. The popular belief in Greece was undermined, however, by stories of injustice and immorality on the part of the gods; the result was widespread excesses by the common people, and the turning of contemporary thinkers to atheism or monotheism. Many of these philosophers, particularly Plato and Aristotle, have exerted a major influence on western thought and belief.

Monotheism has three great representatives: Judaism, Christianity and Islam, of which the latter is predominantly found in Asia and parts of Africa, and the former two extend, to a lesser or greater degree, throughout the world.

In Canada, Roman Catholicism was practised without rival until 1759, since when immigrants from all parts of continental Europe as well as the British Isles have founded organisations counter-part to what they left behind. This has resulted in a definite pattern in terms of spheres of influence: European Protestant denominations have established themselves in central Canada; young "sects" (as they are popularly called) now flourish in the western provinces; and Roman Catholicism has remained strongest in the east. By contrast, there are numerous groups of Jews in the country's larger cities.

the caged bird sings

Criticism of the Province of Quebec has always been interpreted inside that province by both English and French speaking citizens as a blanket condemnation of the predominately French-speaking population.

An editorial in the McGill Daily reprinted on this page is a good example of this super-sensitivity to criticism of any aspect of French Canada.

Misinterpreting a special Varsity issue as an attack on Quebec's refusal to accept federal grants to education, the Daily charges The Varsity's handling of "the state of affairs in Quebec has turned the issue against French Canada".

This of course was not the intention of an issue outlining the education problems facing students in the province.

At no point in the issue was there any discrimination between the two language blocks in the province. At no point in the issue were actions condemned that could be attributed especially to English or French speaking populations exclusively.

The attack was on the system of governing and maintaining control. The attack was on the stranglehold maintained by the government over educational institutions supposedly institutions of enlightenment.

It has long been recognized—by both English and French speaking citizens in Quebec—that education, both political and social, is necessary before there can be any hope of successfully ridding the province of election machines and crooked politics.

"Rassemblement", a popular education group through the province, has worked hard to reveal the iniquities of both the Duplessis regime and the state of mind which allows such iniquities to go unchallenged.

Broadminded centres like the Social Science faculty at Laval have done a fine job along this line. And the Laval Social Science faculty has received financial punishment and staff dismissals as a result.

Even the McGill Daily has undertaken to raise its voice about provincial politics, and for its efforts has been chastised by the university president.

The Daily asked why J. W. McConnell, Senior Governor of McGill and head of the family owning the Montreal Star, should not raise a voice of protest about the universities' plight through the Star.

President Cyril James did not feel the same way as the Daily—the editor was called into James' office as soon as the issue appeared and was taken to task for the outburst.

"We also found a cartoon which alleges a comparison between the Premier of this Province and the man who led Germany in World War II" the McGill editorial continues.

Effective quelling of enlightened opposition does seem to have vague echoes from the past. Nobody would attempt to carry the analogy farther than this attitude towards education that was criticised in The Varsity, but in this limited sphere it does apply.

Let the pundits of the McGill Daily make no mistake about the intentions of the Quebec articles, for in doing so they are falling into a philosophy held by a good many Canadians not particularly animated by the idea of a bi-cultural Canada.

There is a school of thought which says any attack on any aspect of Quebec is prompted by an innate Francophobe complex. Its adherents insist that any criticism of Quebec comes only from those to whom the thought of French Canada is repugnant.

This is not the case with our issue on the financial problems of Quebec universities. As Canadians we have a right and a duty to criticise publicly any government—whether in the Maritimes, Quebec, Ontario, or the West—which threatens our national security.

French Canada stands as a great symbol of friendly cooperation. It also stands as the main facet through which Canada may maintain cultural independence.

If political manipulation threatens French Canada, criticism is due. If opposition has been beaten down within the province, the cudgels must be swung from the neighbor's backyard.

The Program...

U of T undergraduates will witness a once-in-a-generation ceremony a week from now when Dr. Claude T. Bissell is officially installed as the eighth president of the University of Toronto.

His pledge of loyalty next Friday night will mark another milestone in the continuous process which has formed the university during its 115 years of development.

More than 50 universities in Canada, the U.S. and Great Britain are sending delegates to attend the weekend round of activities and pay tribute to U of T's new president in a special installation Convocation.

Students and the general public as well as faculty and guests will be able to participate in aspects of the historic ceremony—one which has not been seen on campus for 13 years and may not be repeated for as much as a quarter of a century.

University administrators have gone all out to make the event both socially enjoyable and stimulating.

Activities for students get underway Friday afternoon when three special installation lectures will be given by British, American and Canadian professors.

Professor Northrop Frye, head of the controversial Anatomy of Criticism, will lecture on "Humanities in a New World" in Hart House Theatre.

Dr. Clyde Kay Kluckhohn, a Guggenheim Fellow and professor in the Harvard University anthropology department, will speak on the "Scientific Study of Values" at Cody Hall, 50 St. George St.

Dr. Vincent Brian Wigglesworth, member of the Cambridge University biology department and past president of the Royal Entomological Society, will deliver a lecture on "Science: Pure and Applied" in Room 102 of the new Mechanical Building.

Lectures will start simultaneously at 3:30 p.m.

A public organ recital by Dr. Healy Willan at 5 p.m. in Convocation Hall will precede the installation ceremony which begins at 8:30.

Once inaugurated, President Bissell will present the following three candidates for honorary Doctor of Laws degrees:

Dr. Gerhard Herzberg, Director of the Division of Pure Physics, National Research Council; Msgr. Irene Lussier, Rector of the University of Montreal; Professor William Lewis Morton, chairman of the University of Manitoba history department.

Four hundred invitations to the ceremony have been issued to the various undergraduate faculties and colleges. They have been distributed on a pro rata basis to all Students' Council representatives who will make them available to students on a first come, first served hand-out.

Scholarship students and representatives of undergraduate societies will attend a president's breakfast Saturday at 9 a.m. in the Hart House Great Hall.

"We have invited between 320 and 340 students in order to get a representative cross-section of university committee official said.

Installation activities wind up Saturday night when about 2,500 guests will attend the President's staff reception.

A Note

To the editor of the McGill Daily Regarding your editorial criticising The Varsity, we examine:

Paragraph 1 — we quite agree;

para 2 — federal grants were not the subject of the issue, Read it;

Para 3 — thank you for the commendation. The facts are there and create their own sensation; para 4 — nonsense — the issue was on Quebec universities in particular and the provincial government in general;

para 5 — Even The Daily managed to understand our point; para 6 — we realize their are government supporters in both language groups... but at no point did we make any distinction between French or English speaking citizens supporting the government. We attacked the government, nothing more;

para 7 — we await the day when the McGill Daily will offer us an intelligent presentation of the education issues, gagged or ungagged.

Dear Sir:

Last night the SAC passed edict refusing permission to R. H. Ralsman to distribute decal window stickers with the U of T crest thereon. We feel that an unconditional refusal of the part of the SAC is hardly commendable policy.

Ralsman deals have been in demand for two years. It is evident to observers that people must like them. They are seen on many automobiles. Also, at present no comparable decal, with a U of T crest is available.

Arrangements have been made for the sale of U of T crests at many retail outlets in Toronto. A similar product is as the one offered by Mr. Ralsman can be and should be more or less fluctuating system along this line is badly needed."

His ideas for easing the present educational crisis, however, do not begin with university entrance. He favors a general policy of discrimination at the high school level; one that will lend itself to readjustment if necessary.

"It is foolish to determine too early in high school what students are qualified," he says. "On the other hand, university entrance requirements are at present pretty uniform. I feel a greater concentration on specialized subjects of the student's choice would give the university —and the student himself—a better idea of what he is prepared to do."

"This would involve special examination in certain areas, Dr. Bissell explained, and the student's standing in other subjects would be determined through recommendation.

"To depress teaching entirely on to one plane would be to undermine democracy as well as education."

His two-year presidency at Carleton gave Dr. Bissell much experience that he can apply here. But there are two factors he considers especially valuable.

"At Carleton one of my main jobs was to bring the university closer to the community," he said. "It is a comparatively small institution and urgently needs the attention of the public."

"In the same way I want to try to project the University of Toronto into the community. Because it is established, many people are inclined to take it for granted. But it has endless facilities and aspects which are unknown and unappreciated."

"The other thing, he said, is that at Carleton I was made continually conscious of the growing vitality of a university. Again, because Carleton is small, constant reappraisal of every move was necessary. Here, it is easy to forget this —but it is every bit as important."

A. M. Lavine (IV C&F),
M. Mandell (IV Poli Sc&E.).

Here the outlook is on "the crisis in universities."

Magazines more thoughtful and perceptive have begun a scrutiny of the bureaucracy imposing itself in the academic level, have questioned educational theory.

In the Oct. 14 issue of Maclean's Magazine, this pattern of thought, or of emotion, is given a brilliant exposition by writer Hugh Garner who explains: "Why I won't push my children into college."

Here the basic thesis combines nearly every aspect of the general attack on the university. While barely conceding that universities are necessary, Garner's attack rests merely on the personal judgment that the students themselves are, for the most part, wasting their own time, the money of their parents, and of the state.

Examples of Garner's sentiments: "A university diploma is something I miss about as much as I miss having webbed feet . . ."

"I don't want to be the inadvertent sponsor of another generation of misfits, athletic cretins, boola-boola boondoggles, girls killing time between high school and marriage, and college-educated bums."

"Our universities were founded to give advanced education to our intellectual elite, not to become way stations on the road of life for the haughty and the mentally sick."

Presumably, Garner's cracker-barrel sentiments receive a sympathetic reading among a wide number of people. Why?

He doesn't like the large number of university students, the number of people getting a chance he waived or wasn't granted, the ones who are dabbling in activities that may some day yield works of art, the ones who are in university to orient themselves in a world where mass communications such as his own present a baffling array of mysteries and false value.

Why?

• If it is because he thinks there is waste here, he is right. If he thinks there are students in university who will never rank as great men, he is also right.

But if he thinks that the right of anyone to seek higher education where it is available should not exist, he is wrong.

Our society, answers its needs as they arise. It also provides luxuries where they are demanded. It has provided refrigerators, television sets, magazines and automobiles.

We live in a maze of mirrors and delusions. We live in the midst of monsters we made ourselves, enemies we cannot eliminate as long as society remain the way it is.

It is the world of public opinion controlled by media that draw their values God-knows-where, that in turn disseminate their values where they will demand increased supply.

In such a society luxuries good or bad will remain until they can be supplied no more. Among these are universities and there can, as long as our economy provides for it, be no denial morally of the right to education to anyone who can qualify and manage it.

Vive Les Carabins

By JOHN GRAY

Ten years ago a group of French Canadian students from the University of Montreal invaded the U of T campus to start the slow break-down of the barrier that has always separated Canada's two language groups.

It started as an excursion for the Montreal students and has grown into an annual exchange in which the students discover their unknown neighbors have just as large a stake in this country as they themselves.

Every year 40 "carabins" — students — from Montreal are chosen to represent their university on "le Varsity weekend".

This year they will arrive Nov. 27, to be met by 40 U of T students who have generated unprecedented excitement about the impending "Carabin weekend".

Many of the Toronto students will be meeting each other for the first time, few of them will know anyone among the marauding Montreal group.

There has never been anything between French and English Canada that knowledge couldn't cure, and this was the aim of the Montreal and Toronto universities staff when they inaugurated the weekend

10 years ago.

Eighty strangers are tossed into a group, and operating on the expectation of "a lot of fun," they emerge as fast friends.

The conversation scoreboard stretches to infinity, but talk centres mainly on the relations between French and English Canada.

French Canadians have always known that English Canada, and especially her solid core — Ontario, were a vital force in their destinies.

The vast control exercised over Quebec by English speaking Canadians has never made much sense to the French Canadians who make up the greater part of the population.

The pattern of "getting to know" and then "getting to like" is followed all the way through the Carabin weekend.

They will sing until they can croak no more; they will talk until Ontario's "at-loutettes" start chirping in the sunrise sky.

And they'll have a whale of a time.

cheers and tears and bravos for Bohème

la bohème

How an old warhorse can be brought to life, how living tears and joys which transcend current aesthetic theories, which can make intellectual Toronto overcome its prejudice against grand, grand opera; these are the considerations which sing the praise of the Opera Festival's production of La Bohème.

The staging, under the direction of Robert Gill of the Hart House Theatre was refreshingly free from the traditional hackneyed techniques which usually succeed in mummifying any opera over two years' old. Bohème is usually presented as a museum piece expressing the emotions of the past century with a barrier of stylization set up to insure us against the indelicacy of dangling our feet in the romantic swamp. The touches of realism and the complete ease of the cast breathed life and fire into this production.

Musically, it was the executive triumph of the Opera Festival's ten year history. Walter Susskind conducted an enlarged orchestra of some of Toronto's better players. Considering Mr. Susskind's extensive operatic experience with the Carl Rosa and Sadlers Wells' opera companies in England, the success of his North American debut as an operatic conductor was assured. In no other of the many productions of this opera which I have seen has there been such a complete concordance between the orchestra and the singers.

Puccini's operatic theory of having leitmotifs on stage in the form of recurring emotions as well as the musical repetitions in the orchestra is a delicacy not often achieved in a routine performance of La Bohème. To Mr. Susskind goes the laurel for this very ingenious effect which bespeaks long hours of skilful work.

Although the Rodolfo of John McCollum was not very exceptional vocally, especially in his arias, the timbre of his voice was perfectly suited to the leitmotif, effect which I have mentioned above. In the concerted parts his voice fit into this interpretation of the opera much more successfully than that of a more handsome and concealed voice. He was not above making, however, several glaring mistakes in timing in the first act and more noticeably, in the closing love duet.

Teresa Stratas as Mimi was totally satisfactory: a consummate actress with a beautiful voice. Her duets with Mr. McCollum were convincing and very touching. Once again this artist's voice was, almost miraculously suited to the other principals and to the interpretation.

Norman Mittleman singing, Marcello boasted a powerful voice and a convincing flare for drama especially in the semi-comic scenes at the beginning and the end of the opera. As a Bohemian artist, unfortunately, he was rather unimpressive, smacking too much of the comfortable bourgeois artist in appearance.

The delightfully acted Musefca of Patricia Snell added the proper excitement and colour to the second act. Her famous waltz-song in the second act (Quando m'en vo soletta) brought a salvo of applause and bravos.

Jan Rubes as Colline and Andrew MacMillan as Schaunard were dramatically and vocally successful, especially in the group scenes. Colline's last act aria 'Vecchia zimiria addio' found Mr. Rubes in excellent voice and was much appreciated.

Despite minor weaknesses in the secondary singers (especially the vocal shortcomings of the landlord) and confusion in the second act chorus, the production is certainly worth seeing. It will be repeated on the 18th (matinee) 21, 23 and 25 (evenings).

As his opening show of the season, Hart House Director Robert Gill has scheduled Arthur Miller's stark tragedy, DEATH OF A SALESMAN.

The play opens on Saturday, Oct. 25 at Hart House Theatre, and stars Ray Stancer as Willy, Maureen Fox as Linda, with James Lipsett and George Golden.

Three other productions will be presented by Mr. Gill's THE LATE GEORGE APLEY, CHILDREN OF DARKNESS, and JANUARY 'TIGER AT THE GATES'.

Subscriptions for the four plays at $3.00 or single tickets at $1.00 on presentation of an ATL card, are available at the Box Office.

Robert Gill is also stage director for the Opera Festival production of Puccini's LA BOHEME.

Canada Carries On

The Opera Festival this week suddenly burst from its past record of mediocrity and provided Toronto audiences with two fine productions and one outstanding one.

Not only was the choice of these operas (Bohème apart) extremely enterprising for a small company, but the general artistic level of the productions was without any question the highest it has ever been.

Of course the flaws that have always been a feature of this company appeared again, albeit in a diluted form: static staging, uninspired conducting and poor ensemble work (these remarks do not extend to La Bohème, reviewed above), but this year witnessed an incredible improvement in the orchestra, settings and costumes.

Un Ballo In Maschera was staged like a late Eisenstein movie, so static as to resemble a still life; fine vocalisation more than made up for this fault, however. Campora was outstanding.

The Tales Of Hoffman was a refreshing production, although Mazzoleni evidently has no flair for Offenbach, if his prosaic rendition of the barcarolle is any indication.

The most successful production of this season was Puccini's schmaltzy masterpiece, La Bohème. Here, TSO conductor Walter Susskind, despite an injured arm which constrained him to conduct with the verboten left arm, established a close rapport with orchestra and singers which was to a certain extent missing in the previous productions.

Hart House Theatre Director Robert Gill imbued the whole show with his remarkable gift for stage movement and timing. The last act in particular, came across with maximum emotional effect, left the audience limp, every last tear jerked.

It is to be hoped that the practice of importing professional stage directors will be continued in the future, so that in the seasons to come, opera will be presented more as musical drama than as musical recital.

Warren Wilson.

How Long, O Lord?

In Chicago, a legal writ caused her to abuse the server in the crudest terms; in Rome, she flounced off the stage after Act One, insulting the President of the Republic himself; whenever Renata Tebaldi sings in Italy, she finds fiendish delight in sitting near the stage in order to unnerve her rival.

But then, she is Maria Meneghini Callas, called the greatest singer of her time, and in such an one, such calculated bitchery is forgiven, even praised as an example of remarkable originality.

She is our greatest living Victorian artist: Completely ungrateful, supremely self-centred, capable of the meanest artistic behavior imaginable. At the Met she flew into a rage when the tenor held a final note longer than she had. This spiteful outburst resulted in the unfortunate man's immediate dismissal.

On board the plane bound for Italy, Mme. Callas was chagrined to find the tenor in question one of her fellow travellers. But she quickly regained her composure: "I didn't talk to the fellow once", she told reporters, with complete sang-froid.

Even more despicable is her callous treatment of aging conductor Tullio Serafin, the man responsible for her meteoric rise to fame. In the Angel records' series of Italian operas, the maestro had used the far from casta diva in all the leading roles. When she was in America, he had the unmitigated gall to record La Traviata without her. Her gentle remonstrances (heard throughout the length and breadth of Italy) convinced the poor man of the error of his ways.

Her constant deification is incredible. She does not have a beautiful voice; her upper register is shrill and pinched; her lower register has an uncanny tone, as if her mouth were full of marbles; and as for her middle register—well, good isn't the word for it.

Perhaps her undisguised contempt for fellow-artists, her audience, and even her art is the answer. The critics, faced with a veritable barrage of temper tantrums, have developed a cult of personality, forgetting that the artist's first duty is not to himself, but to his public. Without fulfilling this requisite, her artier-than-thou pranks are in the long run without taste, without meaning, and ultimately without interest.

Nevertheless, I want to see her next Tuesday; I think, though, I'll get my tickets as late as possible.

Time, Gentlemen

Dear War and Peace, Sam and Ted:

I defend the movie reviews! I always read them, and I usually find them to be thoughtful and stimulating criticisms.

Granted, I don't always agree with them, but then the reviewer is only expressing his personal opinions. If we disregard the puns (such as the Kim Novacuum), we find that there are several gems of humor to be found in them. If the complainers put their pens where their mouths are and tried writing a review to compete with them, they would begin to appreciate their true value.

ED. NOTE: Though we appreciate such a letter, it acts as cornip on a kitten to Ted Schafer, who is wearing an even smugger smile around the office. To those who are perplexed, the name War and Peace is used to denote the dual monarchy of the co-AM&D editors, and is not to be confused with good old wishy-washy Warren Peace, whose perverse sense of humor extends to reviewing films he hasn't even seen yet.

Suicide March with Tasteful Narration

White Wilderness (York) is Walt Disney's fascinating story of life meeting and conquering the most barren section of the earth, the frozen Arctic.

To put this true life adventure on the screen, Disney enlisted the services of eleven outstanding photographers, the Canadian Wildlife Service, the National Parks Service of Canada and the Provinces of Manitoba and Alberta. The result of their efforts is an absorbing natural drama, brilliantly photographed, flawlessly edited and tastefully narrated.

The cast of actors all employ the "Method" and all turn in amazingly realistic performances. Here we find: Walrus families suffering crowded housing conditions; the Polar Bear and her playful cubs out for a snowball fight; the fashionably furred Ring Seal; schools of White Whales frolicking in ballet-like formation; the Ermine on a grocery shopping trip; the Timber Wolf giving his offspring a music lesson; and the Snowshoe Rabbit whose unfortunate domestic trouble with his next-door neighbour, the Walerine, provides several exciting sequences.

Outstanding in this colourfully graphic record of the Arctic's changing seasons is the living legend of the Lemming's mass suicide march to the sea. The Lemmings naturalists tell us, veritably eat themselves out of house and home, whereupon they begin a herdlike search for food which soon becomes a movement of mass hysteria ending in their fateful meeting with death and destiny in the icy waters of the Arctic Ocean. This fantastic trek is all vividly captured in unbelievable photographs that defy taking.

As in his previous nature studies, Walt Disney has again provided eighty minutes of educational, entertaining delight.

UC-PHE TRACK MEET WINNERS

Runner-up Medicine Trails By 21 Points

University College-Physical and Health Education, repeating their winning performance in the intramural championships last week, yesterday captured the university track title at Varsity Stadium.

Redmen finished with 51½ points, with Medicine second at 30 and defending champion Trinity third with 22. UC-PHE had only two firsts in amassing their winning total.

A strong second, third and fourth place attack provided the additional points. UC-PHE had seven seconds, five thirds and six fourths.

Mike Copeland led the winners with a first in the 220-yard hurdles, and a second behind Trinity's Tim Reid in the 120-yard hurdles.

Mike Berger was another outstanding UC-PHE performer, picking up a second in the three miles and finishing third in the mile run.

Reid and Baby Blue football co-captain Barry Matheson were Trinity's big guns. Reid won the 120-yard hurdles, ran second in the 220-yard hurdles, and copped third spot in the discus.

Matheson scampered to victory in the 100-yard dash, outdistancing Pharmacy's Bruce Faulkner, a veteran Varsity track competitor.

R. Repo was Meds' ace, winning the 440, coming third in the broad jump, and fourth in the hop, step and jump.

Ken Money, who competed for Canada in the 1956 Olympic Games, and is now in graduate studies, won the high jump with a leap of 6'4".

Interfaculty Summary

Skule Seconds and University College Seconds battled to a 1-1 tie in a low-scoring box lacrosse game in Hart House yesterday.

Galbraith gave the Engineers a 1-0 lead, but Henning came back for UC to knot the score.

In soccer play, George Kondt scored the only goal as Pre-Meds blanked St. Mike's B 1-0.

St. Mike's B edged Vic Firsts 15-3, 13-15, 15-12 in volleyball, with Skule D topping St. Mike's D 15-7, 15-11 in the other encounter.

After a slow start, Victoria College rolled to a 14-0 win over St. Michael's College yesterday. It was the first game of the season for both squads.

Playing coach Steve Moriarty scored Vic's first point of the season when his unsuccessful field goal attempt went for a single point.

In the last minute of the first half, end Grant Bull hauled in a long pass thrown by quarterback Paul Sapuntjis and went over the goal line unmolested. Moriarty converted to make the score 8-0 at the half.

Vic showed a more consistent attack in the second half. Duane Wills closed out the scoring when he went over from the 15 on a reverse.

SMC could not muster a concerted drive at any time during the game, and seemed to lack the leadership that Frank Kietly provided last year.

On Monday afternoon, Vic takes on the defending champions, Trinity Black Panthers, in a game

Architecture's Stew Irwin yesterday captured the Chancellor Cody Trophy as the outstanding individual performer in the university championship track meet at Varsity Stadium.

Irwin placed first in the javelin with a throw of 170'5", and won the hop, step and jump with a distance of 41'8".

He also captured third place in the discus, finishing behind McNutt of Forestry and Lennard of Wycliffe.

Irwin's performance virtually earned him a place on the Varsity Intercollegiate team, which will compete in the championships at Western October 22.

The remainder of the team will be selected after the track coaches have had opportunity to scan the results of yesterday's meet, which attracted over 65 competitors.

which will give the winner undisputed possession of first place. Game time is 4 o'clock.

In the other scheduled game, Pharmacy eased by Forestry 1-0 on Harold Coulter's single point.

Filter Failure Forces Gals From Water

By SHARON MILGRAM

As the swim practices draw to a finish and the actual meet comes closer and closer, the participants have found themselves without the UTS pool. The filters failed.

To compensate for this loss the Lillian Massey pool will be used both for the completion of practices and for the synchronized swimming events.

For those girls wishing to complete their three practices which are required before they are able to enter any events, the pool will be open on Friday between 1 and 2 p.m. and on Monday at 7:30 p.m.

The synchronized swimming events, which include strokes, figures and routines, will be held on October 20 at 4:30 p.m. at the Lillian Massey pool.

The speed preliminaries, followed by the diving competition, will be held at 8 p.m. the following evening in that male domain better known as the Hart House pool. By the way girls, don't forget to bring your bathing caps and suits.

A demonstration by the winners of the diving and synchronized swimming events will follow the speed swimming finals which take place at that same Hart House pool at 7:15 p.m. October 22.

Glancing at the Intercollegiate agenda, I see that the outdoor Archery team will participate in a tournament at McMaster tomorrow. The event will be held in two parts with the girls shooting in both the morning and afternoon.

Members of the team are Jean Hayward (Meds), Margaret Merritt (H.Sc.), Viuu Kanep (PHE), and June Sceviour (PHE). These girls, very capably coached by Mrs. Vernon, hope to improve on last year's third place finish.

With softball in full swing and basketball beginning soon, keep your eyes on the schedules published every Friday in The Varsity.

Hoping To Increase Win Skein Blues Entertain Queen's Gaels

Varsity Blues set sights on their fourth consecutive Intercollegiate victory tomorrow when they play host to Queen's Golden Gaels in Varsity Stadium at 2 p.m.

A better-than-average Homecoming Weekend crowd is expected to attend. The game is part of a weekend-long program that started last night with a variety show at Varsity Arena.

Blues sifted through a regular workout last night, and then appeared as a body at the Homecoming Show. Coach Dalt White received a long ovation from the 1,800-odd in attendance.

Tonight, Coach White will put his charges through a light workout in final preparation for tomorrow's game against a team that enters the game somewhat of a question mark.

Gaels dropped their opening tilt, 14-8, to McGill in Montreal, and then succumbed to a 46-16 slaughter at the hands of Western Mustangs.

That latter score, coupled with Varsity's 38-14 win over Western last weekend, would appear to give Blues a solid edge in tomorrow's game.

Not so, say the statistics. Queen's blanked McGill 21-0 in their second meeting, and that margin was only one point less than Toronto's 35-13 winning edge against Bruce Coulter's Redmen.

Varsity, however, performed in a less aggressive manner against McGill than in the two Western games, and if the team runs hot tomorrow, the score, say some observers, could run to a higher level than last week's onslaught.

Boasting reasonable power at each position, and appearing weak in no department, Blues could use sheer strength to wear down what Queen's coach Frank Tindall has called an inexperienced team.

Gaels are particularly weak at defensive end, a position that Varsity's option and off-lackle plays — both powerful weapons — could exploit.

In the other game, Western travels to Montreal to meet the McGill Redmen. Queen's, Western and McGill are tied for last place, each with one win in three starts.

Blue notes: Varsity enters tomorrow's game at full strength... team medical officials have expressed amazement at Blues' lack of serious injury so far... Number 75 in a Tricolor uniform won't be seen... Queen's has retired the number, worn so colorfully by Ron Stewart.

Rinkies After First Win

Smarting under the sting of two successive losses, the Baby Blues take on Queen's intermediate football team at Kingston today.

This is the last chance for the Intermediates if they have any aspirations towards retaining the trophy they won last year.

In an effort to get his team untracked, there is a possibility that coach John Sopinka might go with rookie Barry Hunter at quarterback today.

Hunter impressed onlookers in the intra-squad game earlier this year.

Queen's are not a perennially strong team, but this year is a definite exception. They walloped Western in their opener and lost a 4-3 verdict to Ryerson Rams.

Western, in turn, took the measure of the Baby Blues by a 19-6 count, so Varsity will be facing their toughest test in Kingston today.

One of the bright spots this year among the linemen has been Casey Wood... At 17, he weighs 230 pounds and has thrown it around with devastating results.

At Western last Friday, he spent most of the first quarter wandering around in the Western backfield tackling anybody who happened to go by with the ball.

Benny's Predicting Blueser Victory Again

Now it is being a surely thing that there is nothing lowlier than these types who infest the halls of Queenie U along with the crusty domes, musty tomes and mouldering ambitions for despoiling my own dear Blues of their Yates Cup which is our own rightful property and nothing else except maybe also the prize for which my enthusiastic serfs clobber themselves weekly upon the griddle iron yonder and a bit.

It is of the latest scheme which the Gilded Scotties from Kingston hatch that causes me to doubt their seriousness and to believe that they are wishing to win no matter what it may cost dear sweet Benny who is I and not too much else. This devilish plot is being a long distance marathon race which is somewhat reminiscent of that race which Benny runs from the long claw of the Law for so long and well. They call it a Queerython which is only right insofar as it fits the end to which it is put and this too is being just and proper though these colonialists who come in three assorted colours which do not quite come off though they grow very angry as they give all they are having in the effort, this being the reason they are called the Try-Cholers.

Oh how sneaky and snivelly they are being as they scheme to trick my own Blues into a fear of their stamina as they talk about how they are running to Toronto for the game and the whole Kingston kennel is toddling along with them. This is nothing other than mere psychopathic warfare to make my Bluesers wonder what kind of fix is being injected into the game when the Scotties run all the way and then play ball. But my own private vamp whom I am just getting back from Hollywood where they are using her to tame the dam Yankees is coming to my aid though he certainly has no use for her since he is pilfering my private stock for years and is well and away better off even than Benny which is I. This doll who goes by the odd name of sultry Sam Shift is unfortunately forgetting to change back after my trusty associate makes her look like she does originally and believing you me she is really original. She overcomes this disadvantage by turning blonde and tying her hair in a pony tail so it goes with her face and then she is doing a trip to join the runners from Queenie U who are really a rum lot at best and she discovers the true reason for this boat-race which it is being her job to swamp.

It is turning out that the reason for which the Three-Coloured ladies are waddling here is because when the hometown folks try to ride them out of town on the usual rail the Choo-Choo boys clamp down and refuse to allow dumb animals to use their coaches although the Queenie U Athletic Association is not so particular which is how they are able to field a team in the first place which is where the Tricolours are definitely not being. All this is being wired me by sultry Sam Shift who is my dear friend and broom companion for so long and who is even now waiting on the road for those unwary toddlers whom she entices to daily by the wayside. I am being so certain of her success that I call it 35 for our dear boys in Blue and a piddling 9 points for the Scotties who are also getting an extra ration of borscht and maybe too they are getting a little bit killed.

Old Themes, Fresh Angles Parade Floats Past Again

By VICKIE INNES
Varsity Staff Reporter

Almost a month ago U of T President Claude Bissell urged students to "be angular" in his address to incoming freshmen.

Since then "angularity" has been quoted countless times.

But the greatest variety off from the School of Practical Science.

Engineers won second prize for putting their conceptions of student types (non-engineer, that is) into cages. Five students representing Physical and Occupational Therapy, Forestry, Medicine, Arts and Nursing were put behind bars. The "sole purpose in life" of each was written on placards outside their calls.

The Faculty of Medicine took third prize with the "Symptoms of Medical Angularosis", in sports, in relaxation and in "the quest for Bissell Bacillus".

The Pharmacy float gave advice to students about examinations. "Don't be the same . . . and pass", the signs said. "Be different . . . and fail."

Trinity students satirized the Ivy Towers of Learning with gowned students sitting in front of an over-sized crumplet.

"Crumplets and Angularity" was their banner.

Hundreds of students along the parade route watched professional faculties walk away with the prizes.

Puns formed the main weapon used by the Faculty of Law in copping first place.

Students were called to the bar and advised to render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's. President of the Law Club is J. A. "Caesar" Wright.

The legal beagles also refuted arguments that the age of the horse and buggy has gone forever. A pantomime horse provided the power for their gigantic float.

Student types came under fire

The floats were entered by various colleges and faculties on campus.

Adrienne Poy, students' council vice-president and Dr. W. W. Breslin, Alumni president aided President Bissell in the judging.

QUEEN'S MARATHON
167 miles

Runners Master Rain, Police To See Team Lose

KINGSTON, Oct. 19—CUP—Athletic Queen's University students—100 of them—ran a long way Friday night and Saturday to see their Golden Gaels endure a humiliating 44-0 trouncing at the hands of U of T's Blues.

Queen's track star Al Hyland brought the flaming torch the last lap of the 167-mile run from here to Toronto, a run that saw police difficulties, rain, a kidnap attempt and five lost runners threaten the epic stunt.

Brainchild of Queen's Alma Mater Society, the stunt, termed a "Quarathon", aimed at delivering to Toronto a flaming torch and a replica of the football used in a 1924 Queen's-Toronto game.

Though successful, runners, who left here at 12:30 p.m. Friday, ran into troubles from the start.

First incident came outside Belleville, Ont., where five runners from Queen's new law faculty got lost and were forced to run the ball 22 miles unrelieved.

Heavy rains and winds described as "hurricane velocity" hampered runners temporarily outside Brighton, but the run continued.

More trouble came from six members of the Varsity Baby Blues football team who attempted to waylay the ball while returning from a game in Kingston. Queensmen defending the runners kept their losses to a Queen's banner.

An Ontario Provincial Police siren outside Oshawa gave runners an uneasy moment at dawn Saturday, but the police car provided a friendly escort to Toronto's city limits.

Movement along Danforth Ave., and Bloor St., was accomplished with only one incident: traffic tickets for two Queen's cars that failed to stop for red lights.

A radio-television reporter representing OKWS Kingston, CHUM and CKY Toronto and Associated News covered the run through the night.

Vince Kelly, president of U of T's Students' Administrative Council, symbolically kicked off the replica ball after it was presented to him by Queen's mascot "Boo-Hoo"—an Alaskan bear—immediately before Saturday's game.

stained bedfellow

Some 50 years ago one man with a great deal of integrity and more patience fought prejudice, bitterness and greed to mould a new country out of the mud and blood of senseless war.

The man was Jan Christian Smuts and the country he created was the Dominion of South Africa.

Smuts' greatest achievement as a statesman was to convince his countrymen that federation with the organization they had just fought was the most realistic and profitable action they could take.

With an ease that amazed everyone South Africa climbed aboard that delicately balanced gyroscope known generally as the British Commonwealth of Nations, and in doing so assumed the obligations and privileges accorded its members.

Or at any rate, seemed to assume them.

Smuts, living to see his country fight alongside its former foes in humanity's darkest hour, died an old and happy man.

Unfortunately much of what he stood for died with him.

The forces of peace and compromise, reason and co-operation vanished with the ashes of their proponent, and the old, dark creeds came crawling back from the nineteenth century mire.

Today South Africa wants to get out of the Commonwealth.

The Commonwealth, itself—an innocent child of everything but idealistic principles, has seen most of its members abuse their positions at one time or another.

But none so fragrantly, so consistently and with such pathetic conviction as the Union of South Africa.

Canada itself has examples of intolerance which seldom swell anybody's breast with pride.

But at least we hide our shortcomings, and gross as some of them are, we still feel justified in criticizing our stained bedfellow.

We are growing weary of South Africa's persistent threats to leave the Commonwealth, and twice as ashamed that she's there at all.

We wish, in fact, she would secure this myth called Independence as fast as possible and leave the rest of us to regain our self-respect.

Somehow, we feel, Smuts would have wanted it that way.

Titoism: the new spectre

By MIKE RASMINSKY

In 1848 Karl Marx wrote that a spectre was haunting Europe—the spectre of Communism. Today, little more than one hundred years later, a new spectre haunts Eastern Europe—the spectre of Titoism.

Tito's Yugoslavia represents one of the most fascinating political developments of this era. In the ten years since 1948 Yugoslavia has traded its status as a Russian satellite for that of one of the leaders of the increasingly powerful group of neutralist, uncommitted nations of the world.

Lying behind this rags to riches story is the philosophy known as Titoism.

Tito's Communism differs from that practiced in Russia in two basic respects. The first is that Titoism is national Communism whereas Russian is expansionist, imperialist Communism. The second is that Yugoslav Communism displays much more respect for the individual than its Russian forebearer. During our five-week stay in Yugoslavia, we saw frequent evidences of both of these differences.

One of the catch phrases of Yugoslav Communism is "separate roads to Socialism". The Yugoslavs insist that the method of Socialist development must be different in each country due to the differing conditions in each country. They consider Socialism inevitable for all countries, even Canada and the U.S.A. but say that in highly developed countries, Socialism may appear through evolution, not through revolution. Their argument asserts that the revolution was made in 1917; all further revolutions are in a sense superfluous.

As a Communist country, independent of either of the great power blocs of the world, Yugoslavia wants to be friends with everyone if possible. As one of the top newspapermen put it to us—"We do not want to erect barriers between the East and the West, nor do we wish to be party to an armed truce. Our whole foreign policy is based on co-operation with countries, not with blocs."

The Yugoslav Communists are working very hard in their effort to create a new Yugoslav nationalism. We saw pictures of the wartime Partisans almost everywhere we went. A whole new national mythology has been built around the Partisans. The children do not play at bourgeois games like cops and robbers or cowboys and Indians—they pretend to be Partisans and as they grow older can join Partisan movements—a Communist version of our Boy Scouts and Girl Guides.

Busts and pictures of Tito are everywhere. Visiting a cigarette factory one day, I saw a ten or twelve foot high portrait of Tito. When I commented to the guide that this seemed a bit strange, she explained that it was there because the workers in the factory had such a great love for Tito. Even Yugoslav Communism is not without a cult of the personality.

Pictures of Lenin in scenes from the 1917 Bolshevik Revolution can be seen in many offices but I cannot once remember seeing a picture of a contemporary Russian leader anywhere in Yugoslavia. The Russians are thoroughly disliked. I heard them referred to as murderers and butchers and they are the butt of most of the political jokes now in circulation. Tito's firm stand against the Russians has been one of the key factors in creating and maintaining his popularity, even among many non-Communists.

Although Yugoslavia is a totalitarian state, the people are probably a good deal freer than in Russia or the satellites. The Yugoslavs have tried, wherever possible, to replace Russian techniques of compulsion with more humane techniques of coercion and persuasion.

Workers participate to a great extent in the management of factories and in matters of local government citizens have a great deal of freedom. Most of these small organs of government are, of course, packed with Communists so that if necessary the party can exercise control. However, one student I met, a member of one of these citizens' councils and a Communist, took great pride in telling me how he had voted on some issue against the expressed opinion of the party.

The whole process of liberalization, at times in a makeshift and experimental way, indicate that the Yugoslavs have, as much as possible, replaced dogma with pragmatism.

It may not be too far from the truth to say that the only sincere Communists left in Eastern Europe are Titoists. The others are simply cynical opportunists who, having seen Russian economic exploitation first hand have long ago lost their vision of a greater tomorrow. Even though the Yugoslavs have in no way attempted to directly subvert Russian control of the rest of Eastern Europe, their new doctrine of separate roads to Socialism has exerted the most profound influence in the rest of the Communist world. When Tito was accused by the Russians of fomenting the Poznan riots he replied:

"They thought we Yugoslavs were responsible. Yes, we are responsible because we live in this world because we are what we are..."

And in this reply lies the whole key to the future of Titoism.

Slav Studies Nearly Triple 350 Rushing Into Russian Special Issue Floods Outlets

University of Toronto's department of Slavic Studies is working overtime this year, trying desperately to cope with what department chairman, Associate Prof. George Luckyj, has termed "an incredible increase" in the number of students studying Russian.

Prof. Luckyj attributes the jump from last year's 120 to 350 to one word — Sputnik — and a combination of other factors.

He said he believes the recent accomplishments of the Russians and their importance in world affairs has "made more students aware of the country and its culture."

Meanwhile, staff in the department, while pleased with the sudden increase, is working hard against the difficult 50 to one ratio of students to staff.

"We weren't ready for this increase. They're aren't really enough of us to handle it at the moment," Prof. Luckyj said last night.

As a result, he added, the department is planning to increase its staff and on the strength of the increase to expand its courses in Slavic studies generally.

To the "sputnik" factor, Prof. Luckyj added the fact that Russian and associated studies were available to more students.

Russian, this year, is available to students in the new general science course, to students in Social and Philosophical studies, modern history and in the credit extension course.

At present, however, there are only six students in the Slavic Studies course, which also offers Ukrainian and Polish.

Prof. Luckyj said scholarships had nothing to do with the number of students studying Russian. "As a matter of fact," he said, "there are only one or two scholarships available for studies in Russian. We're very badly off in that respect."

The big jump in Russian studies places U of T well in the front of Canadian universities in this field, Prof. Luckyj said. Only the University of British Columbia offers comparable courses but less comprehensively, he said.

One student who this year entered a course in Russian language said he was "deeply interested in Russian culture and wished to understand more of it by knowing something of the language."

Requests for copies of the University of Toronto Quarterly's fall issue have been flooding press offices and sales outlets since the journal rolled off the presses last Thursday.

The normal run of 1,500 was almost doubled this time and the 2,700 copies are going fast.

"We have had so many requests for single copies that we have had to refuse these on a mail order basis," U of T Press Director Marsh Jeanneret said Sunday.

The 96-page quarterly is devoted entirely to education in the Soviet Union. Under the title "The Humanities in Soviet Higher Education", it contains 14 articles by 10 noted Russian professors and authors on subjects and teaching methods behind the Iron Curtain.

Nearly 100 copies were sold Thursday and Friday at the university bookstore.

The quarterly sells there and at other Toronto bookstores for $1.50 a copy.

Its subscription rate is $4 a year and its list of subscribers totals about 1,400 people in all parts of the world.

U of T press officials say the run of single copies should be depleted soon if requests continue at their present rate.

Idea for the issue was conceived last year by Quarterly Editor Douglas Grant who approached the Soviet ambassador to Canada with the plan.

The resulting articles are considered a unique presentation of Russian humanitarian teaching among Western publications.

New Revolutionists Seek Caput's Seal of Approval

The Social Revisionist party will formally apply to the Caput, the university governing body, later this week for certification as a political party.

Co-founder R. W. Reid IV (Vic), said last night that application definitely will be made this week, but he was unable to say just who would be representing the new party before the university's governing body.

"We feel the Model Parliament in itself serves no useful purpose," he said, "and consequently we can't see any reason why our party should be denied qualification as a campus political party on grounds of frivolity."

"In the United Kingdom university students, instead of frittering away their time and sometimes even their year by campaigning in mock elections, take an active and sometimes quite decisive part in actual elections," Reid said.

"As many as 150 students have expressed interest in the Social Revisionists, and we estimate that we can garner 300 or 400 votes in the Model Parliament elections, which is a considerable number in view of student apathy to politics."

Reid said the party plans an organizational meeting sometime this week.

"We intend to pick a slate and elect a party whip at the meeting," he said.

Make New Plans WUS Meeting A Success In BC

The reports of four committees brought some complaints, a few suggestions, and many new ideas at a World University Service assembly in British Columbia last week.

Most complaints came from the International Program of Action committee, WUS' channel for aid to needy university students throughout the world.

The committee's budget is financially unstable because of uncertain contributions from some universities, General secretary Lewis Perinbaum said.

Some universities impose a student levy and can accurately estimate their budget for the year, Perinbaum said. Others have to rely on contributions from the SHARE campaign.

The IPA goal for this year was set at $20,000 for Canada. Of this total, $5,000 will be earmarked for five special projects involving aid to students in Egypt, India, Viet Nam, Japan and Israel.

U of T delegates to the assembly included WUS chairman Sue Evans, students' council president Vince Kelly, and faculty rep Dr. John Hastings.

Suggestions came from the Scholarship committee, which offered tips on the arrangements that should be made by local committees preparing to receive foreign scholars.

The Education Committee

brought new plans to the conference. The committee outlined plans for a new project of summer courses abroad.

In practice, the plan would offer short summer courses and tours of music and drama festivals to students planning a trip to Europe.

Frats Lack Plague As 'Group' Strikes

United Appeal stands to gain $40 if a weekend prank comes off.

Four campus fraternities were struck by a group calling themselves "The Big Seven Renegades" over the weekend. Booty includes a charter, plaque, shield, and sign. The group demands $10 ransom from each fraternity before the stolen goods are returned.

Proceeds will go to United Appeal, the group said.

In a move reminiscent of the Blinded Dog Society giant kidnapping a week ago, the group demanded that the ransom money be left at the Students' Administrative Council office. Stolen items would be returned by special messenger upon receipt of the money, the group said.

But they made one qualification — ransom must be paid in cash. Blinded Dogs were lured by ransom money being paid in bad cheques.

Fraternities affected are Rho Pi Phi, Pi Lambda Phi, Sigma Alpha Mu, and Phi Delta Epsilon.

Identity of members of the group was not disclosed. But informed sources said they were probably not members of the Blinded Dog Society.

Seek Possible Editor Of Literary Magazine

U of T's undergraduate literary magazine will become a reality tomorrow as applications open for editorship.

The application forms will be available in the Students' Administrative Council office.

Qualifications for the position include "imagination, experience and contact with professional faculties," publications commissioner Alex Havrland said last night.

Names of those interested in joining the magazine's editorial board will also be accepted in the SAC office.

Deadline for submitting applications for editorship is Wednesday at 5 p.m.

This big bear was seen a lot over the Homecoming Weekend, in parades, strutting around the field at Varsity Stadium, poking his nose into everything. His name is Boo-Hoo and he is Queen's mascot. Chatting with him here is one of his keepers, a Queensman.

erful Weekend

A Long, Long Time

By HARVEY SHEPHARD

Friday night Devonshire Place was lined with buses. About midnight they began to fill with half-ripened school girls and boys, hula hoops, cheerleaders, in an endless variety of liveries and noise.

The high schoolers giggled, shouted, shoved, ran, milled and swore like troopers. Then they thinned out and Red Feather Night was done.

And the campus waited until Saturday morning when it was our turn.

Between the floats and over the spectators, the heads and shoulders of a roughly circular bouncing mass of Queensmen was visible. A feather-bonnet flopped above the crew cuts and the steel helmets and the band played Oil Cans and Garbage Cans.

The University College float was almost as small as ever. The "Be Angular" theme was inevitable. The float parade was about the same as in other years. Great.

The judges picked well. Everybody laughed at the question mark which indicated an artisan's goal on the engineering float. The old jokes are the best jokes.

The tin-can torch flared up and the gold-dressed Queen's runners were mock Apollos.

At the game, the Queensmen were dressed — and were cut through — like butter.

After the game, the goal-posts went down. Under the circumstances, the Blues fans couldn't find it in their hearts to care much.

The evening, like the morning, saw undergrads of two universities milling and happy together.

At the Blue and White somebody from the Vic residence started a house yell and the resulting discord was almost as chaotic as the thoughts of a lone Engineer simultaneously stumbling down St. George St.

There are occasions when the same female voice can sound mocking to a man standing across the fraternity's living room and soothing to a man close by. Usually when all three have been drinking.

Saturday was a long, long time.

Queen's track star Al Hyland, who ran the Queen's torch into Varsity Stadium. Hyland was the last of a series of runners who brought the torch from Kingston.

Varsity staff photographer, Andy Stabins, was probably one of the busiest men on campus for the big Homecoming Weekend. All photos on this page are the fruits of Andy's labor. Many more were omitted in the shuffle of time and space.

great goalpost fight

Queen's Golden Gaels didn't bring a victory back this weekend. Tri-Color fans didn't fail entirely to bring home the bacon.

Queen's undergraduates succeeded in ripping goalposts in the north end of Varsity stadium following the game.

Hundred fans rushed onto the field as soon as the game ended and began to pull down the goalposts.

Students showed real perseverance in getting goalposts down. Varsity Stadium manager Charlie McElroy said:

"It took them three-quarters of an hour. First they broke the uprights off and then they pushed and shoved until they pulled the goalposts off at ground-level."

University police on the field were helpless in the face of the mob," McElroy said.

An advance guard of Queen's men nicked the posts and, this undoubtedly helped them," he added.

It was only the second time in recent years that students have succeeded in tearing down the 4-inch tubular which are embedded in a foot of concrete.

McElroy also takes the credit for the last time the uprights were pulled down, in 1954. Western students afterwards stole the goalposts from Kingston and returned them to Toronto. They were then sold to Sports Editor Jim Vipond of the Globe and Mail.

The Student Christian Movement float expresses its opinion of President Bissell's plea for angularity with an exposition of the educated man and angularity. Theme of the parade was "angularity".

Tired with sun and air and a long day, cheerleaders, runners and Queen's fans make their way through the darkening streets into the evening, the big game behind.

Lead their float before the judging stand.

Soccer Blues Still Unbeaten Outscore, Outplay McGill 2-0

Varsity Blues took another step towards retaining their Intercollegiate soccer championship, Saturday when they outplayed McGill in scoring a 2-0 victory. Blues were far superior to their opponents in all departments, but this advantage was not translated into goals until late in the game.

The first half was scoreless, Varsity toying with McGill and outwitting them with a dazzling display of accurate passing which frequently took them within range of the goal. Here however, over eagerness by the forwards led to some "off the target" shooting.

At times the halfbacks had to advance to give the attack a demonstration on how to shoot, but their efforts also went unrewarded.

The Varsity team heaved a sigh of relief when pocket-sized Bruno Bertolin found the target with a rocketing shot that went in off the post. Once again Bertolin gave an artistic display of soccer, beating man after man with ease, and laying on inch perfect passes for his teammates.

Roger Peretz, who also played well on the Varsity wing, made it 2-0 with a terrific 25-yard shot after Emil Primorac blocked a clearance from the McGill 'keeper.

Varsity kept up the pressure till the end, but good defensive work by McGill prevented further addition to the score.

The defense was in command of the McGill attack throughout the game and had plenty of time to give the forwards a helping hand. Paul Avis and Jim Watson struck up a perfect combination at fullback.

Ron Williams and Roy Greene starred at halfback, while the pick of the forwards were Bertolin, Peretz and Brian Michcz.

On Wednesday Varsity entertained McMaster in what should be a good game. Why not come along and give the successful Varsity Soccer team the support it so richly deserves?

Training for both soccer teams will be held as usual on Monday.

Interfaculty

Three shutouts featured Friday soccer games in intramural play, with St. Mike's A, Senior Skule and Wycliffe all gaining victories.

The Irish whipped Senior Meds 5-0, with Mahon potting three goals to lead the way. Hughes and Ferreira added singles.

Sayer, O'Leary and Atucha each tallied to give Skule a 3-0 win over Victoria, and Cook's two goals led Wycliffe to a 2-0 victory over Pharmacy.

Skule Fourths tripled the lacrosse score on Meds Thirds, trotting off with a 6-2 win. Wherry paced Engineers with a hat-trick. Nicholson, Daglish and Deakins added singletons. Taylor had both goals for the Doctors.

University College whipped SPS 15-12, 15-6, in volleyball activity.

HAMILTON, Oct. 18—McMaster, the host team for the girls' Intercollegiate outdoor archery tournament, outshot all the visiting teams by a wide margin to take top place in the six-team competition here today.

The Varsity team, shooting together in a meet for the first time, had to settle for third place behind McMaster and Queen's.

Jean Hayward, a newcomer to the Toronto team, placed fourth behind three girls from McMaster in the individual scoring race.

Turning from the past to the future in archery, the interfaculty finals will be held in Varsity Stadium today, Tuesday and Thursday at 1 p.m.

BLUE BEAM BLINDS TRICOLORS

Diversified Varsity Attack Mangles Spirited Gaels

By JOHN BROOKS
Varsity Sports Editor

The steam-rolling Varsity Blues, paving a gilded trail to their first Intercollegiate title since 1954, operated in several gears to demolish Queen's Golden Gaels 44-0 in Varsity Stadium Saturday.

Combining a vicious ground assault with some fine aerial work by quarterback Brian Aston and Larry Joynt, Blues completely overpowered Frank Tindall's Tricolors, who absorbed their third loss as against one win.

Varsity's victory stretched their unbeaten streak to four games, and maintained a six-point margin over Western Mustangs, who bested injury-riddled McGill 39-8 in the other week-end game.

With Aston at quarter, and Tim Reid and Pete Joyce churning up the yardage, Blues ground out a 29-0 half-time lead on a pair of touchdowns by Dave Creswell, singletons from Paul Burroughs and Dunc Brodie, and a 29-yard field goal by Joynt.

Varsity added two more majors in the second half — one each by Brodie and Dave Pinkham, and completed the scoring when end Doug Baird nailed Gael quarterback Cal Connor for a safety. Walt Adams converted twice and Joynt once.

And it was only merciful consideration that kept the score from climbing higher. Varsity coach Dalt White inserted his bench strength in the final quarter, and had Joynt keeping to the air rather than adding insult to injury along the ground.

On the turf, Varsity amassed a total of 292 yards, with Reid (108) and Joyce (80) contributing 188 yards between them. Gaels, on the other hand, could manage only 54 on the ground, the same total they reached with passes.

Aston and Joynt completed 16 out of 22 aerials for 192 yards and two touchdowns, both Brodie majors coming on passes. Connor was successful on eight of 17 tries.

Blues broke into the scoring with only a minute and 45 seconds gone in the game. Julian Porter recovered a Tricolor fumble on the Gaels' 28, and Reid and Joyce moved play to the three.

Creswell dived off-tackle for the major, with Adams converting. Creswell counted his second TD six minutes later after the Blue machine had marched 75 yards in 10 ground plays through a shaky Queen's defense.

The reliable option play paid the dividend to cap the drive, with Creswell taking an Aston piachout and scurrying across from eight yards out. Adams again converted.

Blues made it 20-0 early in the second quarter, with full-back Burroughs smashing off-tackle from the six. The convert was wide.

On the first play from scrimmage after the major, Ian Knowles intercepted a Gael pass on the visitors' 42 and ran it back to the 25. Blues were held on the ground, and Joynt split the up-rights with a yard to spare to raise the count to 23-0.

Brodie completed the first-half on a 40-yard pass play deep to the Queen's end zone. Two plays before, Reid had scampered 21 yards to pay dirt, but a Toronto rough play penalty had nullified the score.

Brodie slipped in behind a Queen's defender to haul in the dead-on pass from Aston. Joynt's attempted convert was wide.

Queen's held Varsity at bay throughout almost the entire third quarter until Joynt intercepted a pass on the Gaels' 43 and chugged to the 21 before being stopped.

Creswell, Reid and Pinkham each covered seven yards, with Pinkham lugging the pigskin in the final distance on a sharp jaunt around the right end.

Early in the final quarter, Blues marched from their own 36 with a mixture of ground and air plays, and Brodie counted his second major on a pass into the right flat of the end zone.

Instrumental in the drive was end Dick Risk, who hailed in two passes, snaring one on a long reach, for 38 yards. Lorry Stacey added a 14-yard pass, and Reid and Joyce took care of the other yardage.

Joynt converted to make it 42-0, and that was the signal for Varsity's first-stringers to take a breather. At one time early in the last period, Coach White had most of his regular defensive team playing on offense.

They came close, too, with Joynt completing nine out of 10 passes for 76 yards, but a fumble and an interception by Gaels' Kent Plumley kept Blues from adding another touchdown.

End Doug Baird nailed Connor in the end zone for the final two Varsity points after the rookie Queen's quarter had been unable to find a receiver on a pass play from his own seven.

Blues held the ball on Queen's 20 as the gun sounded to end the ball game and send a battered team from Kingston to the welcome relief of the showers.

Battered is probably too mild an expression. At one stage in the first quarter, Jerry Steinberg, Mike Wityk and Plumley were injured on successive plays. All returned, but Wityk had to leave the game late in the first half, and did not come back to the Gaels' lineup.

Blues, for the fourth game in a row, emerged without a serious injury. Gaels played rough and ready football in the early stages, but found Varsity's forward wall a bit rougher and just as ready.

To pick an individual standout from the Varsity line would be difficult, although Julian Porter played one of his best games of the year, recovering two Queen's fumbles and producing some jarring tackles.

Mike Chykaliuk, Curt Russell and Glenn Harding also excelled in stopping what ground offense Queen's could muster. Baird, Knowles and Gene Chorostecki handled the massacre of Gaels trying end runs.

The Tricolors got good tackling from Plumley, Mike Wicklum and Don Robb, but were virtually powerless to stop Varsity's driving ground attack.

Blue Room: Varsity collected 36 first downs to only seven by Gaels... Risk and Jocko Thompson were about even in kicks... Risk averaged 39.7 in six tries... Thompson was 39.5 for 12 punts... Although a hard-hitting game, referee Gord Stewart called only 25 yards in penalties, all against Varsity.

Queen's revived the old Argonaut hot potato play in the last quarter... the ball visited four backfielders before dropping low in front of end Robb, 30 yards downfield... The game was Varsity's 300th in Intercollegiate play... Creswell, on his first TD, became scorer of Blues' 3,800th point in league play... They had 3,797 before the game.

Determined Queen'smen made short work of the north goal posts after the game... "But we've got more," grinned stadium manager Charles McElroy... The standards are not, however, the cheapest commodity on the market...

And lastly, did you hear of the Globe and Mail sports' staffer who bet on his alma mater against an offer from Bargain Benny that Blues would win by 30?... Two bucks, Ken old chap, is only two bucks, but asking a difference of 45 on next week's game... my, my...

INJURED ON PLAY— Queen's tackle Pete Wityk (45) bites the dust as he hauls down Varsity's Dave Creswell after the latter had gone for a first down on Blues' option play. Wityk had to leave the game when lime from the 45-yard marker got in his eyes.

Baby Blues Hit Stride Wallop Comets 22-7

KINGSTON, Oct. 17 — Varsity Baby Blues today defeated the Queen's Comets 22-7 in a startling reversal of form.

In scoring their first win of the season, Baby Blues displayed a strong defence and an evenly balanced offence in handing the Comets their second defeat of the year.

Fumbles kept the teams at midfield for most of the first quarter, but Toronto broke into an 8-0 lead by the half on touchdowns by Pete Robertson and Mike Muir.

Another touchdown by Walt Sopinka and a single by Ross Reimer upped the Varsity lead to 22 points before Gary Slickler hit paydirt for the Queen's club.

The win for Varsity along with Western's 34-19 victory over Myerson leaves Baby Blues a good chance to retain their title if they win all their remaining games.

Baby Blues win was primarily a team effort as Casey Wood and Tom Watt led a stubborn defensive line.

Reimer, who booted two singles and a pair of converts, had several long kicks as he turned in his best performance of the year.

Varsity was bolstered by the addition of Al Connolly and Sopinka from the Senior Blues. Both played good games and Sopinka scored a touchdown when he recovered a fumble in the Queen's end zone.

Toronto's Jim Farley was thrown out of the game in the third quarter for alleged unnecessary roughing.

Dick Farr, Robertson and Ev Rush led the well balanced Varsity attack.

The SCM — A Silent Rebellion

The Students' Christian Movement means many things to many people.

To the slim West Indian girl it was a chance to talk about her faith before a group of honest and sympathetic listeners.

To the tall Swedish engineering student it was a place to learn about the human problems of technology, automation and how they tie in with Christianity.

A Chinese medical student found the opportunity to study mental sickness and consider why it is and what it is.

For freshmen, it is a place to go, a new experience, a time to make friendships and a chance to belong.

For most, it is a chance to understand themselves and their creeds. For all, it is an atmosphere of good will.

The SCM is not a club. It has no membership. There are no fees to pay. The bulk of supporters who make up the heart of the movement represent practically every country and faith in the world.

SCM students meet around a conference table in Hart House several times a week. Some of their meetings deal with Bible study. Through group discussions led by a moderator, they rip apart selected Biblical passages in an effort to find the author's real meaning.

Over coffee and dinners prepared by members themselves, they discuss the relation of world politics to Christianity.

Students who make SCM meetings a weekly habit feel a hard-thinking attitude toward Christianity is needed instead of the present "puritanical" view.

A. J. Coleman, professor of Maths and Physics here and members of the SCM advisory board said the organization is designed to escape "the conventional stuffiness of churches."

"In a society such as ours that confuses the principles of

By TERRY BOURKE
Varsity Staff Reporter

morality and Christianity, the SCM offers students a chance to find the real values of Christianity by battling out the answers in a friendly, relaxed, intellectual atmosphere," he said.

SCM is primarily a Protestant organization. The majority of its leaders and resources are drawn from the Canadian Council of Churches.

The movement is not affiliated with any one church. It peddles no religious line. Hindus, Buddhists, Catholics, Jews, Mormons, agnostics and atheists form its life blood.

Although SCM has consistently professed a tolerant attitude towards all faiths, Catholics and Jews remain cold to the group meetings and discussions. Catholic students are not encouraged to take part in discussions that might contradict their own beliefs. Most Jewish students at the university belong to Hillel, a Jewish religious group on campus.

Coleman said, "Only the bolder and more aggressive students will attempt to attend SCM meetings."

SCM Treasurer Rudolf Debernitz is one of the few St. Michael's students in the organization. Through the SCM, he said, "I found out firsthand why an agnostic believes the way he does, what a Mormon is and what a Buddhist's views are concerning Canadian students."

The movement has one of the stormiest histories of any on campus. SCM is an offshoot of the Young Men's Christian Association.

In 1882 the YMCA was a segregated organization in the newly-created and non-sectarian University College. College authorities gave into pressure from other religious groups and churches and forced the YMCA underground.

Four years later "Y" members took over a building then situated on the present site of the School of Hygiene. For the next 19 years the "Y" was the hub of all religious, athletic and cultural activities at the university.

In 1905 the Massey family approached the association and offered to build a larger centre not only for religious and cultural activities, but also for athletics. Today more than 13,000 students know that centre as Hart House.

Soldiers returning from the first World War were resentful of the stringent religious policy laid down by the YMCA's general secretary. They wanted to adopt a more liberal attitude towards Christianity and out of their thinking grew working plans for SCM.

Because of its connection with the "Y" and a provision laid down by the Massey family, SCM occupies a permanent headquarters in Hart House.

Called "one of the more colorful institutions at the university" by General Secretary Allan McLachlin, the SCM sponsors activities as varied as the backgrounds of the individuals who are part of it.

One of its branches is Friendly Relations with Overseas Students whose members converge in small groups each week to discuss important political issues on the international scene.

Danny Norman, 3rd MPC, beginning his third year in SCM said he gained a better comprehension of life through association with it and formed deeper friendships than at any other time in his life.

He said most students today are indifferent to the views of religion. He said the majority of students arrive at university "with not only a haphazard knowledge of their own religion but a vague notion of what Christianity is in general."

SCM might be best described as a place to talk religion. There students meet other people like themselves. They express things for themselves and make some headway in working out their own solutions.

The organization moves with the times. Each new generation takes a different meaning out of the issue it presents; each individual leaves with a deeper understanding of the world and of his fellowmen.

U'Aven't Gambled At All

Hopes for a successful United Appeal campaign dwindled last night as Las Vegas night cleared only $250.

Officials extended the campaign deadline to Thursday night in a desperate bid to reach the $10,000 objective.

A second Las Vegas night will be held Saturday night at St. Michael's College, United Appeal chairman Charlotte Hubbell announced last night.

Campaign officials hoped to make $2,000 from the Las Vegas night. Last year St. Mike's made $500 on a Monte Carlo night similar to this year's venture.

As the last of less than 200 gamblers dribbled through the Drill Hall doors, Las Vegas directors closed up 1½ hours early. Chairman Mickey Spillane said he considered the night a success. "It's pretty hard to get people out to something like this on a Monday night after the Homecoming Weekend," he said.

Elsewhere, the campaign is in even bigger troubles. "Lack of co-ordination" with faculty and college canvassers left individual contributions well behind last year's totals.

At least nine faculties have made no reports on proceeds. Some have appointed no canvassers. U of T's biggest arts college, University College, trailed behind the rest of the campus as returns were tabulated last night.

One-third of total receipts has come from UA all-campus activities. Now campaign officials have to depend on private canvassing to push the campaign over the goal. And with three days of collections to go, canvassers have to make today's grand total three times over.

Campaign chairman Charlotte Hubbell commended Engineering for their efforts last night. Skule has contributed almost one-third of the campaign total.

The Faculty of Medicine, with a small enrollment, topped second place on the returns tally.

Victoria College placed third with $168. Vic has had no reply to a challenge against UC made last week, but so far has six times more returns than UC.

Islam Growing Says A Canon

The Christian church is fighting for its life in many parts of the world, a churchman said yesterday.

Canon Max Warren said Islamism is advancing far more rapidly than Christianity in many regions.

Canon Warren was speaking under the auspices of the Student Christian Movement and U of T's three theological schools. He is general-secretary of the Church of England Missionary Society and spoke on "A New Look at the Missionary Obligation".

Up to 1914 the world could be divided into Christian and non-Christian communities, he said. Today Islam often advances at the expense of the Christian church.

There seems to be a renaissance of Eastern religions throughout the world, and we must learn to coexist with the missionaries of these religions, Canon Warren said.

"The missionary must adopt an attitude of humility and devotion. When Christianizing in the eastern world, it is not a particular liability to be white, but it is a damnable heritage in a country where the population is predominantly black," he said.

"Perhaps the word missionary is somewhat colonial," he said. "In an effort to achieve popularity, many have said 'fraternal worker' which cannot be translated into any other language. The nearest thing to the true meaning of missionary is 'comrade', but this has other associations."

More and more missionaries are needed as many others become involved in themselves and tend to "soft-pedal" evangelism, Canon Warren said.

Only Anonymous Note As More Frat Plaques Gone

A new group, reminiscent of the famous Blinded Dog Society but aiming solely at Jewish fraternities, claims to have gone into action for the first time last night. And reports from two of the fraternities concerned indicate the group, which left an anonymous note with The Varsity late last night, is telling the truth.

Members of the Alpha Omega fraternity said their plaque was missing from the front door of their house. Reports from Phi Delta Epsilon indicated marauders had been at work their too, but with undetermined success.

Members of the other two fraternities mentioned in the note—Rho Pi Phi and Beta Sigma Rho—were unable to find anything amiss when asked last night.

The note left in The Varsity office stated that: "a new group has struck. No name. No purpose. The loot will be used to decorate a party on the 'be a crook' theme. Everything will be returned next week on a dark, late, foggy night."

The note concluded by listing the four fraternities the group claimed to have looted, adding to the four mentioned a fifth non-existent one—Zeta Eta Shiksa.

A fraternity member at Alpha Omega suggested the prank was part of a United Appeal scheme. Another fraternity member suggested the purpose might simply be "anti-semitism."

Coast To Coast Search For Panda While He Sits In A Montreal Bar

MONTREAL — CUP — Pedro the panda fooled them all.

He was supposed to be in Vancouver at the World University Service conference — that's what an informed source said — but instead he turned up here.

It seems that the pet — and stuffed — panda has been given to the winner of the opening football game of every season between Carleton and Ottawa Universities.

Pedro was shown in Ottawa this fall by U of O student president Marcel Prud'homme. Ottawa won the game and the right to keep Pedro for a year.

Then the little fellow disappeared.

The University of Ottawa was covered with choice inscriptions: "Carleton Univ.—by Pope Pius XII" and "Pedro was here."

Apologies flowed from Carleton to U of O, but there was no sign of Pedro.

Telegrams flooded in to The Varsity advising that Pedro was on the West Coast at the WUS conference.

Everyone everywhere was a little mysterious and more than a little puzzled by the prank. Nobody anywhere seemed really to know that was happening.

Last Wednesday Sir George Williams College's student paper,

The Georgian, announced Pedro had arrived here.

"He has been right here in Montreal, in fact it was right in the Berkeley Hotel that a Georgian beer drinker found him across a bottle-littered table."

The paper says the panda carried a note admitting that he painted the inscriptions at U of O.

The note continued: "I hear you are having trouble with educational grants here, but we are having trouble with beer grants up there, so I came here."

A post-script said: "Have brush will paint." The note was signed "Pedro."

It is hinted that "usually reliable sources at Carleton University" may know a good deal about Pedro and how he arrived here.

The sources have declined to say why the pet (and stuffed) panda decided to skip the WUS conference.

Faculty—Student Ratio Is Good Here Bissell Says

A university is large only if there are too many students and not enough facilities, U of T President Claude Bissell said Sunday night.

President Bissell was speaking at a reception at the Bloor St. United Church.

"The ratio in Toronto is as good as at any university in Canada," the president said.

There should be a more even balance between the cost of education and university fees, he said. The student now pays only one-third of the cost of his education.

A system of scholarships and bursaries should be set up to assist deserving students, but those with mediocre ability should be expected to pay the entire cost of their education, he said.

A national magazine recently erroneously reported that he said fees would be tripled in the near future, Dr. Bissell said.

Referring to the recent recommendation against the wearing of engineering jackets, Dr. Bissell said radicalism in thought is encouraged, but conservatism must be shown in dress.

First Come, First Served

Students' Administrative Council representatives in all colleges and faculties have tickets for the inauguration of President Claude Bissell.

They will supply tickets to students who approach them as long as the supply holds out. Exactly 400 tickets are available in all for the student body.

Only qualification is that those who ask for tickets intend to use them. The inauguration is on Friday at 8:30 p.m. in Convocation Hall.

Carabins

Applications closed Friday for this year's Carabin weekend.

Less than one-quarter of the applicants will be chosen. Weekends commissioner Dave Lee said Sunday.

About 160 students applied for the weekend by Friday afternoon, Lee said. Of these, 35 will be chosen.

The applicants were "of very high calibre," Lee said. Names of those chosen for the weekend will be announced next week.

those truly great

Our ancestors didn't come over in the Mayflower—but they weren't far behind. Propelled out of odd corners all over Europe, they arrived on this continent in varying states of fortune and with mixed quantities of determination.

A few of them couldn't take it. With emotional roots deep in the land of their fathers and lacking, perhaps, that pioneer tenacity produced by necessity, they withered and wasted away.

Others showed greater courage. Adopting old principles to a new world they fought and fondled, farmed and foraged, begged and bade through successive generations of ordinary social behavior to the position we hold now.

They were a mixed crew.

One became a Chief Justice while his brother died a village drunk—but a far happier man.

Another, at the tender age of 32, grew tired of spreading manure and became a Doctor of Philosophy.

One aspired towards the stage, moved south, and disappeared in the confusion of civil war. He must have passed another coming north for better fishing. That one ended up a Baptist minister.

There were dentists and shopkeepers, Germans and Spaniards, Anglicans and at least one Jew.

Mingling and frequently marrying, they passed from rags to riches and back to rags again. With few pretences and no grudges they followed a mundane pattern of existence, little caring for their background and humanly uncertain of their future.

They were, and we still are, part of the blood that made this continent.

And it took a man with the perception and integrity of David B. Crombie with his Social Register of Canada to make us truly aware of our social heritage.

For ours is one of the elite of the 16,950,000 names enshrined forever by its absence from his embarrassing bank-roll of honor.

Dignity Of Man

By VICKY INNES
Varsity Staff Reporter

larly is the increased enrollment over the last few years.

Another equally important aspect in planning is the atmosphere of informality and friendliness.

All classes and activities are at present confined to the Grange St. house and the top floor of a nearby warehouse. The two houses they had previously used were demolished last year.

They are far from daunted by this, however, for plans are now underway to improve their working quarters.

A unique scheme, watched closely by other social agencies, has been arranged with the City of Toronto. The city will build an $800,000 structure on settlement property. The scheme could change social administration patterns all over the country.

The new building will include all present facilities plus a swimming pool and gymnasium.

"Full administration details have not been completed yet, says Secretary John Becker, "but obstacles can be met when they arise." One obstacle: every Toronto citizen has a theoretical right to use the new swimming pool.

Financial costs of the building will be carried by the city, while the settlement will meet the cost of operation and staff fees with funds raised by the VA.

Immediate problem facing the settlement organizers is that of raising money to buy furniture for the new building.

UA officials have given the green light to a separate campaign for the necessary $50,000. Becker, U of T co-ordinator of the campaign, says he hopes to raise 10 percent of the funds with students' help.

The settlement is physically and spiritually closer to the university than any other agency in the UA campaign, he says.

University students gain valuable experience and leadership ability, and a sympathy for a different way of life in voluntary work. Social Work students can observe family relationships, population movement and leadership problems.

Basic philosophy behind the Settlement is summed up in a recent speech by Morrow to the Canadian Welfare Centre.

"People come from differing backgrounds... have differing religious convictions and cultural backgrounds, but all are important and deserve respect because they are individuals.

"This belief in the dignity of all men is the keystone around which all our service is built."

Our reader writes:

Just Dandy

Dear Sir:

Remember—cynicism is intellectual dandyism. Yet perhaps The Varsity editorial of October 15 was only roaring and shouting in an attempt to fill a "great vacuum".

Unfortunately the Nfcus is you. Nfcus is neither your obedient slave nor your editorial football. When you attack the Nfcus you attack yourself — at the same time pointing out your own inadequacy!

Fortunately, the delegates to the XXII Nfcus Congress realized that the demands of one segment of society must be considered in the context of society as a whole. They saw the great difficulties involved in making a declaration of student rights; and further, not wishing to commit 65,000 university students to a quick and perhaps regrettable decision, no declaration was drawn up.

Consider, the bloodless, inadequate, and powerless declaration that would probably result from a hasty compromise.

Now, condemn us for the fact that research will be done on this special problem this year and a proposed "Bill of Rights" will be drawn up for the next Congress.

The writer of this editorial attempt to create controversy might do well to consider the words of William Shakespeare: "What to ourselves in passion we propose, The passion ending doth the purpose lose."

But, I guess it's much easier to be a cynic — burning up type-writer ribbon. Oh well, CARRY ON DANDY.

Conacher Ties Reid

Ian Knowles, Little Train Hurt In Weekend Games

Western fullback Lionel Conacher moved into a first-place tie with Varsity's Tim Reid in the intercollegiate scoring race last weekend, but may be out of action in Saturday's game against McGill Redmen in London.

Conacher left the Western-McGill game Saturday in the second quarter after he had been stepped on above the ankle, suffering a slight sprain.

Mustang coach John Metras said last night he expects to use Conacher sparingly against Redmen, saving him for the Varsity-Western game in London November 1.

Before Conacher retired last

Interfaculty Summary

Senior Skule walloped Senior Meds 6-1 in major league soccer action, with Atucha netting four goals for the winners. Sayer added the other two. McMurray counted the lone Meds' marker.

Junior Skule made it an Engineering day, edging past Trinity B 2-1 on goals by Netten and Caero. Lennox tallied for the Black Panthers.

Emmanuel blanked Forestry 2-0 in the third soccer game of the day, with McKervill scoring both goals.

In lacrosse action, Skule Fourths, paced by Wherry's hat-trick, defeated Meds Thirds 4-1. Nicholson added the fourth SPS goal, with Stein tallying for the Doctors.

Saturday, however, he scored his fifth touchdown of the year, vaulting him into a tie with Reid, who went pointless in Blues' 44-0 win over Queen's.

Making a determined bid to overtake the leaders is Varsity's Dave Creswell, who produced his third and fourth majors of the year to give him sole possession of second place.

He is trailed by Blues' Pete Joyce and Dave Pinkham, Western's Frank Cosentino, and Wally Bulchak of McGill, each with 18 points.

Mustang lineman Bill Mitchell counted a touchdown and three converts in Western's 39-8 victory, and took over fourth place with 17 points.

Varsity coach Dalt White, anxious his unbeaten Blues won't get cocky over their four-game win streak, put the team through a light workout last night and retired for movies of the game.

Coach White also learned that defensive halfback Ian Knowles will miss Saturday's game with Queen's because of sprained ligaments in his knee.

Knowles hurt his knee on the first play against Queen's, but didn't suffer serious ill effects until Saturday night, when he attempted to stand and encountered severe pain.

Dave Pinkham picked up a slight shoulder injury during the game, but it will not keep the glue-fingered wingback out of action Saturday, when Blues travel to Kingston for the return game with Frank Tindall's Gaels.

Panthers Whip Vic Grab League Lead

By GEORGE WILSON
Varsity Staff Reporter

Taking up from where they left off in last year's final Mulock Cup game, Trinity College defeated Victoria 13-1 yesterday afternoon on the back campus.

Combining a strong defensive wall with a good ground attack, the Black and Red piled up 14 first downs to Vic's six, while rolling to a total of 368 yards along the ground and in the air, as compared to the Scarlet and Gold's total of 158 yards.

After an exchange of kicks in the first quarter, Trinity had the ball on Vic's 41 yard line. An end run by Tony Boeckh netted 11 yards, a Brook Ellis to John Swinden pass was good for nine more and an off tackle smash by Lyn McMurray for 15 yards put the Black and Red into scoring position as the quarter ended.

A Trinity offside and an incomplete pass paved the way for a fake field goal attempt, Ellis passed to Mike Coke who caught the ball for the TD after it had been juggled by two Victoria defenders. The convert attempt was not good.

In the third quarter the Scarlet and Gold penetrated deep into Trinity territory after an interception by playing coach Steve Moriarty. However, led by Pete Eby, Larry Wilson and John Evans, Trinity's line held, giving them the ball on their own 25 yard line.

Ellis threw a 20-yard pass to Boeckh, who outdistanced the Vic defenders in a touchdown play that covered 85 yards. Eby's convert was good.

Early in the fourth quarter Duane Willis kicked to Dave Taverender of Trinity and he was rouged on tackles by Bill Bell and Gord Thompson, completing the game's scoring.

Scarborough Finds Four Sites For New University

The Scarborough Township Planning Board has found four possible sites for a new Toronto-area university in the township. Each of the sites comprises more than 260 acres and could accommodate an enrollment of at least 12,000.

Three of the sites recommended after a study by chief planner R. D. Willis, are north of 401 highway, the other, south.

The new university, to be called York University College, is to apply for a charter in the spring.

Since a recommendation last August that such a university be founded, Scarborough, North York and Etobicoke townships have each set up commissions to find possible sites within the respective townships.

The four sites are:

—a 500-acre site southeast of the 401-Markham Road intersection, bounded on the south by Ellesmere Ave. and located near a railroad.

—a 275-acre area northeast of the same intersection and bounded on the north by Sheppard Ave.

—an area of 320 acres running north and east of the intersection of the Scarborough Golf Club Road extended and Finch Ave. East, and

Want Four Applicants For Mac Nfcus Meet

McMaster University will play host to delegates from ten Canadian and American universities this month.

Occasion is an exchange weekend sponsored by the National Federation of Canadian University Students in Hamilton from Oct. 31-Nov. 2.

The three-day conference is also McMaster's Homecoming Weekend. Plans for the convention include attending classes, discussions, parties and dances.

Four U of T students will be chosen to represent Toronto at the exchange. Applications will be available all this week in the Students' Administrative Council office.

Application forms include a space for height in feet and inches. The information will be used to obtain dates on request for the McMaster Homecoming Dance.

Cost of the weekend, including room and board is $10. Transportation to and from McMaster is not included in this registration fee.

"I hope that students on campus will support this Nfcus weekend," Weekends chairman Dave Lee said yesterday. "This sort of exchange promotes understanding between students in Canada and the United States."

News Snaps

• Grants from Industry to Canadian university students last year more than quadrupled the 1956 totals. Recent report from the Industrial Foundation on Education says the figure increased to $11,600,000 from $2,700,000.

• More than 160 students have applied for Carabin weekend. Weekends Commissioner Dave Lee says all were "high calibre". Of these, only some 35 will be picked. Names of the lucky few will be announced next week.

• School of Nursing's 25th anniversary celebrations last weekend brought some 500 alumnae, hospital personnel and high-school students. Nursing grads from all over Canada plus more from overseas were there.

• The U of T United Nations Club announces plans for a 35-student four-day trip to New York and UN headquarters. Students will meet Canadian and Russian UN delegations and tour the building. A "limited number" of seats for two Broadway musicals have been bought by organizers. Seats will be resold to applicants on a "first-come, first-served" basis. Enrolment fee, including fare, room and board is $36.

• Varsity staffer Sheldon Greenberg, who was in Montreal recently, reports the staff of the McGill Daily which blasted The Varsity for its anti-Duplessis issue is really solidly behind its Toronto colleague. The Daily, Sheldon reports, says its attack on The Varsity was made "as policy." Sheldon drew the cartoon of Duplessis that was part of the issue on Quebec education.

C'mon, Time's Running Short!

With two days of campaigning left to go, the outlook for United Appeal brightened last night.

Returns totalled well over one-third of the campaign quota. "It's beginning to come along, but returns are still not nearly adequate", campaign chairman Charlotte Hubbell said last night.

While Engineering kept top honors in the tally by a wide margin with Meds still second, Victoria College jumped into third place as their returns doubled yesterday.

University College retained the low spot on the score board, and Vic's challenge of U of T's largest Arts college went unanswered last night.

Emmanuel College copped top place on a percentage basis, with returns totalling nearly $2 per student.

In Trinity, Blues star Tim Reid donated himself to United Appeal Tuesday, and a 25 cent raffle for a date with Reid has netted UA $10 so far. Finishing touches are being put on plans to raffle off a case of beer at 25 cents a ticket in Trinity.

In the last days of the campaign, six faculties and colleges have made no report on returns. Final details of a Las Vegas night at St. Mike's Saturday will be announced later this week.

The grand total for the campaign stood at $3,683 last night.

Noted Philosopher Discusses Modes

The hushed silence of academic respect and suspense filled University College's cavernous West Hall late yesterday afternoon as about 250 staff and students waited to hear the words of a philosopher and his new philosophy.

Central figure of the event was a Dutch philosopher, Prof. Herman Dooyeweerd, senior professor of law at the Free University of Amsterdam.

He told the gathering in the first of two lectures here that traditional methods of philosophy are faulty and the basis of any philosophy religious commitment.

In clear English, the professor explained that theoretical philosophical thought can have no "autonomy" as most philosophers have maintained.

He argued that man encounters both logical and non-logical modes of experience. The non-logical modes, he said, include biological, emotional, sensual and other aspects of sensory life.

He continued that these two types of experience are antithetical and for this reason we cannot seek a foundation for philosophy in the logical of theoretical philosophy.

"To relate the two different modes of experience and find a common basis for our philosophical thought, we must transcend both systems of experience and seek the answer in our ego," the professor said.

Prof. Dooyeweerd's writings and teachings have brought him an international reputation. In the Netherlands at least five chairs have been established in leading universities for the exposition of the philosophy associated with his name.

He will conclude his lectures here today in the West Hall, UC, at 4:30 p.m.

7 Unknown Renegades Force Frat Contributions

"The activities of campus renegade groups are not part of our planned money-raising drive," Charlotte Hubbell, head of the UA Student Campaign said last night.

Miss Hubbell was referring to the Big Seven Renegades who yesterday added a fifth fraternity trophy to their stolen collection begun over the weekend.

A group official said he and his colleagues have made off with a prized trophy cup belonging to Beta Sigma Rho, but denied any connection with raids conducted Monday night by an unnamed organization.

The BSR is asking $10 ransom for the trophy to be paid at the Students' Administrative Council office in aid of United Appeal.

The group is determined to collect $100 and will raise ransom prices or collect more trophies unless money is forthcoming.

So far no money has been turned into the SAC office and Renegades say they have no intention of returning the stolen goods until payment is made.

"We are not a selfish organization, and neither are we working for our own benefits," one member said.

"We are just trying to give every available fraternity an opportunity to contribute to United Appeal," he added.

Friday night the Renegades bagged a charter, a plaque, a shield and a sign. The four fraternities concerned have reported no plans for reclaiming their lost property. Another anonymous group left a note with the Varsity on Monday threatening four Jewish fraternities.

The note said the loot would be used for a "be a crook" party and would be returned next week. But a member of Rho Pi Phi Fraternity which lost a set of poker chips, said he believed ransom would be demanded by the nameless group and the money would go to the UA.

None of the fraternities admitted they had any clues to the identity of their raiders.

In the face of the outbreaks, SAC rep Hubbell said she hoped that "no bad feelings would be produced."

Resident Student Expelled By Dean Following Two-Day Hunger Strike

A University College student was asked to leave residence by Dean Ian Macdonald, Dean of Men, yesterday afternoon following his reaction to punishment handed down Friday by UC's student-run disciplinary body.

The fourth year student, E. A. Lacey, had gone on a hunger strike after being told by the disciplinary body his eating privileges were withdrawn for a week.

Lacey had previously been expelled from residence in mid-November, 1956, and re-admitted this year on an "understanding" with Dean Macdonald that the series of incidents causing his expulsion would not recur again.

He has been undergoing psychiatric treatment for the past 18 months.

Cause of Lacey's punishment was an incident during Thanksgiving dinner in the Howard Ferguson dining-hall.

After words with head waiter Bert Ross (OCE) on behalf of graduate student Walter Degen, Lacey went through the dinner line again and took a second meal.

Degen had taken a second meal and had been stopped by Ross.

Both Lacey and Degen were summoned to appear before the Residence Caput Thursday evening.

The Caput, instituted last year, is composed of the presidents of UC's six residence houses plus two vice-presidents.

This was the first case the disciplinary body has tried without direct faculty participation.

In the course of their trial, both Lacey and Degen argued the Residence Caput had no right to try them.

They claimed their two cases were separate and should be tried separately by the House Caputs concerned.

Lacey defended his action in the dining hall on a point of technicality in the rules.

Degen's eating privileges were withdrawn for three days and Lacey's for a week.

Lacey then posted a notice on his door saying he would abstain from "all solid nourishment and all possible liquid nourishment" during the period of suspension if his penalty was not revoked or "reduced to within reasonable limits."

He said he had no money with which to buy other meals.

Lacey's notice added he would accept no revision of the punishment from Dean Macdonald because he wished satisfaction from the Caput.

Sunday Lacey posted another note saying he would abstain from all nourishment except water. The notice said Lacey would end his fast Tuesday if the Caput revised its decision.

The notice added Lacey would consider legal action on the grounds of "breach of contract", should the punishment not be revised.

Lacey began his fast Monday and is still continuing it.

Monday evening a third notice suggested a new punishment: a retroactive suspension of meals for

Monday and compensation for all other meals missed.

Tuesday morning friends of Lacey mimeographed an abbreviated statement by him and circulated it throughout the college.

The statement said in part:

—the head waiter had told the Caput he was a staff member and could summon any resident before the Residence Caput or the dean without recourse to House Caputs.

—a sentence of two weeks' expulsion from the residence had been suggested; the "usual and previous" penalty for similar offences had been a 75-cent fine and the actual sentence was equal to a $14 fine.

—the dean, who by regulation has "power of review" over residence Caput decisions, seems actually able only to increase this penalty.

—"until the Caput demonstrates its intention to promote good feeling among the students, rather than dissension, some restraint should be placed upon it."

Tuesday afternoon, Lacey was summoned to the Dean's office and told he would have to leave the residence.

EXPULLED and hungry, UC honor languages student Edward Lacey contemplates future.

Aim: Better Relations At McGill Conference

Canada's relations with her neighbor to the south will come under fire at McGill next month.

Delegates from 26 Canadian universities will participate in the second McGill Conference on World Affairs in Montreal, Nov. 12-15.

Prof. J. R. Mallory, McGill political science professor, will chair a panel of four experts in the field of Canadian-American relations.

Purpose of the conference is "not to educate delegates but to stimulate their thinking in the field of international affairs generally so as to enable them to develop a clearer and more comprehensive understanding of the relationship between Canada and the United States," MCWA officials say.

Idea for the conference originated at McGill last year. At the first conference, 70 university delegates discussed Canadian foreign policy.

Two U of T delegates will be chosen to attend this year's MCWA. Application forms will be available in the Students' Administrative Council office this Friday. Deadline for applications is next Wednesday.

A leading West Indian statesman will speak in Trinity's Convocation Hall Thursday.

Sir Grantley Adams, first Prime Minister of the new West Indian Federation, will speak here before paying an official visit to Ottawa.

Sir Grantley studied at Oxford on a classical scholarship. He was called to the bar from Gray's Inn, and practised law in Barbados.

In 1934 he was elected to the Barbados House of Assembly. Four years later he founded the Barbados Labor Party.

Elected Premier of Barbados in 1954, he was chosen as first leader of the West Indian Federation last year. He is known as one of the "fathers of federation".

Sir Grantley's speech Thursday in Trinity at 8:30 p.m. is sponsored by the West Indian Students' Association. The public is welcome.

Bulletin:

SMC Senate's In

A St. Michael's College student, informed The Varsity late last night that the Senate Club is now the official SMC debating organ.

The decision came after a stormy SMC students' council meeting, the student said. The motion was made by debates chairman Lloyd Gray after he read a committee report on debating at St. Mike's.

The future of the SMC Oratorical Society was left undecided by the motion, the student said. The Society will apparently either be abolished or become a training ground for new debaters.

Debate on the motion raged for over 45 minutes at the open meeting. Oratorical Society chairman Peter Dembski fought against the motion, but received little support from those present, the student said.

Dembski finally walked out of the meeting, he said.

SMC SAC president Vince Kelly was not present at the meeting.

All angels are not men; most of them are women. Syllogisms are ugly anyway, and we never could spell them.

Students Obtain Loans Available From Alumni

Student loans as high as $300 are now available from the University of Toronto Alumni Association.

The Alumni loan fund is operating for deserving students in all colleges, faculties and other university departments. Loans are made on the basis of merit, financial and character.

Second year students are eligible for amounts up to $100, third year students up to $200 and fourth year or graduate students up to $300. First year students are ineligible.

Members of the School of Graduate Studies and Ontario College of Education may also apply.

Applications should include a promissory note with one endorser, two referees one of whom may be the endorser and a recommendation from the student's faculty head.

Total outstanding loan at any time may not exceed $400 and must be repaid within two years.

A five per cent interest rate will be charged until payment.

Applications will be accepted at the Alumni office, 18 Willcocks St.

UWO And UNB Dispute Cartoon

LONDON, (CUP) — University of Western Ontario's student council has threatened to take legal action against the University of New Brunswick for allegedly plagiarizing a cartoon from the UWO freshman handbook last year.

The student council has charged that The Brunswickian — UNB student paper — took the cartoon from the Western handbook, blocked out the initials UWO, deleted the cartoonist's initials, and ran it in their special freshman edition.

"Since your paper, available at a subscription fee, is classified as a commercial enterprise, your failure to obtain permission for use of the cartoon gives us justification for legal action," a protest sent from the council to the paper charges.

The UWO student paper, The Gazette, and The Brunswickian are members of the Canadian University Press, and are free to copy any editorial or news material from the other. But the Western Handbook is not a member of CUP and is copyrighted to all other publications.

A lawsuit would be undesirable for both universities, the UWO protest said. But some positive action must be taken to square the "obvious use of plagiarism," it said.

The council's letter asked that The Brunswickian re-run the original cartoon with proper acknowledgement of the source.

The protest warned: "In any case, legal action is still at our disposal."

Good Script! Good Show! Skule Nite In Rehearsal

Two college shows were furiously rehearsing last night in the POT huts.

Dentantics, the Faculty of Dentistry show, continued its casting. Skule Nite, the Engineering extravaganza, was rehearsing the acting and dancing numbers.

As the Engineers' girls practised their routine, a tape-recorder sounded its chords, the choreographer called out the beat, and beeper tins of talcum powder, tween tins of talcum powder, girls sprawled on the floor.

The rehearsal was typical of dance rehearsals wherever they take place—drill and drill again.

Skule Nite's kickline this year boasts twelve girls, six of them back from last year. Here are some of their reasons for returning.

"Trinity hasn't a musical show like Skule Nite. When I was a freshman, I was told Skule Nite was the best show to be in. It is," said Diana Ede, III. Trinity. Diana was choreographer for this year's homecoming show.

"I'm a graduate nurse, and I love engineers. One in particular," said Joanne Rankin.

Marjorie Chapman (II Vic) said no faculty or college has the spirit of engineering. "I wanted to be a part of it," said Miss Chapman.

Choreographer Arline Patterson, who also handled last year's dance numbers, said the girls are doing "very well." It's only the second rehearsal, she added.

The dance number under rehearsal calls for precision timing, and the girls hope it will make them the hit of the show again this year.

Director Hank Malec said last night Skule Nite 519 is following a motto: "Nothing great was ever done without enthusiasm."

"I think that motto symbolizes Skule Nite spirit," said Malec. "This, together with what we think is a good script, will produce a good show."

Producer Karl Harries said music is being prepared under leader John Chenhall's direction.

"The show opens in Hart House Theatre Tuesday, Nov. 18," he said. Tickets will go on sale Nov. 3 on a preferential basis, he said.

Dentantics, rehearsing in another room, is also taking shape. Of the fifty or so people auditioning, about 20 will be chosen for parts, a spokesman said. The script is ready, and the music and lyrics written.

Dentantics draws its female cast from the Arts colleges, from POTs, and from Dentistry.

The show, being staged one night only in Hart House Theatre, later this term, is an original book-type show... "a satire, or burlesque, or whatever you want to call it, on the Grey Cup game," said a spokesman.

Dentantics director is Dr. Robert Yassny; assistant is Alan Mills.

UTDU team opens here with mcgill

Applications for the University of Toronto Debating Union closed last week as the last of 75 hopefuls signed up for debating trials.

Last year 100 students applied for the UTDU in five days. But this year's applicants are of "excellent calibre" UTDU chairman Robin Beamish said last night.

Results of the debating trials will be announced later this week, Beamish said. The team will consist of 16 regulars and four substitutes.

Beamish released a tentative schedule for the union last night.

Debating activity starts with a match with McGill here during the McGill weekend Nov. 8.

U of T returns to McGill at the end of November, and goes on to a debating conference at the University of Vermont.

In December, the UTDU team will go to Pittsburgh, Penn., to debate with universities in the area. January will see a visit to Harvard and the Boston vicinity for matches there, and the opening of U of T's inter-university tournament in Toronto.

Toronto will visit McGill again in February during the McGill Winter Carnival, and will participate in a University of Western Ontario open tournament in London.

The UTDU team will tour Toronto schools throughout the year, and hopes to take part in three radio programs and appear on two national telecasts during the year.

Toronto Group Keeps French Culture Alive

In French Canada, the bonds between the old world and the new are strong and living ones. An exchange of culture between Paris and Quebec is a vital part of Lower Canada's program for retaining here Gallic identity.

But in conservative Ontario, caught between the cultures of the mother land and the giant to the south, rejection, rather than assimilation of the old world's culture is the status quo.

In the midst of this all-engrossing fight for independence and "Canadian culture", one little-known Toronto group is content to find its roots in Paris. In Montreal, the group would be commonplace; in Toronto, it is an oasis in the wilderness.

L'Alliance Francaise was born in Paris in 1883. Its avowed purpose was "to maintain the usage of the French language."

Less than 20 years later, a branch was founded in Toronto. Its importance has increased steadily through the years as the group contributes to and benefits from Toronto's growing cosmopolitan outlook.

Membership in the alliance is drawn from all over the city. U of T faculty, of course, take an active interest in the group, and as a result most of its meetings take place at the university. But special family membership rates and student discounts indicate the presence of widely divergent interests within the group.

Activities consist chiefly in lectures on aspects of French culture given by experts in the field. This year, for example, Henri Quefrelec, a prize-winning novelist and movie script-writer, will talk on "Literature et Cinema".

Plans for this year also include a marionette show, films, and a piano recital. The eight yearly meetings have one thing in common—an excursion into some aspect of French culture.

Apart from monthly meetings, the group is investigating the possibilities of founding a French library in Toronto.

Membership fee for the Alliance is $4 per year, but the student discount rate is $1 for full membership or 25 cents for a single meeting.

First meeting this year is in Emmanuel College Monday, Oct. 27 at 8:30 p.m.

Library Essential Organ Serves Many Functions

Although university enrollment figures are increasing almost beyond the grasp of the experts, there is one aspect of university administration which is growing even faster.

The number of library books loaned to students for home use at present is topping registration figures by a wide margin.

But despite the ever-present need for more effective organization and cataloguing, U of T's main library, the Sigmund Samuel is a complicated but effective nerve-centre for the 42 libraries and departments operating throughout the campus.

The library is not a complete unit in itself. It provides a network of exchange services across the country; books are loaned to Italy, Germany, Russia, Japan and India and rare editions of foreign language books filter to its shelves continually.

Its function might be described not only as a storehouse for books but as a living cell in the massive body of organized knowledge.

The original university library burned to the ground in 1890 and every page of its 30,000 volumes was destroyed.

Two years later a new one was built and contributors from all parts of the world helped swell the collection.

Besides its book collection, here are some of its facilities:

- A microfilm room for study of many rare documents on their original papyrus or parchment. This allows condensation of literature for which there would otherwise be no storage space.

- The stack rooms providing an ingenious combination of lighting and fire-proofing. The steel shelves and glass floors will not burn and light from the upper storey is filtered through to the floors below.

- A typing room built into a wall is open to all students for a charge of 10c.

A new wing was completed in 1954 and contains the Stewart Wallace reading room, named after a librarian who headed library administration for 31 years after the fire.

With an eye towards expansion, library officials are coping every day with increasing administrative problems in the largest university library in Canada.

Original Bookshows In UC, Vic

Two U of T book shows will hit the campus in early November following Hart House production of "Death of a Salesman".

Victoria and University Colleges are working full force on original musical comedies in preparation for their three-day runs in Hart House Theatre.

Main theme of Vic's annual Bob Revue is the college's struggle for funds. Imppecunious students, engaged in a money-raising campaign, run afoul of four underworld characters.

Novelty songs and a Bay St. charleston and calypso group are also featured.

"The Bob this year is notably devoid of Engineers", music writer Frank Cockram. Engineers have been the butt of many jokes in past Bobs.

"Directress Joyce Kleinfelder is the guiding light of the show", he said, "and several students collaborated in music and script writing".

The show opens in Hart House Nov. 3. Engineers do not escape the barbs of UC book writers, however. Theme of the annual Follies is traditional UC-SPS rivalry.

"We are planning a full scale ballet for Act III, constructed on classical lines", writer-director Sy Zysman said.

The plot concerns pitfalls of university life for innocent freshmen. "Bad man" of the fantasy is a sophomore, clad in conventional Ivy League.

Other numbers include the P.A.L. or Political Apathy League satirizing campus politics, an adult Western and song and dance on U of T's Carabin Weekend.

Rehearsals for the cast of 35 have been in progress about two weeks. The show opens Nov 13 and ticket sales start Monday.

old kick-back

Field Marshal Viscount Montgomery of Alamein is very much in the public eye at the moment.

Celebrating his seventieth birthday with the publication of his memoirs, his retirement from the army and the release of a new film concerning the exploits of his war-time secret service double, he is perhaps receiving more attention than at any time since 1943.

Monty's memoirs, like all memoirs, have that discreet undercurrent of contempt for his past colleagues and their actions which usually leads to argument.

The validity of reviving half-forgotten corpses killed in battles long ago is not our major concern. This is a favorite pastime of humanity as a whole.

Neither are we concerned with the validity of being very wise after the event. That also is a human fallacy, and Monty is no extraordinary exception to the general rule.

What does worry us is the dangers incurred by men who make honest reputations in one field of human endeavor using such reputations to support their entry into an entirely different field.

They used to say happily that old soldiers never die.

But when they become writers and politicians, we sometimes wish they would.

bureaucracy of being

It's a funny world.

Yesterday, the Rev. C. R. Feilding of Trinity College, told the 11th annual meeting of Mental Hospital Chaplains' Association (Protestant) that religion often makes people sick and those already sick, worse.

Or so the city press paraphrased Dean Feilding. But buried in the last paragraph of the story was the most arresting statement of all: the dean's assertion that a good deal of research on spiritual aid to the mentally ill was necessary.

It makes us wonder just what the church has been doing for the last 1,958 years.

Emphasized in the reports of what he said was the fact that religious and medical men are frequently at odds over the soul of man buried in a diseased body or agonized mind.

Long before psychology was heard of, the parish priest performed the function of ministering to the spirit.

These days have been gone for hundreds of years. The predicament we are in now, that of never knowing what values to choose in the fight to preserve the soul is not new.

What is new, is the bureaucratic division of man's being. Not only is it humiliating, it is creating a heavy burden to carry in our fight to master the confusion of existence.

The Moral Problem Of:

Canadian Neutrality

By SAM AJZENSTAT

Since the second World War the countries of the world have been choosing sides, in something called the "Cold War", in preparation for a hot war that, at various times, all have been more or less sure will come. Country after country has "committed" itself. Commitment is the order of the day, and although a large part of the globe still remains uncommitted, the very word "uncommitted" suggests that it is not a position deliberately taken up, but a wavering in a failure of nerve. So far there has been no such wavering in Canada. We have been, up to the present about as committed as a country can get.

Tomorrow night in Hart House the wisdom of Canada's commitment will be debated in the resolution "Canada's best contribution to hemispheric defence is neutrality." The honorary visitor will be J. M. Minifie, Washington correspondent for the C.B.C.

The wording of the resolution itself, is perhaps something of a hindrance to useful discussion. To my knowledge no neutral country has ever assumed that its neutrality was making any contribution to the defence of its area. The basic idea would seem to be: let the rest of the hemisphere shift for itself, we'll wait to start fighting until Canada is attacked. Perhaps there is something to be said for neutrality as a contribution to the defence of the hemisphere. However, in this article I would like to discuss other aspects of neutrality.

The policy that the resolution puts forth would seem to resemble George Kennan's "disengagement" policy. To remain neutral Canada would have to pull out of NATO, avoid all military alliances, and refuse to come to the aid of any other country in case of attack.

If a war broke out, it is fairly safe to assume that Canadian neutrality would be violated. Even with this assumption, however, there are a couple of reasons why neutrality might be considered an expedient position to take.

The first and weakest reason is the vague hope that the aggressor might, after all, not violate our neutrality.

The second is that, even if we were attacked, we would fight to defend our own country and only our own country.

Both of these are expedient reasons. Both leave the bad taste in the mouth that expediency always does when it ignores moral considerations completely.

In the days when we still assumed that politics could be pursued independently of morality, neutrality was itself a neutral word without ethical connotations. Today, when we admit the existence of morality in politics, at least to the extent of continually accusing our enemies of violating it, neutrality with its lack of moral connotation has been changed, thanks in part to Time magazine, into the word "neutrality", the connotations of which are all evil.

The crucial point in the branding of neutrality as an evil thing is the petty self-interest involved in a position in which we are willing to defend ourselves but no others.

If our basic position was that war was immoral; that killing was evil, no matter who was killed, and that violence would ultimately destroy the values we were presumably indulging in it to protect, we might take a stand that would be a credit to our nation and a real contribution, not to hemispheric defence, but to world peace. But that stand would have to be out and out pacifism. We could not two-facedly reserve the right to break out our munitions if we were attacked. Our stand would have to be based on the biblical prohibition "Resist not evil." The merits of a pacifistic position can not be argued out within the scope of this article. But it is a position which stands infinitely higher than neutrality, both in terms of moral consistency and even the possibility of practical implementation.

The position that neutrality would involve us in, on the other hand, is mean and despicable. It would mean that in spite of the fact that we had accepted the philosophy of the necessity of killing to protect ourselves, we would be willing to sit by and watch our friends in, say the United States, crushed. For there can be no doubt that they are our friends, emotionally and diplomatically. If the U.S. went to war with Russia, Canadian neutrality could still leave no doubt as to which side we were rooting for.

But once we accept the position that killing in self-defence is justifiable, and we have accepted it neutral or not, rooting is no longer enough. Once we are willing to kill to protect the rights of all men. Why not kill for Mr. Eisenhower, if we are willing to kill for Mr. Diefenbaker?

Not only is neutrality morally evil; it is practically untenable. If we object to war because it is evil we will not fight for anyone, including ourselves. But if we become neutral because war kills so many of our boys and is such a sad waste of natural resources, we are throwing ourselves back to an obsolete isolationism. It is impossible to ignore the fact that we are inextricably bound up with one another, for better or worse. We live in a world in which we must not only, as the CCFers have it, wish for others what we wish for ourselves, but as well, we will ultimately be forced to accept for ourselves what we wish upon others.

Monty (to Yanks): "...and also gentlemen, the only way to end this Pacific campaign is by a sustained cavalry attack".

The Well-Tempered Tennessee cat without claws

Cat on a Hot Tin Roof is about sex. This is the most important topic that it raises. The scene is laid in the bedroom of a young married couple, and the action concerns intimacies which do, or do not, take place therein.

Here, in my opinion, is an impossible theme for either stage or screen. A man may think and write as freely as he pleases (Tennessee Williams invariably does), yet convention forbids him to present such thoughts in dramatic form before a public audience. Plays like Cat on a Hot Tin Roof, and the films made from them, are always unsatisfactory, watered-down affairs, which often miss the very point that the writer is trying to make, or at any rate allude to it so faintly as to leave the audience perplexed, and disappointed.

Richard Brooks, writer and director of the screen version of the Tennessee Williams play has tried manfully to live up to the Poet of the Deep South's tradition of stark realism, but in the end he fails. He gives the characters a few "outrageous" things to say, but carefully skates over what is evidently the crux of the whole piece: Brick Pollit's homosexual relationship with his best college friend, who had previously committed suicide at the thought of Brick's letting him down by getting married.

Moreover, in the film, the emphasis of the written play is shifted. Its plot no longer centres on Maggie's attempt to make her husband consummate their marriage by going to bed with her, although the director bravely, but inconsistently, retains that undignified scene in which Brick (Paul Newman) has to word off the amorous advances of his wife (Liz Taylor) with a crutch. In the film the dramatic conflict appears, not so much between husband and wife as between father and son, between old Mr. Pollit gruff, earthy, self-made millionaire Big Daddy (Burl Ives) and the drunkard, Brick, who hates himself for hating his wife.

Big Daddy has spent his life "living with mendacity", and now, as he is dying of cancer. The prodigal son must be reformed before it is too late. All that Brick wants is love. Down in the basement, surrounded by the dusty souvenirs of a Grand Tour of Europe, they resolve their differences by agreeing that mendacity has to be lived with. They alone are true to themselves, but must learn to make do in a world of lies.

Upstairs, meanwhile, Mendacity, in the shape of the prodigal's elder brother (Jack Carson) and his obnoxious, pregnant wife (Madeleine Sherwood), is wickedly deciding what will happen to the estate after Big Daddy goes. Brick and his father put the liars to shame and Brick, at long last, hobbles off with Maggie.

Liz Taylor is decorative in her underclothes, Paul Newman adequately frozen, while Judith Anderson gives a most sensitive performance as good-natured Big Mama, whose husband has so long ago fallen out of love with her. The most moving performance in the whole film is Burl Ives' portrayal of "Bully" old Big Daddy.

The play and the film have two things in common: the names of the characters and a Southern setting. So, if you are an admirer of the works of Tennessee Williams, don't expect to see an example of it at Loew's Theatre this week. And as for the cat, she turns out not to have been on a hot tin roof after all.

orpheus without loot

Rose Macdonald said: "For courage, a medal with bay leaves for Douglas Ney and the Trillium Players he directs in Orpheus Descending". So much for Rose Macdonald. Here-with, a Varsity critic's observations.

Setting: Williams' version of Torrance Mercantile Stores in a small town near Memphis, Tenn. Trillium version: four drapes, two grey drapes, some beat up risers, a three-step, a counter, a cash register, and three misshapen pieces of wood for doors.

Lighting: Actress (whispering). "This dark evening"—a klieg light bongs on and spews its splash of blue over the backdrop. A little later: Actress (still whispering). "There it is morning"—lights are doused and a dimness floods the stage dullards into darkness.

Sound Effects: Actors knocking on the front frame door. He's called in. Knock, knock goes the sound effects' record.

Five Fundamental Elements Of Play Directing: Composition: a circle of shapes to arise side standing like a football team in a huddle. Three females klomp across the wooden stage while the male backfield was in turbulent motion to the john. Reminiscences of rhinoceros dance without suitable "Dance-of-the Hours" background music. Rhythm: None. Not even from the freshly painted gear that was slung around the lead actor's armpit. Pantomimic Dramatization: Director never heard of the word. Other acute observations of typical actor: Enters with back to the audience, facing blue cyc at rear. Hurriedly whispers his lines in the darkness, then scrambles off. He's done his bit.

Recommendations: Acting and speech lessons for one and all. Bob Gill's twenty lectures on direction for Douglas Ney.

Further Recommendations: For the Trillium Cutups. The Lady Of Larkspur Lotion, a fifteen-minute, one-acter by Tennessee Williams. Do this adequately, then I'll recommend a twenty-minute Williams' play.

And Rosie, my love, that night the audience deserved the medal, with an oak leaf cluster for their courage.

I'll have to read the play. We left after the first act to get a drink. A stiff drink.

Modern Greek Tragedy Ancient Jewish Joke

The basement auditorium of the York Community Theatre this month offers a double bill, Anouilh's long one-act drama Antigone and The Bespoke Overcoat, by Wolf Mankowitz.

Antigone represents the best of one of the most distinguished of modern playwrights, and the players do not do it full justice. The dress is modern, the theme classical, and the two are intended to heighten the timelessness of the clash between morality and expediency. The leading roles of Antigone and Creon demand actors of both talent and experience, and since mood is important, the smaller roles must also be well handled. It was in this respect that the company experienced its greatest difficulty. As Antigone, Margaret Peek created the ferocious intensity for that daughter of Oedipus, and Kenneth Pogue as Creon gave us a stuffy king.

Jim Beggs as one of the guards provided comic relief, while Tony Young as the Chorus, gave the production an undeniable air of tragedy. Stella Chadwick's direction was conscious of mood, character and movement, but often lacked pace.

The highlight of the evening was The Bespoke Overcoat. No longer were we watching a determined group of amateurs give an attempt at grand theatre. This production was fine theatre, and its standards were extraordinarily high.

Michael Tabbitt gave an outstanding performance as Morry the tailor, and Ronald Halliday was a close second playing Fender. These two worked together like seasoned veterans. Mankowitz's play mixes elements of vaudeville, fantasy and pathos, and players of exceptional ability are needed to blend the three into the consistent whole of the play. Messrs. Tabbitt and Halliday were fully equal to the task, and were well supported by Bernard Salter and Derek Crowley. The latter, as the young clerk, showed how well a small part could be exploited into a real opportunity for comedy.

Vladimir Ashkenazy, brilliant young Soviet pianist, appears at Massey Hall on Oct. 22. This is Mr. Ashkenazy's first American tour.

First American Tour

Vladimir Ashkenazy, who won first prize at the famous Brussels International Contest (sponsored by Belgium's Queen Elisabeth) in 1955, will be appearing this Wednesday night at Massey Hall.

Born in Gorky, Ashkenazy studied in Moscow, and at seventeen entered the Warsaw Chopin Contest where he took second place. A little over a year later, the gifted young pianist took part in the Brussels Contest, sometimes called the "Davis Cup" of music.

The requirements for the contest included one short solo piece, one undesignated concerto, and, most difficult of all, a modern, unpublished concerto by Brussels' Rene Defosse. At week's end, the 13-man panel (including pianists Rubinstein, Casadesu, and Gilels) chose the 18-year-old Russian as winner.

Tickets are available now from $1.75 to $3.75 at Massey Hall.

A Letter To The Editors

Dear War and Peace:

Your call for saner opinion in response to Mr. Aizenstat's frivolous review of Orders To Kill seems to have gone unanswered. We have only been treated to the spectacle of a pharmacist sallying forth upon a white charger with the chivalrous plea to "reverence the critic. He is only human".

A movie is only as good as its individual performances. Your reviewer makes no mention of Irene Worth's sensitive and forceful portrait of Leonie. She lives in constant fear of arrest and torture at the hands of the Gestapo. Nevertheless, she carries out her job silently and capably, in sharp contrast to the bumbings of Massie's young American pilot.

Admittedly, James Robertson Justice upstages, but does so unconvincingly. Yet his shrewd insight into human nature's unwillingness to take another's life by using one's own hands, has universal significance.

However, it is in the assessment of the value and the trans-ing of Massie's portrayal of the young American that your reviewer was most flagrantly misinformed; he is an expression of the United States in 1942. In a word he is naive. His life has not evolved beyond the confines of his family and the College football team. His bombing missions were little more than a pleasant interlude, a schoolboy's dream come true.

He is incredulous when Leonie suggests that the bombs he dropped killed both the innocent and the guilty. A lark turns into the starkest slice of life that he has ever faced when he is called upon to kill a man in cold blood and finds himself entirely unprepared.

In one of the high points of the movie, Leonie tells him: "You are one of the few whom this war has not corrupted". The pathetic import of this lesson has curious parallels with that of Graham Greene's The Quiet American. For it is more the tragedy of a man; it is the tragedy of a nation.

Twentieth Century Full Of Neuroses

"Speculation becomes neurosis in the age of automation," Prof. James M. Ham said last night in an outline on twentieth century problems.

About fifty students heard the U of T engineering professor speak on "Automation: the eclipse of man" at a student Christian Movement lecture in University College.

"The automatic system is designed to create uniformity and conformity," he said. "The guided missile, for example, never misses."

Professor Ham outlined three main problems which have arisen with automation; the rate of technological change, men versus machines and work as opposed to leisure.

Science is advancing so quickly, he said, that by the year 2000 every man, woman and child will have to be an engineer.

"We can now have our so-called culture by watching an art gallery tour on television," he said. Attempts are now being made to compose musical scores automatically," he said.

Because every action produces another, this self-perpetuating system becomes firmly imprinted in our minds, he said.

Thus the "feed-back" system of the automatic age becomes more complex and more irrelevant to the higher purposes of man, he added.

He was speaking at the SCM-sponsored lecture series "Controversial Ethics".

radio club hears love and jingles

Campus radio amateurs Monday night heard the problem of reducing microphonics discussed in jingles and professional terms by an engineering expert.

S. F. Love, supervisor of application engineering for Radio Valve Co., addressed more than 80 students in the Amateur Radio Club's first meeting of the season.

He introduced his speech with the following doggerel:

"What do we mean by microphonics?"
"It's radio feedback non-symphonic,"

"Or video bars on a TV raster,
"Vibration output we try to master."

"Microphonics have become an important problem in the light of new uses for radio tubes," Love said.

Television, hi-fi, mobile radio equipment in cars, airplanes, rockets and missiles greatly emphasize this problem, he said.

Using slides, Love demonstrated methods tube manufacturers have employed to reduce this and other tube difficulties.

He also showed a film stressing the importance of communications in peace as well as in war.

About 50 new memberships were obtained, at the meeting bringing the club's total membership to about 75.

The club's new equipment was officially presented Friday night by Hart House Warden Joe McCulley.

"Idiot-Proof System" For Engineers' Society

Nominations for several Engineering Society positions open tomorrow.

Nominations will be accepted until Monday at 5:00 p.m. for positions of 6T0 President, Director of Professional Relations, 6T2 President, and 6T2 Athletic Association representative.

A nominator and two seconders will be required for each candidate. Candidates' signatures must appear on the nomination form.

Campaign speeches will take place Tuesday and Thursday of next week in room 162, Mechanical Building. Speeches begin at 1:00 p.m.

Elections take place Friday, Oct. 31. Polls will be set up in the Engineering Building, the Wallberg Building, and the Mechanical Building. Voters must have their ATL cards.

6T1 President Howard Malone said three separate ballots will be used. "The Freshman class will vote for all positions except president of 6T0," he said.

Members of 6T0 will vote for their own president and the Director of Professional Relations. Other years vote only for the director. "The 3-ballot system is as close to an idiot-proof system as we can get," Malone said.

"We're hoping for one of the best turnouts we have ever had for an SPS election," he said.

Vacancies in the senior executive were caused when those elected last spring failed examinations.

2 Students Win Dates In Victoria UA Raffle

Opening night of the Vic Bob Review will hold extra excitement for at least two people.

Marcia Lawson, 1 Vic, and Conrad Heidenreich, 11 Vic, learned yesterday they have won dates for Nov. 3 event with Mr. and Mrs. United Appeal.

Both drew winning tickets in a raffle held last week as part of the college's UA campaign.

The raffle was termed "a great success" by campaign officials who said best response came from first-year students.

Total ticket sales amounted to $50.

Soccer Blues Host Mac Hope To Increase Lead

Both Varsity soccer teamsaction and four or five walking play host to McMaster opponents in Intercollegiate clashes, here today. Starting time for both games is 3 o'clock with Blues on the Back Campus and Baby Blues on the Front Campus.

Although the Varsity teams both scored decisive wins in Hamilton in the opening games of this season, Tom Duncan, the Varsity coach, has many problems facing him as he starts to form today's line-up.

Since last Saturday's game against McGill, the Varsity squad has picked up a total of three players definitely out of wounded. The most severe loss is that of Brian Michez, who is down with a heavy cold. Brian played against Redmen although he had the sniffles and now is paying the price.

Another Blues' player down with a bad cold is Jim Duncan. He missed the game last Saturday altogether but is expected to be back in action today. The third Senior Varsity player who is a doubtful starter today is fullback Paul Avis. Avis got a bruised leg on Saturday when he and a McGill player had an argument over right-of-way.

Baby Blues are also in a bad way with star halfback Wilnot Tackoor under doctor's orders to have a two week rest in order that an injured ankle may heal. Winghalf Doug Grant is also a question mark, as is winger Lloyd McKenzie.

With both teams apparently settled down, Duncan plans no positional changes for the games today. He is still worried about Blues' inability to score goals in any number. In several of their games Blue forwards have had plenty of opportunities to score a bucketful of goals but always seem to come up with near misses.

All players should report downstairs in Hart House at 2.30.

Redmen Top Rugger Blues In Intercollegiate Opener

The Varsity Rugger Blues, playing their second game in two days, trounced Toronto Yorks 19-5 Sunday, for their third straight win in the Ontario Intermediate A League.

The day before, Blues had gone down fighting, 9-5, against McGill University Redmen in the first game of the two-game, total-points series for the Intercollegiate rugger championship.

The second game is at Montreal Saturday. Varsity coach Dr. David Penman said Blues will undergo positional changes in the backline for the contest.

The forward pack outplayed

Redmen in most departments but the McGill backs attacked constantly and were always dangerous.

Against Yorks Sunday, Blues, although bruised and bumped from the tough Intercollegiate clash, produced enough fire to romp to an easy victory. They now are two points behind the league-leading Toronto Irish who have played one more game than Varsity.

Blues led 6-5 at half time on two penalty goals by Neville Nankivell. Yorks converted a try for their only points.

In the second half, Nankivell kicked another penalty goal and converted two tries. The tries were scored by forward Andy Baines, who ran over from a line-out 10 yards from the goal line, and fly-half Jim Keating who touched down between the posts after cutting through from a set scrum.

In the Seaway League, Baby Blues lost a close 13-9 decision to Toronto Scottish. Roger Kirkpatrick, Trinity College student, was outstanding at scrum-half. The intermediates now are in fourth place in the eight-team loop, but have played only three matches compared with five for some of the leaders.

ICE IN TWO WEEKS

Varsity Arena workmen will have a sheet of ice installed by the first week in November, Arena manager Charlie McElroy said last week.

Intramural practices are scheduled to begin November 3, with the regular season getting underway November 20.

Hockey coach Jack Kennedy will call his defending champion Blues to work the minute the ice is ready.

Blues Defend Track Crown At Western

Varsity's senior track team is in London today to defend its Intercollegiate title against competitors from McGill, Western, Queen's and McMaster.

Blues won the championship last year here, chalking up a 20-point margin over runner-up McGill. Western was third, one point back of the Redmen, with Queen's and McMaster following in that order.

The individual championship, won last year by Varsity's George Stulac and Angus Bruneau were the two big losses to this year's team.

Baby Blues, meanwhile, will attempt to wrest the crown from Ontario Agricultural College Aggies. Others competing will be Ryerson, Queen's, Assumption and Western.

Dalt White's Problem Requires Psychology

By JOHN BROOKS
Varsity Sports Editor

A man in Varsity football coach Dalt White's present position would not appear to have problems. Four consecutive wins in Intercollegiate play would normally make a coach happy.

Not so with Dalton. If he had his way, his Varsity Blues would be travelling to London to meet Western Mustangs this Saturday rather than the weekend following.

Last weekend, Blues cleaned Queen's clock, and unless Ron Stewart pulls a quick deal, are solid favorites to win the upcoming game by a sizeable margin.

And that, believe it or not, is what concerns Coach White. Two games against a league doormat is the simplest formula for breeding over-confidence.

Particularly when it's necessary to play the "team to beat" the following Saturday. There are, however, two consolations to Dalt's anxiety.

First, Western faces the same problem, as McGill's shaky Redmen have suffered a complete collapse, dropping Saturday's game 38-8, and likely to repeat this weekend in London.

Second, Blues are not the type of team to blow 60 minutes of football because of over-confidence. Thirty minutes, perhaps, but not a whole game.

Presuming that Varsity and Western will win their games Saturday, Blues, with a helping hand from Queen's, can bring the Yates Cup back with them from London on Nov. 1.

If Varsity defeats Western in London, and Queen's makes it two in a row over McGill, all chance of a playoff is eliminated.

And even if McGill should win, it would require losses by both Varsity and Western on the final weekend to necessitate a playoff. That's not likely.

Engineers Blank Irish

By DAVE GRINER
Varsity Staff Reporter

Senior Skule gained their first win of the season over St. Mike's on the back campus yesterday by a 10-0 score.

SMC were outplayed from start to finish, and failed to advance the ball even once into Skule territory.

SPS wasted many opportunities to score in the game as a stubborn SMC defensive line held the Engineers on the five-yard line.

Skule opened the scoring late in the first quarter when Bob Sibthorp blocked an Irish kick in the SMC end zone and was credited with a single point.

Just previous to this, the Engineers had recovered a fumble on the Irish 19-yard line, but after gaining one first down were held on three cracks from the four yard line.

Late in the half, a no-yards penalty followed by a pass interfer-

Four Colleges Race For Swim Laurels In Girls' Interfaculty

By PAM HILL

What are you doing tonight at 7:30 people? How about watching — just watching, not participating in — the co-eds swim the Interfaculty meet at Hart House?

About 100 women have been training for four weeks to get in condition for this meet. Last year, Victoria came out on top, but this year, there's going to be top-notch competition from Trinity, PHE, and P&OT.

As for specific events, the 75-yard individual medley promises to set not only an Interfaculty record, but an Intercollegiate record. Last night at Hart House, Valerie Lewis swam the distance in 55.5 seconds. Not since 1948 has the Intercollegiate record of 55.0 even been challenged.

In the 50 yards freestyle, again Valerie Lewis took top honours, with Lyn Philpott and Gail Royce following closely at 38.5, as compared to Val's 31.3. The 100 yards freestyle is also down to Intercollegiate time, and should be a close heat.

Last year's Intercollegiate swimmers don't seem to be making the lime-light as much as desired or expected — although they have been training under Cressy McCarty on extra time. New swimmers like Sandy Grant, Valerie Lewis, Lyn Philpott and Shirley German are coming out of the blue to threaten positions on the team — and there are others, too. Maybe this is the scare our Intercollegiate swimmers need to make them pull up their socks, and not be satisfied with a tie for third place in the Intercollegiate meet.

Come out and watch because this will definitely be a preview of the U of T women's swim team, and unless you travel to Queen's after the lovely lassies — and you can see them as they really are tonight! — you won't see the Intercollegiate meet. So, come out to cheer, ogle, ... whatever ...

ence call against St. Mike's gave Engineers a first down on the SMC 25, only to have Ed Gabis recover a fumble for the Irish and snuff out the threat.

SPS upped their lead to 2-0 on the last play of the third quarter as quarterback Derek Lunn hoofed a single from the 20.

Skule got a break later in the fourth quarter when they recovered a fumble on the Irish 23, and two plays later Lunn passed to Nester Snihura for the TD. Snihura converted himself.

Big Lou Probst closed out the scoring when he hoofed a 60-yard single.

SMC, who have now been blanked in both their outings, were very disorganized and could never mount any sort of an offense against the strong Skule line.

Ed Kovacs was a stand-out in the SPS backfield with some hard running, particularly in the clutch.

Return To Diamond-T

LONDON, Oct. 21 (Special) — Injuries to key backfield personnel have forced Coach John Metras of the Western Mustangs to abandon his double fullback offence and return to the "diamond-T" offence that he first used four years ago.

He used it in 1954 when he had both Don Getty and John Ghrvin to play quarterback. This year he has Art Turner at tailback, and Frank Cosentino at the quarterback spot.

With both men potential receivers of the snap, this throws added weight on the defence. Also, the quarterback, Cosentino, is an ineligible receiver when the snap goes to tailback Turner.

Mac Council Ban On Frosh Hazing

HAMILTON, (CUP) — McMaster University Students' Council last week voted to end freshman hazing as an initiation to campus life.

A 6-5 vote brought to a close one of the sternest hazing programs on Canadian campuses.

Action was taken to eliminate the hazing because: "There is a definite possibility of unfortunate mishaps occurring during our current hazing program."

"Hazing fulfills no need that cannot be met by an adequate orientation program," the motion said.

The motion eliminated "the wearing of any form of clothing other than the usual, excluding a freshman cap and small identification tag."

Tomato fights, "one-way trips out of town," ducking in the local McMaster swamp, and "other degrading activities" all came under the council ban.

The orientation program to replace the hazing would be "to give the freshman an idea of the society into which he has been admitted," the motion stated.

McMaster, the University of Toronto, and five other universities, are the only campuses in this country to maintain the hazing tradition.

There was strong council opposition to the clause barring the Tomato Fight from future freshman indoctrinations into McMaster life.

In this affair freshmen are pelted with tomatoes while they try to retrieve a frosh beanie atop a greased pole. Several freshmen have been injured in the past by "fixed tomatoes" with stones imbedded in them.

McMaster Dean H. S. Armstrong opposed the hazing and said he had discovered very little similar hazing on a tour of Canadian and American universities last fall.

"Initiations do not exist in any great numbers. They have fallen by the wayside and the process has been going on for some time," the dean said.

Some council members have indicated they will bring the motion up again for reconsideration of the tomato-fight clause.

freedom of opinion at united college!

WINNIPEG (CUP) — United College Principal W. C. Lockhart says there has never been any suggestion that United College staff members' ideas must conform with those of the United Church.

In a letter to the University of Manitoba's student paper, Lockhart said such a claim — it was made in a previous edition of The Manitoban — was "an incredible statement."

Since he became principal at United, he has made recommendations for the hiring of "Anglicans, Roman Catholics, Methodists and Church of Christ, and some who have acknowledged no church relationship," he said.

Lockhart has recently been the centre of a controversy at United after the firing of history professor Harry Crowe.

A letter from Crowe to a colleague was intercepted and left for the principal to read. Crowe was fired because of the letter — which contained criticism of the college and the United Church of Canada.

Lockhart repudiated a charge laid in a letter to The Manitoban that a teaching post had been refused to one applicant because he was a Jew.

Appointments to the college are made only on the basis of individual competence, he said. Staff members of all religions are expected to be in "sympathy with the Church's aim in higher education and at all times conduct themselves as becomes members of a learned profession."

Has No Time For Men Gets Cold From Party

LONDON (CUP) — A 20-year-old freshette has crashed through the barrier into the traditionally - male University of Western Ontario's faculty of engineering.

Margaret Elizabeth Fraser, formerly a native of Regina and Winnipeg, is now settling into the males' paradise very comfortably — but has given fair warning: "I have no time for men."

With an engineering ribbon hanging from her frosh-cap, pretty Miss Fraser says she wants to be an atomic research engineer, which won't leave her much time for any "outside activities" with her classmates.

Despite her strict warning, she had enough time on her hands to head to one of the opening parties:

"Right now I'm suffering from a terrific cold from the engineers' stag Monday night. Forty of the boys walked me home and serenaded the residence."

And she adds: "The boys in the class have been very good and very tolerant of the fact that I am a girl. And I appreciate that because in Saskatchewan the girls are really given a rough time."

Miss Fraser turned down the thought of University of Toronto's engineering school because the university was too big — although she would have been more likely to have had some female classmates.

At U of T's SPS, females cracked the male barrier several years ago.

counter-act at western

LONDON, (CUP) — University of Western Ontario Mustangs have shown themselves as a pretty fine football team — against everybody except Toronto's Varsity Blues. But apparently there still isn't enough cheering to satisfy UWO.

Last week it was announced there would be a "cheer-choosing contest" to find the Mustangs a new inspiration.

With $10 riding on the prize entry, the UWO cheerleaders have decided they need something new to counter-act the something Blues from Toronto.

Contest is open to the whole student body, and the cheers, with words and actions carefully outlined, are now in the "selection" stage.

Carabin Applications Cut Announcement Monday

Carabin applications have now been sliced in half.

Only 80 of the 160 who applied for the exchange weekend with the University of Montreal are still in the running.

Weekends chairman Dave Lee says further meetings of the selection committee will reduce the number to 35.

Results should be announced Monday.

"We eliminated all first year and second year honor students today," Lee said. "Final selection will be made over the weekend and successful applicants should know by Monday.

First part of the exchange begins Nov. 27 when 40 U of M students arrive for a three-day round of talks, discussions and parties.

Theft Wave Bugs Frats

The Jewish fraternities on Toronto's campus are up in arms over the current flood of thefts seemingly directed solely at them, a flood gaining daily in intensity.

The Big Seven Renegades, an unidentified group, the "crime-party" group, the Blinded Dog Society, and no-one knows who else are all allegedly involved.

Between $100 and $200 worth of fraternity property has been begged, borrowed, or stolen from the six Jewish fraternities. Many other fraternities have reported loss of their brass plaques.

A ransacked room figures into the situation too.

Here are the facts on the stricken fraternities outlined alphabetically.

Alpha Omega: This is the only fraternity which has apparently not suffered through the present crime wave. The dental fraternity has reported no losses.

A spokesman for the Big Seven Renegades last night said: "I guess we just haven't got around to them yet."

Beta Sigma Rho: This fraternity is one of the hardest hit. Their first loss was a trophy cup which the Big Seven claim to have in their possession. They have demanded a $10 donation to United Appeal for its return.

Beta Sigma Rho has been blamed by other fraternity members to be behind the thefts. Suspicion lies in the initials BSR, which fit both fraternity and the Renegades.

House Manager Paul Huett last night denied any complicity. "The Big Seven Renegades have absolutely no connection whatsoever with our fraternity," he said.

The Renegades' spokesman backs up this claim. "The choice of BSR as our initials was strictly a coincidence," he said. "Our members are drawn from various places."

Beta Sigma Rho has since lost one coat rack, three fancy garbage can lids, and half a dozen ash-trays.

Phi Delta Epsilon: This Meds fraternity has lost only a sign. This is definitely the work of the Big Seven. A $10 donation has been demanded for its return.

Pi Lambda Phi: With BSR, this fraternity was hit. Their contribution to the Big Seven was a plaque, but nothing more according to a Renegades' spokesman. They are also missing two large fraternity pictures, valued at $40 each, and their framed constitution.

Fred Zemans, a Pi Lambda Phi official, last night said his residence room in UC was upside down. A note was left on his bulletin board.

The note, allegedly from the Blinded

Dog Society, was written on a kleenex tissue. "We have something of yours and if you pay $10 to United Appeal we'll return it," the note said.

Blinded Dog Society members are angry about the incident. "The BDS had absolutely nothing to do with this," said one member.

"The inference is ridiculous," said another. "Whoever is using our name can expect trouble if we find out who it is."

"Outrageous," said a third. "The BDS is above this sort of wanton destruction of personal property. Anything we do will be explained, and the written explanation will bear our official seal."

The Blinded Dog Society made campus headlines several days ago when it staged a successful mass kidnapping of campus leaders.

Zemans could find nothing missing except a light bulb.

Rho Pi Phi: The Jewish pharmacy fraternity reported loss of its framed charter. Big Seven members say this is in their possession.

Sigma Alpha Mu: Past president Jerry Birenbaum last night said he felt the affair to be "needless and senseless."

Sigma Alpha Mu is missing a shield, which is in the possession of the Big Seven Renegades.

Birenbaum claims a trophy and scrapbook are also missing.

Last year $400 was raised by the fraternity at their anniversary ball, said Birenbaum. The money was donated to the U of T Settlement, a United Appeal Agency.

The proceeds for this year's ball will be donated to the Ontario Cancer Society, another UA agency, he said.

"We don't mind people taking plaques from the outside walls so much," he said. "But when they start breaking windows and stealing valuable objects, it's a little childish."

"We challenge the guilty parties to raise the kind of money we have been raising," he said.

Not only the Jewish fraternities have reported losses. A member of Beta Theta Pi last night said their plaque had been missing for several weeks. "We have no idea where it is, he said.

Beta Theta Pi members noticed that Sigma Chi, across the street, had also lost its plaque. The plaque showed up on the wall again, and immediately disappeared.

"Somebody thinks it's a great game," a spokesman said. "The fraternities feel it's childish and ridiculous. The whole affair is going too damned far."

Senate Club's Not In Yet; Confusion Reigns At SMC

A mysterious "character clause" may be the turning point in a battle-royal over St. Mike's debating.

Advocates of the SMC Oratorical Society swear it exists — and members of the Senate Club claim it doesn't.

The "character clause" is an alleged part of the Senate Club constitution providing that applicants for membership in the society be chosen for both debating ability and personality.

The clause is the keynote to charges that the Senate Club is an "exclusive, fraternal organization".

Source of the controversy is an attempt at St. Mike's to reinstate the Senate Club as the official college debating organ.

In a fiery St. Mike's Students' Administrative Council session Tuesday, debate raged for 45 minutes on a resolution approving the move in principle.

Oratorical Society President Peter Dembski, a former Senate Club member, says the character clause has a definite effect on choice of members in the club.

He cited an instance last year, when he was a club member, in which a student was passed over in favor of another applicant who scored lower in trials of debating ability.

Senate Club vice-president Jordan Sullivan says the incident was the only time in club history that established voting procedure was interrupted.

One faculty judge refused to score candidates on the basis of impromptu speeches, Sullivan said. After long debate club members decided another candidate would have placed higher if proper judging procedure had been followed.

The question of personality has never influenced the choice of a member, he said.

"If it had, I would resign right now."

Two prominent student government members say they have seen copies of the club constitution with a character clause present. Both theirs and Dembski's paraphrases of the clause wording are substantially the same, although all quoted it at separate times, with no consultation beforehand.

Senate Club president Bob Carbery said last night "there was never a character clause in any copy of our constitution." Sullivan said copies of all constitutions and club minutes dating from its

Woman On Debate Team First Time In History

U of T Debating Union president Robin Beamish last night announced this year's 16-man debating team — and for the first time, a woman has made the grade.

She's Miss J. Cohen of University College, who is also one of the team's six freshmen.

However, no Engineers made the team, although one of the four alternates is from SPS.

Selection was made after a week-long series of trials, first on the topic "Resolved that Communist China should be admitted to the United Nations" and then on impromptu topics.

The second round weeded out applicants debating on such titles as "Resolved that the Public be Damned" and "Resolved that Laws are for the Obedience of Fools and the Guidance of Wise Men".

The UTDU found it necessary to extend the deadline for applications twice but wound up with a whopping 75 applicants.

Judges sheets for everyone who applied are available in the Students' Administrative Council office.

The 15 male team members are: M. Berry (III Trin), L. Gadsby (I Law), A. Charleton (IV UC), P. Dembski (II SMC), W. Graham (II Trin), L. Gray (II Law), S. Peck (II Law), D. Posluns (III UC), Beach (I Theol), B. Raxlen (II Premed), R. Roelstein (III UC), R. Tan (I SMC), M. Wallace (I UC), P. Wooten (I Trin) and K. Wyman (III UC).

Long Engineer among the four alternates was D. Higgins (I SPS).

Others are J. Sullivan (II SMC), M. Thompson (I Arts), and W. Young (III SMC).

The team will go on three tournament tours in the United States. They will also participate in several radio and television programs and tour Toronto schools.

In addition, they will compete against a number of Canadian universities.

Philosopher Says Ego Proves God's Existence

A crowd of over 150 forced Dutch philosopher Herman Dooyeweerd out of a University College lecture room and into UC's spacious West Hall and kept him there with questions for a half hour after he finished his speech.

And at 5:30 p.m. when the first question was asked and the chairman said anyone who wanted to leave could, only six did.

The senior professor of law at the Free University of Amsterdam, in the second of two lectures at the U of T, was continuing his investigation of the transcendental problem of theoretical thought.

Laying special emphasis on the ego in reference to his philosophy, the professor said the human ego is nothing, as long as we conceive of it apart from the three central relationships which give it meaning.

These three relationships are: that the ego is the central reference point of all our temporal experience, that it means nothing without the relation between one human ego and another, and that the ego points beyond itself to its divine origin in which man was created.

At this point the professor illustrated his argument with an analogy to a grand piano. As one would not expect a piano to play a sonata by itself, neither must one think of an ego without something connected to it.

Prof. Dooyeweerd feels Kant erred in his identification of the ego with a model aspect of our experience. This, he states, is impossible because the ego is the central reference point of all the model aspects of our experience.

He said the divine image is reflected in the ego. The ego is the concentration point of our thinking and is moved by a central religious power. It leads to an uncovering of the center of basic motives of philosophical thought, which are communal. The ego must have a positive contact with another ego, he said.

Our Readers Write: Dangling Preps

Dear Sir:

While it is not my wont to undertake correspondence with editors, a small item in The Varsity this morning prompts me to take exception to what I consider a very regrettable state of affairs in the field of college journalism.

The item in question is a short piece in the final page, and though obviously intended as a witty insert to amuse readers and fill unexpected space, it enshrines all those aspects of The Varsity to which I object.

I believe that the shortened form of the National Federation of Canadian University Students is called NFCUS, as you note, but in an effort to help readers, you give a completely false word with which it should rhyme — discuss. If anything the word should be difcus, though I am not sure there is such a word in the English language.

The general tone of the item — "meeting occasionally to blow off steam" — is flippant in the extreme, and certainly to be decried.

Further, it is grammatically incorrect. The editors talk of a "competition which nobody pays much attention to" — revealing a supreme disregard for a rather fine language.

I have always found undergraduates in this country display a remarkable ignorance of English and the finer points of living, but I would not have expected editors of such a fine paper as The Varsity to be guilty of employing a dangling preposition.

George Andrew George,
Bristol, England.

Which Answer?

Dear Sir:

Sam Aizenstat's article condemning Canadian neutrality as a morally despicable proposal leaves an important question unanswered.

Do his high-minded morals mean that Canada must go to the aid of any country anywhere in the world, that is ever at anytime aggressively attacked?

True we already have something like an obligation to do that now through our membership in the United Nations but this is only as apart of a concerted international action in the interests of peace. It is hard to imagine anyone seriously putting this thesis forward as a constructive plan for Canadian action outside the U.N.

The alternative is that Canada, apart from her U.N. obligations, should be neutral towards the hostile military alignments that now divide the nations of the earth. Arguments like Sam Aizenstat's do nothing to answer the question of which plan would really serve better the peace of the world.

Revived Corpses

Dear Sir:

I feel compelled to answer the editorial of Oct. 22nd entitled "Old Kick-back" in which the writer goes to "great lengths to show the reader his own ignorance of, and shallowness in, the history of war, relating to the 2nd. World conflict."

Upon what premise or basis does the writer base his presumptuous statement that the "validity of reviving half-forgotten corpses killed in battles long ago is not our major concern"? If we who are now living forget what actually happened during the recent wars what is to become of us in the future. The basis for the present deplorable state of world affairs lies in the events which happened during the last war, especially those events near the end with their great political significance.

The writer also shows an ignorance of the American military mind which had much to do with creating the "cold war" as it now stands. The events following the war have shown quite clearly the inability of the American mind to fathom the complexities of beneficial peace which is politically as well as militarily satisfactory to us as a whole (allies). It is well known to people who have taken the trouble to enquire before opening their mouths that Pres. Roosevelt distrusted P. M. Churchill and was more for favouring Stalin. Thus the stoppage and redirection of allied troops so that the Russians could take Berlin. In official communiques it has been shown that the Pres. of the U.S. tried very hard to bereft England of her colonial possessions in the Pacific due to a disagreement over colonialism.

Gen. Montgomery was a great commander who had the highest regard for the welfare of his troops. A careful, slow, patient man who at times was slow to take advantage of opportunity but nevertheless had his men in mind at all times.

The Americans on the other hand had only one thought in mind; defeat the enemy, never retreat and to hell with political consequences. The advocate of this was Patton, along with others. Here again the Patton-Bradley mix-up was something which Eisenhower did not like to make much fuss about and thus let them on their own quite frequently.

The writer also mentions that men "who make honest reputations in one field of endeavor (human)" should perhaps die if they become writers and politicians.

Perhaps he thinks the same about Pres. Eisenhower who is in about the same situation?

Try reading the "War in Europe" by Chester Wilmut which is in the main library. It could enable you to keep your foot out of your mouth next time you open it on military matters.

Variety

Dear Sir:

At this time, I would like to thank those connected with the new bookstore for having such an outstanding selection of pocketbooks! Maybe you can do this for me. I am sure many feel the same about the situation at the store as I do. You may know what I mean, however, if you don't, I shall be glad to refresh your memory. You see, it's like this:

Once upon a time, away back when, there was a BOOK-STORE 100 feet by ten;

Rows and rows of students lined 10 heads deep,

Hoped for books, got dirty looks, and wound up with some sleep.

The books we asked for, we didn't get,

"They're out of stock, now don't you fret,

Look at those pocket-books over in the corner."

We did and went home with Li'l Jack Horner, Not to mention Spillane and Mickey Mouse Big Daddy, Maggy the Cat, and, the Blue House.

TIME has passed in our brief episode,

And something has happened to lessen our load

Of books that we need by MILTON and MORE

You guessed it — we've got ourselves a new book store.

But nothing has changed since away back when,

Except the dimensions are now 100 by one ten,

And everything before is happening again.

Now we get books to learn how to sew,

Or to build us a hammock to rock in to and fro!

Our books are on order; they will be all year,

So we'll relax and stock up on some beer,

In case of a strike like the last one we had —

Now don't get me wrong, 'cause really you're mad?

I'm just disturbed, Oh my gosh "Allez-ooop!"

Oh where in the store can I hang my Hula Hoop?"

St. Mike's In Turmoil

foundings are on file in the SMC library.

The two produced a copy of their constitution last night. Nowhere in the document was there any wording resembling in any way the controversial character clause.

Confusion was added to pandemonium as the SMC newspaper, The Mike, appeared on campus yesterday. The paper carried a report of the debates commission meeting before Tuesday's SAC blow-up.

In the meeting, the paper said, the Senate Club presented a compromise plan involving an SMC parliament, the club forming the upper house and other debating organizations the lower half. The motion received one vote.

The Oratorical Society proposed that all organizations be incorporated into one society with all SMC students as members, but with a top team chosen each year by impartial judging. The motion received three votes.

A third compromise received no votes.

Yet the motion of principle proposed by Debates commissioner Lloyd Gray Tuesday and passed by the St. Mike's SAC in no way resembled any of the three proposed compromises.

The motion of principle passed Tuesday recommends that the SAC should aid women of the college in forming a "closed women's debating organization" which would later merge with the Senate Club.

All other existing debating organizations would be allowed to progress as training-grounds for debaters, according to the motion.

Several SAC members confessed after the meeting they were not clear on the matter under debate. Spectators were also confused about the issues. One student told The Varsity Tuesday night he thought the motion officially recognized the Senate Club.

Dembski and St. Joseph's debating rep Barbara Arrington walked out of the meeting in protest against the nature of debate on the motion.

Dembski said last night in reference to the Senate Club that "fraternities belong on St. George St., not in a debating parliament."

"If the Senate Club is recognized as the official college debating organ, I will think seriously of transferring to another college where debaters do not need the false sense of superiority which fraternity brings them," he said.

Vince Kelly, St. Mike's SAC vice-president, said last night "it would be shortsighted to expect a fraternal organization to represent the college in debating either on campus or off, nor should you give public funds to an organization composed in this manner."

The fact that the University of Toronto Debating Union withdrew recognition from the Senate Club last year indicates "the status of the Senate Club in this campus and puts it in a very embarrassing position," he said.

Carberry said last night "we would rather not be involved in this controversy, because we feel that there are no facts involved in the accusations." This was an official statement on club feeling in the matter, he said.

Debate on the subject raged yesterday at St. Mike's. Students generally agree that the Senate Club is a "fraternal organization, either implicitly or explicitly", Kelly said last night. Debates commissioner Gray's statement Tuesday night that the club's primary purpose was for the enjoyment of its members, and secondarily to debate, helped to further the impression, Kelly said. Gray is a Senate Club member. But the "character clause" controversy sheds a new light on the affair.

Senators To Debate

Two members of St. Mike's Senate Club will support the resolution "Resolved the St. Michael's College should leave the Catholic Federation of Canadian University Students", in Brennan Hall at 8 p.m. tonight.

Opposing the resolution will be Don Halls and Denny Ryan.

The Senators are Bob Carberry and Lloyd Gray.

Two prominent socialists will speak to the CCF club this week.

Michel Chartrand, leader of Quebec's Social Democratic party and member of the CCF national executive, will speak on "Politics and Education in Quebec". Mr. Chartrand is also an organizer of the Catholic Confederation of Labor.

He will speak at 4 p.m. today in Rm. 11, UC. The CCF club planned the meeting because "for the first time in many years the campus is taking a real interest in some of the strange affairs transpiring in our neighbor province."

The meeting will begin at 1 p.m. club president Jerry Caplan said last night.

Mr. Chartrand is "an authority on the subject," he said.

Friday, Member of Parliament Doug Fisher will speak on "A Socialist Looks at the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation".

Mr. Fisher defeated ex-Liberal cabinet minister C. D. Howe in his Port Arthur constituency. He has taken great interest in the CBC question recently, Caplan said.

The talk will take the form of a discussion period, as part of the CCF club's educational program.

The meeting will begin at 1 p.m. Friday in Rm. 4, UC. Students are invited to bring their lunch.

the case of ed lacey

The case of Edward Lacey, the University College student expelled from residence last Tuesday, is a tragedy of contradictions, personalities, puerile behavior and student ineptitude.

Beginning with a childish but minor infraction of residence rules, the case followed a dramatic and seemingly inevitable pattern of crises culminating in Tuesday's decision by the Dean of Men.

It is one of those cases in which everybody makes mistakes and nobody seems to blame.

But mistakes were made, and it seems unfortunate that Edward Lacey should be the only actor to suffer from them.

Lacey is not an average, all-round student of the old school. Far from it. His manner and his actions bear the hall-mark of eccentricity which is neither affected on the one hand nor harmful on the other.

He is the ultimate in President Bissell's "aniquilary plea. He is the true non-conformist. In the shallow idiom of our age, he is an "odd-ball".

He also happens to be one of the most intelligent students on campus today—and a gifted poet into the bargain.

After a series of conflicts with residence administration two years ago, Lacey was expelled. During the intervening 18 months, on the Dean of Men's recommendation, he underwent psychiatric treatment from a highly respected consultant in the university's faculty of medicine.

He was readmitted into residence this year on an "understanding" with the Dean that no "incident" would occur again.

Until last week Lacey remained the most obscure student the college had ever seen.

Then the "incident" occurred.

What the "incident" was has already been explained. Lacey committed a minor crime and received from the newly-inaugurated student disciplinary body a punishment, in our view, out of all proportion to the infraction.

Lacey's reaction could have been predicted by anybody aware of his background.

As a result of that reaction, Lacey's past was exhumed, his "probationary" period declared over, and his future clouded.

That is the essence of tragedy.

And as the curtain comes down, the protagonist departs from the stage and the audience remain silent.

Looking back on it we, the critic, find two main issues emerging from the action.

The first, representing the Dean's position, is that a person like Lacey, inclined to erratic displays of non-conformity, has no place in an undergraduate residence community.

The second, representing our view, is that the student-run Caput has neither the authority nor the experience to pass judgement on the actions of a person many of them dislike—and none of them understand.

Lacey was not, as the Dean would like to claim, tried by his peers.

Lacey has friends in the student body, and a growing number of supporters.

But his peers are not represented by the all-round, politically-minded, socially impeccable individuals of whom that student court was composed. Equality can be measured in things more important than social status.

Beyond this, Lacey, because of his intellect, because of his artistic ability and because of his basically pleasant personality, has a vital and undeniable place in the university community.

If we exclude him, we exclude most of the principles of academic maturity for which we stand.

And if the university residences were based, as they should be, on similar principles of maturity instead of being refined adaptations of private school boarding houses, there would be a place for Edward Lacey there too.

Yugoslavia - II

Collectives: the new ukraine

By TIM REID

Tim Reid, IV Trinity, was one of three U of T delegates at the World University Service's summer seminar in Yugoslavia. Here is the second of a series of articles written by the delegates on what they saw and what they learned there.

American farms were broken down into 10-acre plots the U.S. wouldn't have enough food even for its farmers... she'd have to eat up Canada."

Mechanization

Large-scale mechanized farming appears to be the answer. Of course in the mountain districts this is impossible except along the river valleys.

It must be made clear that Yugoslavia's new form of large-scale farming definitely bears little resemblance to the systems of several of their Socialist neighbors in the satellite camp. Nor does it resemble their own post-war collectivization.

New Principles

A Yugoslav expert outlined a basic principle of one type of his country's farm organization in the following manner:

"Suppose you and I decided to form a co-operative and suppose you put in 10 acres of land and I put in five.

"We both would receive the same wage for working our 15-acre co-op, but you would also receive a rent on your land which would be double the rent that I would receive."

Rent, then, apparently does not disappear even though individual holdings do.

Work Less?

Another interesting fact came to light when I asked the same man what was being done to counteract the adverse psychological effects on a peasant's attitude to work resulting from the lack of a sense of private ownership. That is, would a peasant work as hard as he once did if he couldn't distinguish which little piece of land was his?

The reply was: "We give the peasant the right to get out of our new co-ops three years after he has first joined one. This right can be exercised every three years from father to son, if he wants to stay in he must renew his individual agreement with the co-op management.

Five Year Plan

In the next Five Year Plan vast amounts of money are going towards fertilizer factories, farm machinery, agricultural research, better seed, and peasant education.

The trends in the Yugoslav economy seem to me to be apparent.

First, individual producers are joining the new collectives or co-ops rather than getting out of them.

Secondly, agricultural productivity, stimulated by heavy investment, as well as by the advantages of large-scale farming, is on the upswing.

Impossible?

The question is how can they possibly do it? For one thing, the independent peasant producers now comprise by far the largest segment of the farm population. And most of them own less than 10 acres of land.

Thus the problem is essentially that of a system of agriculture based on five-to-ten-acre "estates". You simply cannot organize production on such a basis.

As one Yugoslav put it: "If

Callas Sings

The long-awaited Toronto debut of Italian prima donna Maria Meneghini Callas fizzled out on a wobbly and overlong sour note on Tuesday night.

The entire two hour concert, during which Mme. Callas sang a grand total of six arias, may have been a source of great inspiration to rabid Callas fans, but could only have been a severe disappointment to the vast majority of the 6,000 members of the audience who dutifully spent good money and time in the expectation of a least some sort of return for their expenditures.

The evening got off to a bad start with a gutless, saccharine version of Verdi's La Forza Del Destino overture, given a funeral treatment by the small polylog orchestra (including several of Toronto's better musicians).

Perhaps too much was expected of conductor Nicola Rescigno, who after all, was forced to submit to the undignified, discouraging position of playing second fiddle to a celebrated star.

Still, he might have tried to extract more exciting performances from his players. Maestro Rescigno saved himself from complete ignominy by giving us a more-than-adequate rendition of Rossini's L'italiana In Algeri overture.

Callas herself appeared, stunning in a lime-green dress, supported herself on the rail of the conductor's podium, wrapped her fichu demurely about her, bestowed a vacuous Audrey Hepburn smile on the patrons, and curtly signalled to the maestro to begin.

Her first aria, from Spontini's seldom-performed La Vestale, was obviously a warmer up; nevertheless, Callas aptly demonstrated her brilliance in dramatic opera in this first, most grueling number.

This was followed by an aria from Verdi's Macbeth, which should have provided some scope for vocal fireworks. Instead, Mme. Callas left most of the work to the orchestra. In short, it was a letdown.

After a debauched orchestral rendition of the Manon Lescaut intermezzo, Callas returned for her last number before intermission. It was an unfortunate strategical error.

The number was "Una Voce Poco Fa" from Rossini's Barbiere di Siviglia. This is an aria for coloratura soprano possessed of a fairly light, lyrical voice. Now, Mme. Callas' voice is many things, but it is certainly not light, nor is it especially lyrical, except in her mezzo-voice passages, which are exquisite.

Her singing of the Rossini aria was ponderous, her trills elephantine, her phrasing muddled. There could hardly have been a less inspired choice with which to end the first half of a concert.

The second half opened with a nearly perfect delivery of "L'Altra Notte", from Arrigo Boito's Mefistofele. Again, faulty phrasing spoiled what was otherwise a flawless, and even definitive rendition.

Her second mistake of the evening was the Musetta Waltz Song. Her attempts to override the orchestra resulted in a heavily over-dramatic performance which all her simulated attempts at glee failed to make convincing.

The finest aria of the concert was the mad scene from Hamlet. Again, Mme. Callas' gifts for the dramatic served her to good advantage, and one could begin to see why critics have lavished so much praise on the prima donna.

Possibly she was miffed because the audience only applauded her until their hands were raw, and were not on their feet wildly cheering (to my knowledge, this has only happened once, when the Moiseyev Dance Company was here); at any rate, the lady did not deign to favour us with an encore, her third big mistake of the evening.

Toronto musical critics have forever heaped disgrace upon themselves by their remarks; all agreed that Callas has faults; that she wobbles on high notes, that her voice is strident. But, they add, surely such faults are part of her greatness. Well, gentlemen, I sincerely trust you believe such rubbish, because I certainly don't.

WARREN WILSON.

swing and snow

Hart House heard some very fine jazz yesterday afternoon. The pity of it is, that the crowd that filled the same music room at the end of last year to hear Moe Koffman couldn't have been there yesterday to hear some really superb local jazz.

The group was pianist Mike Snow's quartet, and this is a well-disciplined, swinging group. It is a group that is demanding a lot of itself and, for the most part, living up to its demands.

Snow, apparently with no special axe to grind in the myriad of jazz styles clouding the issue today, leads a very smooth, generally upbeat group, that, can swing or drive as it feels inclined and makes do with a minimum of good arranging.

am&d reminder

Don't forget the great cellist JAYNO STARKER will be appearing at the Royal Conservatory to-day. This famous cello virtuoso will give a lecture on Bach's cello suites in the afternoon, and his recital in the evening will include Suites Nos. 1 and 3 by Bach, and the Hungarian composer, Liszt's Sonata, opus 8. Don't miss this opportunity.

3 p.m. Lecture at the Royal Conservatory Concert Hall. 8:30 p.m. Recital.

Snow himself is fast and competent with his right hand, keeps a nice rhythm backing for the rest of the group, and only goes slightly astray when he lets his left hand wander into some Brubeck-like chord profundities.

Harold Holmes, bass, and Bud Hill on trombone are both excellent. Holmes, who once played with the legendary Billy Parker and with Art Blakey's Jazz Messengers before coming to Toronto, two years ago, showed up first yesterday in the "Birds" own "Yardbird Suite". This solo and later ones culminated in a marvellous bit of bowing when the group relaxed for some easy, swinging blues.

Holmes, pushing drummer, Shaun Clifford into a constantly determined and sharp beat, teamed up with trombonist Hill for some very driving numbers, among them "What is this thing called love?" the latter stages of the ballad "Lover Man", and a nervous, agitated number called "Night in Tunisia", which Snow didn't seem to think came off.

Hill, except for the occasional slur when he gets too ambitious, is most proficient. The alternate windy delicacy and determined drive of his horn indicates that the recently-emerged trombone is one of the best small-group brass instruments.

Warren Peace And The High Diva

In Friday's Varsity, I made some slighting references to Maria Meneghini Callas. Now I want to take them all back. Forgive me, Maria.

It all started on Tuesday, when I was rushing down to Maple Leaf Gardens to see why we had been omitted from the preceding day's Press Conference, and to see if there was any chance to snag a short interview with the celebrated prima donna.

To accomplish this task, I was armed with an important-looking press pass, bearing the name Sam Ajzenstat. I figured that an improbable name like that would be sufficient to get me past any barriers, even if people were able to pronounce it correctly. And there seemed to be no immediate danger of that.

So, I blithely walked into the publicity department where I questioned an important-looking official about our mission. He politely informed me that the Gardens was not responsible for Mme. Callas' publicity, and that I should see a Mr. Johnson at Eaton Auditorium.

Vaguely wondering at this unheard of co-operation between two theatres, an alliance which strikes at the very roots of capitalism, I wandered over to Mr. Johnson's office. Here I was politely informed that the gentleman wasn't in and wouldn't be back until the following morning.

It was then that I had the bright idea. Hastily pawning the family jewels, making use of the room rent, and selling out my roommate to the bailiffs for a considerable stipend, I rushed back to the Gardens, and purchased a ticket for the snobs' gallery.

That night, the accordion-legged conductor led the diva onto the stage, and I was struck dumb, an almost impossible task for a person of my genius. There she was in all her Greek-American beauty, one more example of the tremendous debt Italy owes to Greece for her culture. Even if her nose was too large for her face, the overall impression of beauty remained with me, even when she was singing.

And even for those whom Mme. Callas' voice is aesthetically repugnant, those to whom the idea that she can act must be nonsense, and the spitefulness of her personality an insupportable imposition upon the patience of man — even these cannot fail to be moved by the beauty of the woman who sang.

The long and the short of it was that I fell madly in love with her and rushed backstage to prostrate myself before her. I was stopped by an attendant, who wanted to know where the hell I thought I was going.

"Take me to your diva," I gasped. "No," he replied, and escorted me to Church Street.

So there it is. So my contradictory views of Callas may dismay you; so my unhalloved passion for her may revolt you (and Mr. Meneghini); so you can all drop dead. So there.

I wonder if she can cook?

Warren Peace.

I don't care if you're Eleanor Roosevelt — you still can't bring that g-d-n mutt over here!

Everglade Escapade

WIND ACROSS THE EVERGLADES (Downtown) gusts lustily from time to time, but generally fails to flutter the viewer's interest.

In his previous efforts ("On The Waterfront", "A Face In The Crowd"), Screenwriter Budd

Schulberg was concerned with thrusting home a biting social message. Here, it is never quite apparent what he is doing. Moreover, Nicholas Ray's leaden and uneven handling of cast and camera abets the film's general aura of pointlessness. Nonetheless, as a colourful species of that well-known genus, "the Swamp Saga", Wind is often good entertainment.

Into turn of the century Miami comes "bird boy" Christopher Plummer, a volunteer warden of the newly-formed Audubon Society. Soon he is kneeling at the bar at a bordello chaperoned by aging peeler Gypsy Rose Lee, but an unfortunate incident with some other "wildlife" deep in the Everglades causes him to abandon the feather girls in search of the feather-bows who shoot pretty birds for milady's millinery. While Plummer chases the plummers, he runs afowl of Cottonmouth (Burl Ives), a red-bearded, snake-toting swamp rat and his sordid pack (Clown Emmett Kelly, ex-Pug Tony Galento and Jockey Sammy Renick) of bird doggers. In the end, Ives discovers that he really loves pretty birds and as a natural consequence is bitten by a pretty snake. Justice having been done, boa-restrictor Plummer poles his way back to Miami and the arms of his lady love (pert Israeli actress Chana Eden), who also thinks feathers are for the birds.

Burl Ives, fast becoming one of the best character actors on the screen, vividly captures all the fierce intensity in Cottonmouth. Canada's Christopher Plummer appears cramped on film, but his natural ebullient extroversion flashes forth brilliantly in a delightful "juggin and jawin" session with the swamp rats.

As a period of early Americana, this one is moderately successful. As cinema art, however, it leaves much to be desired.

Ted Schafer.

p. s. on jazz

It is gratifying to find that jazz in Toronto has its true followers as well as the cool, sophisticated sight-seers one finds in the hipper restaurants and sight clubs. We are referring to the experiment of the Chelsea Jazz Club, in its old Yonge Street location, which in our opinion has succeeded exceedingly well.

It is Toronto's only European-style jazz club, with the possible exception of Maison-Doré. The people who go there are not going to gawk at atmosphere, or eat full-course meals or get juiced—they go there to relax with jazz, dancing, listening, and happy exchange of ideas in the realm of jazz and a good life. Everybody who is there, seems to love jazz, especially the traditional group which plays on Saturdays. They play as if they actually enjoy playing, and you can hear the difference. We certainly hope that Chelsea will become an off-campus meeting place for all who sincerely love jazz, and are tired of commercialism, cliques and the jazz snob.

With time the Friday night modern jazz should improve, jam-sessions and record-sessions could be instituted, and we hope the new rooms at 2 Berti Street (off Richmond between Victoria and Church) will continue with the same success. See you there.

The Pepper Adams, Kenny Burrell concert will be in the Museum Theatre this Friday. The quintet features a local rhythm section: Archie Laine, drums; Jack Londers, Bass; and Ray Downes, piano. Tickets for the 8:30 concert are selling $2.00.

Also at the Town Tavern this week: Oscar Peterson. At the Colonial this week: Toshiko.

To the list of radio programs that Boris Freeman gave you a few weeks ago (Jazz Goes To College), I would like to add two more: Joe Rico (WHLD) 5-6; Mon. to Fri.; Jack Walmsley, (CKLB), Saturdays, 2-4.

There are approximately 40 hours of jazz every week on the air. To keep it this way, we should support the DJ's with an occasional card or letter. Jack Walmsley, CKLB, Oshawa, in particular would appreciate some mail.

Send in a request, perhaps. That's all. Peeter Sepp

Coeds Forced to Report After Serious Accidents 2,000 X-Rayed By Service Here

Two students at Victoria College are beginning their second year in first year because of serious auto accidents.

Evelyn Dewar and Barbara Johnson were both hospitalized last year for some weeks, and required extensive recuperative care. They were injured in separate accidents.

Last New Year's Eve, Evelyn

Torontonensis comes from an old druid proverb meaning you can lead a horse to water but you can't make him think.

Dewar was thrown through a car windshield while only one block from her home.

She was in hospital for two weeks and was unable to return to school last year. In August she underwent further treatment.

Evelyn returned to university this year, in first year General Arts.

Barbara Johnson was struck by an automobile as she was crossing the street at Bloor and Avenue Road. Two other girls were also injured.

One girl was bruised, and the other suffered considerable bone injuries. Barbara received a concussion, and was hospitalized for two weeks.

The accident occurred last October 2, and Barbara was also unable to return to university. She was able to re-attend high school, and raise her standings in several subjects.

Barbara is now in first year Social and Philosophical Studies.

At the end of the fifth day of operations, an estimated 2,000 persons have been X-rayed by the University Health Service in its annual chest X-ray program.

With six more days of examinations to follow, a representative of the Health Service said the quota of 5,000 will easily be reached.

Staff and volunteers are to be processed on Friday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., except from 1 to 2.

Chest X-rays are compulsory for first and last-year students, nursing students, medical students and Pre-Dental students. All others are advised to take advantage of the service.

How To Get Away

By TERRY BOURKE
Varsity Staff Reporter

Most students who want to get away from it all find few outlets to channel their curiosity and pent up energy.

But members of the University of Toronto Outing Club have found a way to beat the problem.

The many activities of the club, ranging from mountain climbing to subterranean cave exploration are designed to let the student acquire new skills in a healthy out-of-doors atmosphere.

The club was organized last year and boasts one of the fastest-growing memberships on campus. Supporters from nearly every faculty and college in the university encourage and strengthen its activities.

Last year president Mary Shaffer, III SMC, founded the Outing Club after she attended a convention in the Adirondacks of over 80 outing clubs representing universities in the northeastern part of the continent.

Influenced by the spirit and friendliness of this Inter-Collegiate Outing Club Conference she formed the nucleus of the U of T Chapter last year.

"The Outing Club is a place to meet people and to have fun," Miss Shaffer said. Besides meeting students at U of T, members have an opportunity to make lasting friendships at other universities, when the club takes part in inter-collegiate activities.

Phil Hedwig (II SPS) said there are plenty of students walking around campus itching to camp out and go on hikes.

One feature of the club is "spelunking" or the exploration of caves. Equipped with flashlights and rope, students lower themselves into the depths of a cave. Inside floor, roof, and wall contours are studied for peculiar designs and age.

Mountain climbing has captured the interest of many members in the organization.

Last year, during the Christmas holidays students left for the Adirondacks to try their luck at scaling mountains. Setting up camp a few miles from Lake Placid, the mountaineers spent six days battling the peaks. The highest mountain conquered was 5,000 ft. Mt. Algonquin.

Ron Chisholm (IV SPS) member of the club last year has been climbing mountains for nine years. Born on the edge of the Canadian Rockies, Ron said the mountaineering activities of the club offered a link with the outdoor life I was raised in when I lived in British Columbia.

Chisholm said, "one doesn't just go out and climb mountains like going for a Sunday walk. Mountaineering requires a vast amount of skill and co-ordination. But any one physically fit and with a desire to learn can pick up the skill in no time."

Prospective mountain climbers scale hills and ravines around Toronto under the expert coaching and guidance of members from the Canadian Alpine Club.

The group will join with the McGill Outing Club this winter for a ski-weekend in the Laurentians.

Neophytes and skiing experts will converge at a lodge in the Laurentians for skiing instruction, French Canadian food, and a good time.

Skating parties organized by the club in Hyde Park and the Varsity arena provide students with a chance for an informal get-together.

Two or three times a year students let their hair down and dance to the calls of an old time fiddler, when the club holds square dances, in the Trinity Buttery.

The cost of any outing is less than $10. Transportation expenses are cut by using student cars. Food and incidental costs are minimized because the students themselves prepare everything needed on the trip.

This, then, is the University of Toronto Outing Club. Its a club that offers a challenge to the individual who wants to escape the everyday grind and try something new. It's a starting point on the road to forming new friendships. But most of all it's a place where students meet to enjoy themselves.

Full Weekend Ahead For Toronto Students

There have been no applications for the upcoming McMaster Weekend.

Four U of T students are required to represent Toronto at this exchange weekend sponsored by the National Federation of Canadian University Students. There will be parties and dances (dates supplied — be sure to fill in height on the application) as well as classes and discussions.

Cost of the weekend, including room and board, is $10. Transportation is not included in this fee.

Weekend's chairman Dave Lee said last week that he hoped the students on the campus would support the weekend as it would "promote understanding between students in Canada and the United States."

SOCCE-BLUES WHIP MAC

Rookie Chris Carr Nets Three In Wet, Mud-Splattered Victory

By NORM SHEPHERD
Varsity Staff Reporter

The Varsity Soccer Blues continued on their trend, when they overwhelmed McMaster to the tune of 6-0, yesterday.

The game was played in a down-pour and centre field was a quagmire in which many promising moves terminated.

Varsity adapted themselves better to the treacherous ground conditions, and Chris Carr, making his debut for the Blues, opened the account shortly after the start.

Bill Webb made it 2-0 and shots continued to rain on the McMaster goal till half-time with no further addition to the score.

The second half was a repetition of the first, the greater part of the play being in the central sea of mud at the McMaster end. Ball control was difficult and both defences had difficulty in clearing their lines in customary manner. Chris Carr scored his second goal of the match and shortly later was unceremoniously bowled over in the mud, Bruon Bertolin converting the resultant penalty kick.

Roy Greene, who played like a trojan, revelled in the mud, and scored with a long-range shot on goal which deceived the McMaster keeper.

Emil Primorac closed the scoring with a close-in kick.

Considering the conditions Varsity can be pleased with their performance and await the clash with McGill on Saturday with confidence.

their winning way with a 5-1 victory over McMaster, Hilgenberg, Grant, McKenzie, Mahon and Walker accounted for the Varsity goals, for the loss of one.

On Friday, Varsity Senior soccer team travels to Montreal to consolidate their championship aspirations. Team will meet under the clock at Union Station at 3:30 p.m. prompt.

Notice for the Intermediate game against Ryerson will be intimated in tomorrow's issue of The Varsity.

ISC May Renovate Reed Point System

As the Interfaculty athletic year progresses, the phrase T. A. Reed Trophy will become a more and more common expression in college cafeterias and faculty foyers.

The Reed Trophy is awarded each year as an intramural "all-year High Point Championship" to the college or faculty amassing the greatest total of points in all sports.

The trophy, named after the late Thomas Arthur Reed, for many years financial secretary of the University of Toronto Athletic Association, was first presented for competition in 1936.

It was won for the first time by Trinity College, from where Mr. Reed, who died last year, had graduated in 1901. Trinity won the Trophy again in 1957-58.

All told, 14 colleges and faculties now compete for the championship. To provide interesting and fair competition, these colleges and faculties have been formed in two divisions.

The larger units compete in the First Division and the small ones in the Second Division. Registration figures are used as a basis for establishing classification of colleges, but many other tangible and intangible factors which may have a bearing on the athletic success of a college or faculty are taken into consideration.

To outline in detail the complete scoring system would be impossible, but it has been geared to operate in fairest measure toward all competitors.

This year's Intramural Sports Committee, embracing representatives from each college and faculty, is discussing renovation of the system to keep pace with changing standards.

Under the chairmanship of John Bowles (Law), the ISC meets in about a week's time to hold further debate on the matter.

Interfaculty Summary

Trinity B blanked St. Mike's B, 5-0, in Interfaculty soccer play yesterday. Lennox and Mueller each counted twice for the winning Panthers, with Northgrave adding a singleton.

Skule Thirds pulled an upset, downing Junior SPS, 4-2, on goals by Walton, Haessler, Lau and Doe-neh.

In lacrosse play, Skule Seconds whipped Meds Seconds, 7-3. Betty led the winners with a hat-trick, followed by Dawson with two. Simpkins and Bakke netted the other SPS goals. Orchard had two for Doctors, with Hambley counting one.

Skule A defeated St. Mike's A, 15-13, in volleyball play. The Varsity regrets that due to an error in reporting assignment, there was not a reporter at yesterday's Interfaculty football game between Junior Skule and Dents.

Somewhat startling news issued forth from the Western Mustang range this week with the word that Coach John Metras has reverted to the old Diamond-T formation made famous by a pair of characters called John Girvin and Don Getty.

Why? That's a question falling from many lips as eager Varsity fans keep close tab on their favorites during the days preceding that crucial game in London a week from Saturday.

There are several possible answers, but two stand out as more probable than the others. First, Metras lacks backfielders. Second, he's panicking.

Halfback George Shepherd is through for the season, and Lionel Conacher is lacking the trim shape all Little Trains should have. They were both key men in Western's starting backfield.

But Metras still has Lorne Forstner, Meco Poliziani, Roger Stewart and a couple of others that have run the offensive positions, and quite capably, too.

However, Conacher is human, and can't be expected to carry the whole team on his back (whether that team be his own or the determined Varsity Blues).

Lack of bench strength, then, may be a prime factor in the decision to bring back the Diamond-T.

And then there's the second suggestion. Changing horses in mid-stream can be a good move, on occasion, but when your football team has its back jammed against the wall, the wisdom of the move is questionable.

In the two Varsity-Western games to date, Mustangs have been unimpressive. Art Turner has shown very little at the quarterback position, and Frank Cosentino has entered the game too late to spark his club.

Blues' stalwart defensive squad has held Conacher in rein, and experienced little difficulty with the rest of the Mustang backfield. These discrepancies have, apparently, been noticed by Metras.

It's a tough decision for a coach to make. Should he continue with what he has, and attempt to sharpen the weak points, or should he gamble on a wholesale change?

Metras has chosen the latter, and with the tenseness of the situation, it's not a particularly safe gamble. He has only little more than a week to accustom his charges to a new formation.

Saturday's game between Western and McGill in London is opportunity for Mustangs to work out the New Deal, and will give Metras a testing ground for his revived formation.

Under the new pattern, Cosentino remains in his usual T-formation quarterback position, with Turner back about six or seven yards in the tailback, or, as you would, fullback, slot.

Between the two, and forming the other points of the diamond, are twin halfbacks, presumably Conacher and Stewart. The fifth backfielder operates as a flanker left or right as the case may be.

Great advantage of the formation is the momentary confusion of the opposition as to who has the ball, Cosentino or Turner. It is apparently Metras' idea to exploit that moment.

But Varsity coach Dalt White has one big strike in his favor, that being the presence of defensive end Gene Chorostecki, "Stick", has played against the Diamond-T, and with his general football sense, should have little difficulty interpreting the play.

But there are 27 other Varsity players, and it will require no little amount of coaching to instill proper defence of the new formation, as well as the dangers inherent in the twin-quarterback threat.

In conclusion, it would appear to this observer that Metras has placed undue emphasis on the wrong weakness. Blues have scored 64 points in the two games, thereby indicating a shortage in Mustang defensive strength.

It's all very well to play for the breaks to score your points, but 30 points for your side aren't much help if the opposition scores 36. And that's the average figure Varsity has piled up in four games to date.

Good luck, John. Better luck, Dalt.

HELLO, HOCKEY FANS . . .

Although Gene Glisky, former junior hockey competitor, and now ace hockey writer with our journal, will bring all Intercollegiate senior followers up to date next week, now is the time for a few comments of hockey at a lower level.

Several years ago, Varsity Seconds, or Baby Blues, or Whites (they change names like a new papa handling diapers), were in an Intercollegiate intermediate league.

Unfortunately, our boys were always a bit strong, and when the other teams gathered together in the cellar once too often, lack of balance caused collapse of the league.

University athletic officials then entered the Seconds in the Toronto Hockey League Major Series, along with Kingsway Lumber, Pickin' Chicken and Lyndhurst Motors.

Playing youngsters against worn-out pros is not conducive to good hockey conduct, and this the Baby Blues found out, midst flying elbows, sticks and curses.

Last year, several smaller colleges in Ontario gathered together and gave birth to the Ontario Intercollegiate Athletic Conference. Included in the project was a hockey league.

Not included was the Varsity Second team.

This year, Blues' coach Jack Kennedy made an effort to enter Baby Blues in the league. Yesterday, the answer came back. A big, round, flat NO.

The reason? It is apparently a blow to the pride of the ice squads from McMaster, OAC, Ryerson, Osgoode, etc. to play against a "second" team from another college. It is apparently NOT fear that Varsity will be too strong.

Messrs. Nose-in-the-Air: Intercollegiate sport is not experiencing its smoothest times. Couldn't we let pride step down a notch and give common sense a bit of room?

The situation may be more critical than you think.

Title To Trinity In Girls' Swim

By SHIRLEY WRIGHT

Amid tidal waves and splashes, Interfaculty swimmers watched Trinity girls emerge breathless but victorious from Hart House pool last night.

Participation from all faculties reached an all-time high this year with a greater emphasis on team strength than on individuals.

Some girls however, cannot pass unnoticed. Janet Medland (Trinity), last year's Intercollegiate synchronized champion, gained three firsts in strokes, figures and solo routine for 19 points and was awarded the cup for the individual winner.

Valerie Lewis (PHE), won firsts in the individual medley and 50 yard free-style, to tie with Sue Evans (Victoria), for second place with 12 points in the individual swimmer competition. Pam Hill (Trinity) and Bev Westman (Victoria), both of whom have seen Intercollegiate swimming meets at close range, tied for third place with nine points each.

Shirley German, a dark horse from P&OT, set a new record in the 25 yards butterfly race with a time of 18.7 seconds. The previous record of 18.9 seconds was set last year by Janice Cunningham of Nursing.

Tension mounted as the meet neared its close and saw Trinity, Victoria, and PHE alternating positions for first place in the struggle for the cup. The final free-style relay was the deciding factor. Trinity led for three lengths by about a foot when Janet Medland, whose speed equals her style, sprinted to the finish to give victory to the Saints.

Victoria, second in both the relay and the meet, trailed Trinity by a mere three points. The final score was: Trinity 40, Victoria 37, PHE 34, and POTS 14.

Neutrality To US Speaker Suggests

Honorary visitor to the Hart House debate tonight will be James M. Minifie, Resident Washington Correspondent for the Toronto Telegram and Canadian Broadcasting Corp.

The question for debate will be "Neutrality is Canada's best contribution to hemispheric defence."

Mr. Minifie has had wide experience in the fields of defence and armed services. He joined the Canadian Army during World War I at the age of 15, and served with the Officer Special Service during World War II.

Between the two wars he covered the Spanish Civil War from the Republican side and was at one time captured by General Franco's forces.

In an address to the Women's Canadian Club on Sept. 25th, Mr. Minifie advised Canada to be neutral with respect to the problems of the United States.

He suggested that Canadian troops should be withdrawn from Europe, and said that "Canada is now nothing more than a satellite of the U.S."

Mr. Minifie will speak during the debate in the Debates Room at 8 p.m.

Urge Chinese Students Contact Overseas Club

Henry Wong, president of the U of T Chinese Overseas Students' Association yesterday urged Chinese students at the U of T to contact him this week if they have not yet registered in the club.

This, he said, will facilitate distribution of a booklet of activities and plans as well as a directory.

Wong said 30 newcomers were present last week at the club's first meeting this year, attended by more than 70.

Wong can be reached at WA 2-1531 between 6.30 and 8.30 p.m.

SPEAKER at last night's Hart House debate, James M. Minifie, noted Canadian journalist, hammers home a point during the argument on Canadian neutrality.

Debaters Say No To Any Neutrality

Canada's position as a secondary power that must take a secondary role to the United States in world affairs was hotly debated in Hart House last night.

J. M. Minifie, Washington correspondent for the Canadian Broadcasting Corp. was honorary visitor at a Hart House debate on the resolution "Neutrality is Canada's best contribution to hemispheric defence."

The motion was defeated by a vote of 45 to 58.

Steve Clarkson, (IV Trinity), speaking for the affirmative, said the problem facing the world was not Russia but the "nervous U.S." He said Canada could not support the present dangerously-aggressive American policy.

"Mr. Pearkes sold Canada's birthright of independent action for the tasty mess of pottage of NORAD," he said.

Sid Peck (II Law), speaking for the Noes, attacked the attitude that the U.S. is the aggressive power.

"The United States may stumble," he said, "but it is important that we not confuse the bumbling idiocies of a man like Dulles with the outrageous crimes of Khrushchev."

First Noes speaker, Tony Charlton (IV UC) said neutrality was amoral. If we believed in the traditions of the West we should be willing to defend the West," he said.

We are associated with the U.S.

not in defence of the West but in defence of continental United States, guest speaker Minifie said. He said the DEW line warns the U.S. of the approach of aircraft only when they are already over Canada.

Second speaker for the Ayes, G. L. Lee felt neutrality was worth a try. "It is better than spending as much as we are preparing for a war we probably won't survive," he said.

La Rotonde Sans Editors Administrators Oust Three

OTTAWA—CUP—Three more student editors have been fired from the University of Ottawa's La Rotonde — bringing to five the number of La Rotonde editors fired within the last five months.

A public notice distributed on the campus announced Louis Cliche, Pierre Trudel and Roger Roy had been dismissed from their posts on the Editorial Board.

The mimeographed letter was signed by Rev. Leonard Ducharme, dean of students.

Just last Monday the three editors had been unanimously approved by the Students' Federation as editors for this year.

Cause of the firing was publication three weeks ago of the opening issue of La Rotonde. The issue contained a full report on La Rotonde — written by Normand Lacharite, one of the two editors fired last summer.

Lacharite and Jean David were fired for a special anniversary issue they wrote, leveling heavy criticism at the university for "paternalism".

Father Ducharme's letter said the University "regrets to be obliged to forbid to the present members of the Editorial Board any participation in any way in the activities of La Rotonde."

The action was taken "to ensure the maintenance of good relations between the student body and the university."

"To ensure also that in the interests of the student body the journalistic process used by La Rotonde be consistent with professional ethics" — the three were fired, he said.

Criticising the issue published three weeks ago, the letters said the editors made "no distinction between editorial and news", and had not been "limited to facts while speaking of student activities."

Publication of the report from Lacharite was censured by Father Ducharme.

The report had been presented to the council, but no action had been taken on its contents by the elected council. Without waiting for a council decision, the three editors had published the full report.

Lacharite had explained the special issue published by he and David last year which resulted in their dismissals.

In accepting the applications of Cliche, Trudel, and Roy last Monday the council had criticized publication of the report.

They were elected unanimously by council members to fill the vacant editorial board. The three had been filling in for David and Lacharite, both of whom were scheduled to be active in La Rotonde this year.

Some action on yesterday's dismissals may be taken by the Students' Federation, it was reported, but it is not known what form this would take.

All the firings have been through senior administrative officers of University of Ottawa — not by the Students' Federation which appoints editors.

Dominion Status Sought West Indian PM Says

The first Prime Minister of the West Indian Federation last night told people who criticize the Federation's failure to achieve "Dominion status" to take a look at its budget.

Speaking to the West Indian Students' Association, Sir Grantley Adams said the present balance of some $600,000 was not even enough to defend the Federation.

But, he said, to be a dominion like Canada and Australia "is our aim."

The constitution of the West Indian Federation is unique, as it provides for its own complete revision within five years, he said.

A strong central government would diminish the great differences between the islands, he said, but "we should not hasten the coming into being of a new constitution without trying out more of the old one."

"By June all the flaws should be spotted."

The founder of the Barbados Labor Party named "poverty and small revenues" as his country's chief problem.

"Apathy is not their greatest difficulty. Finance is."

These problems are difficult to solve in a short time, but "with goodwill," he said, "you can solve anything."

The prime minister asked West Indian students to return to the islands and help build up the federation. Their return to the West Indies, he said, "is a challenge to show that unselfishness is not dead in the world."

Appeal Still Half Short

With a weekend left for campaigning, United Appeal passed the half-way mark last night, but returns were still far short of the $10,000 quota.

Grand total of returns last night was $5,080.

The Faculty of Dentistry, School of Social Work and School of Graduate Studies still showed no returns last night.

Trinity College will continue with its raffle of Blues star Tim Reid until the campaign is officially ended, a spokesman said.

Elsewhere on the campus, canvassing returns made up the total. No plans for faculty and college UA events have been announced.

Serious Repercussion From Raids Zeta Psi Threatens Police Action

At least one fraternity has threatened police action, and more are growing angry over a recent onslaught of thefts.

Most irate of the fraternities is Zeta Psi, the front door of which was stolen last night; House manager Bob Morgan said last night the raiders are now dealing with larger issues.

"If the door isn't back by Monday morning," he said, "there will be serious repercussions."

A statement supposedly from the "Big Seven Renegades" yesterday listed five thefts committed by the society.

The note, delivered to The Varsity, denied any connection with fraternities not mentioned in the note.

Admitted thefts include: a door plaque from Pi Lambda Phi, a sign from Phi Delta Epsilon, a silver plaque from Sigma Alpha Mu, an athletic cup from Beta Sigma Rho, and a charter from Rho Pi Phi.

Articles missing from other fraternities include a picture, a trophy and a set of poker chips.

Beta Theta Pi and Sigma Chi are among other fraternities hit. Zeta members, who threaten police action, say they have no idea who stole their door.

Meanwhile, an anonymous tip last night said the Renegades will give $10 to United Appeal "as proof of their good faith."

Classes will be cancelled from 3 p.m. on today in honor of the inauguration of President Claude Bissell.

For those who are unable to attend the actual ceremony, a host of special lectures will mark the occasion.

Victoria College Professor Northrop Frye will lecture on "Humanities in a New World" at 3.30 p.m. in the Hart House theatre.

Simultaneously, two visiting authorities will lecture in other parts of the university.

Harvard University Prof. Clyde Kluckhohn will speak on "The Scientific Study of Values" in Cody Hall, and Cambridge University Prof. V. B. Wigglesworth will talk on "Science: Pure and Applied" in Rm. 102, New Mechanical Bldg.

At 5 p.m. university organist Healey Willan will give a recital in Convocation Hall.

The presidential installation at 8.30 p.m. in Convocation Hall will culminate the day's events.

The day begins much earlier for the many special delegates converging on U of T from universities throughout Canada, the United States and Britain.

Throughout the morning, they will be registering in Hart House. At 12.30 p.m. they will bring greetings to the president at a special Hart House luncheon.

Saturday President Bissell will receive student representatives at breakfast, delegates at lunch, and 2,500 members of the staff in the afternoon.

At the inauguration, honorary degrees will be conferred upon Gerhard Herzberg, a National Research Council director; Irene Lussier, University of Montreal rector; William Lewis Morton, University of Manitoba history department head.

World Affairs Confab Meets

Applications open today for next month's McGill Conference on World Affairs.

Two U of T students will be chosen to represent Toronto at the four-day conference. Applications will be accepted until Tuesday, and no extension of the deadline can be arranged.

Theme of this year's conference is Canadian-American relations.

External Affairs Minister Sidney Smith will deliver the conference keynote address Nov. 12. Dr. Smith is a former U of T president.

Cost of the conference will be shared by McGill and U of T. Delegates pay a $5 registration fee.

French With Socialist Fears

By JOHN GRAY

Quebec CCFer Michel Chartrand blasted everyone in political sight yesterday, but concentrated most of his barrage on Quebec Premier Maurice Duplessis.

"He doesn't bother about liberty or democracy or morals," said the veteran labor leader. "He has no morals whatsoever."

In the past Ottawa leaders like St. Laurent have played with the question of provincial autonomy. Now Prime Minister Diefenbaker is playing the same game in cahoots with Duplessis, Chartrand charged.

Chartrand, who has been a dominant figure in Quebec labor circles for many years, has been thrown in jail for "illegal—that's the word" labor activities.

He has also figured in court actions challenging the validity of certain laws passed by the provincial government. Last night he addressed the campus CCF club.

All these efforts, he said, have been delayed indefinitely — "the government is not interested to know whether the laws they pass are good or not good," he charged.

With strong control of legislative and executive branches of government, "we have a feeling he has the judicial power too — he names most of the judges," he said.

The problem of possible government control of the judiciary is a problem which will be tackled by the Quebec CCFers—the Social Democratic Party—in the near future, Chartrand said.

The whole Quebec political situation is an illustration of capitalism. "The people have been fooled for several generations, and they realize what capitalism is and what its evils are."

But Quebecers' minds cannot be changed over night. They require education before they will be able to unite to overthrow the existing government.

Right now the people are confused by the political situation, they have nothing to turn to. Liberals and Union Nationale regimes are both corrupt or have been in the past.

"Duplessis tries to fool the people, but he doesn't fool them as much as he thinks. Only 50 per cent of them turn out to vote," Chartrand charged.

The labor front is not united because people not accustomed to labor dealings and current wages take whatever jobs they are offered if they have to work, he said.

All workers are aware of the evils of capitalism in Quebec which are like the evils in the governments of the rest of Canada, he said.

Staff members of the Quebec Federation of Labor and the Canadian and Catholic Confederation of Labor are all card-carrying members of the Social Democratic party, he said.

The problem of passing the leaders' ideas down to the workers must be solved before labor can voice any united protest, he said.

On the question of federal grants Chartrand said he thought Quebec should take money from federal sources — but not the existing National Conference of Canadian Education.

Members of the NCCU are giving money to the universities, not to the students, where it is most needed. They are not conscious of the right to go to university or the right to free education, he said.

Control of federal money for education should be vested with the elected representatives, not with an independent body like the NCCU, he said. Complete fiscal centralization is the aim of the party.

"The federal government has a right to see that there is a good standard of education through the country," he said.

QUEBEC CCFer Michel Chartrand chats with University of Montreal student Francine Laurendeau, one of the famous three who struck out against Duplessis last spring.

A Women's Union

By SALLY BAMBRIDGE
Varsity Staff Reporter

There is no uncertainty this time. A dream of 30 years has finally been realized and a new $2,000,000 Women's Athletic Building is under way.

With the excavation completed, steel framework almost finished and concrete for the swimming pool poured, officials predict it should be completed by the fall of 1959.

The building, located at the southwest corner of Harbord and Huron, is the first on the "new campus" which will soon spread westward from St. George St.

The hardships which women athletes have endured for the last 30 years will end with its completion. Up to now, women have had to make the best of the inadequate facilities of buildings ranging from the Drill Hall on St. George to the Eaton's Girls' Club at 416 Yonge.

Four swimming pools, none of which are of adequate size or depth, are now being used for aquatics. Six buildings are being used at present for sports and gymnastics and many of these have to be shared with groups not connected with the university.

In the past, the university swimming team has had to travel to Hamilton in order to practice in a regulation pool.

Not more than 700 of the 3,000 women enrolled at U of T can participate in voluntary athletics because there just isn't room.

But this is soon to be remedied. Featuring the largest gymnasium on campus — it provides for badminton, two tennis courts, volleyball, basketball and indoor baseball, the building will be the focal point for all women's athletics at the university.

Perhaps its most exciting aspect is the huge Olympic-size swimming pool. Measuring 75 feet by 42, it is larger and more modern than the Hart House pool; features two diving boards, underwater lighting and a glassed-in underwater observation station for viewing diving.

A heated bench for competitors runs the full width of the pool; bleachers at the sides seat over 150 and a canoe and surfboards can be stored underneath. Men haven't been left out of the plans. They have their own entrance to the building and are eligible for use of the pool and gymnasium at specified times.

Next year will see a program of mixed swimming, badminton and other co-ed activities. The spacious co-ed common room and gymnasium will come in handy here.

The lower floor of the split-level building boasts five team dressing rooms, over 2,000 lockers, Athletic Association offices and lecture rooms equipped with audio-visual teaching aids.

Despite the high cost of the building, Miss Zerada Slack, Director of Women's Athletics and Physical Education, says, there will be no additional strain on university finances.

The need for a Women's Athletic Building has been evident since 1919 when Hart House was built. From then on, several sites were suggested and plans drawn up.

They finally materialized this year and work began. The September cement masons strike blocked progress for several weeks but, barring further complications, U of T's woman athletes should be properly housed next year.

the World
this Week

Our violent world began the week as the Roman Catholic church initiated its ritualistic search for a new spiritual ruler. At the end of the week, the successor for Pope Pius XII still unknown, troubled mankind inspected itself once more under the light of yet another product of his science: the United States latest satellite, Beacon.

If the events of the week indicated anything it was this: that the human predicament does not change substantially with individual actions.

The actions of U.S. state secretary Dulles in his trip to Taipei to confer with President Chiang Kai-shek of the so-called Nationalist government of China, began auspiciously. As Dulles and cohort arrived at the president's home in Formosa, a New York Times reporter recounts, three gardeners rose from their tasks and raised their thumbs upright "in a smiling tribute to their visitors."

On the same day, Tuesday, the Formosan-claimed offshore islands continued to endure a pounding artillery bombardment from the Red-Chinese mainland after the ending of the Red cease-fire of two weeks.

By yesterday, however, Chiang, after three days with diplomat Dulles, had renounced the use of force as the principal way of returning to the mainland.

The communiqué, issued jointly with Dulles, also brought the U.S. a step closer to committing itself to defence of the Nationalist stronghold, a policy which has already put President Eisenhower in hot water and becomes steadily more suicidal as the 1960 presidential elections looms.

At home, as bejewelled heiresses wondered "why not?" and the occasional ordinary Joe wondered "why?", the much-vaunted Canadian Social Register rolled off the press.

The notorious teamsters' union, already thoroughly discredited in the United States, came under fire in Ontario from Mr. Justice W. D. Roach, head of a Royal Commission on union activities here.

The teamsters, the Justice revealed, had used intimidation and outright violence to coerce non-union truckers here in a strike a year ago. But the guilty union men are apparently immune to prosecution through statute of limitations and will go their way unhampered as they have in the United States.

In Arnprior, Ont., yesterday, Yankee-style juvenile violence erupted as 36 teen-agers fought it out in a field with knives, bicycle chains and clubs.

This morning, the world watches the course of the satellite Beacon through space. A success or a dud, the satellite in delicate no more than the smallest incident of the week of where we are going and what we are doing.

—MARK NICHOLS.

A variety of insults have been regularly hurled at the supposed heads of university editors and student journalism in general. It's a bit of an undergraduate game, and sometimes highly successful.

But something they never find is lack of scope in the editorial columns. Like a bull in a clover greenhouse, the student editor takes a sly bite at anything within his reach which appears edible and ripe for comment.

For the past few weeks the Queen's Journal has been patting Queen's on the back for being generally a fine university with fine fellows in it. They have pointed to the recent squabbles between the Universities of Ottawa and Carleton as a contrast.

Fantastic episodes by undergraduate pranksters in Carleton drew supreme criticism from the Journal: "The vandalism was a stupid action . . . the cause of higher education is bound to be damaged."

Praising the recent Quarathon as an antidote to vandalism, as Queen's constructive hi-jinx, the Journal seemed to forget completely about the painted decorations still adorning Varsity stadium after repeated Gael's visits.

Down in the cod country at Memorial University of Newfoundland, The Muse has arched its traditional back and come out four-square behind the university's practice of wearing academic gowns.

The gown is a symbol of tradition, says The Muse, and should be maintained as part of the university: "If we have no tradition in our universities we have not a university but a machine turning out individual units whose only point of similarity is that they have all been through the same mill."

Honest John Diefenbaker took an honest thumping from the men behind the headlines of University of New Brunswick's student paper.

"To put it mildly, and as charitably as possible, Prime Minister Diefenbaker's convocation address was a disappointment," says The Brunswickian.

Then, unkindest cut of all: "At one point during his address, Mr. Diefenbaker paid glowing tribute to the adventurous minds of today's young people. Perhaps, as one professor put it, the Prime Minister should employ one of them as a ghost writer."

for all time

When society elects or appoints a man to a position of leadership and responsibility, it expects from that man a statement of aims and policy.

Frequently such statements become mere formalities of tradition. But this in no way diminishes their significance.

Tonight, Dr. Claude T. Bissell will make such a statement.

During an installation ceremony graced by quiet academic dignity, he will outline his hopes and fears, his plans and ambitions for the years to come. He will state, for all to remember, his understanding of his position as leader of the largest university in the nation.

It will be the most important speech he will ever be called upon to make as President of the University of Toronto.

The speech itself must range wide and near across all the diverse elements of which this university is composed. All three levels of university society must be covered and the institution's relation to the rest of the community clarified.

Dr. Bissell is not an amateur when it comes to making speeches. In the course of his career he has addressed many bodies on many different topics.

In the few weeks he has been here he has clearly demonstrated his ability to turn a phrase and at the same time give added weight and significance to what he is saying.

But other speeches, once made and understood, are in the course of time forgotten.

Dr. Bissell's speech tonight will be remembered. It will be a policy statement, a blueprint and a philosophy of life all rolled into one.

For it is by this speech the future will judge him—and society demands that he make it at the beginning of his career.

We wish him the very best of luck.

The fall of a great house has that same dignified sadness with which we mark the passing of a great era or the death of a great leader.

In the 39 years since its completion, Hart House, its traditions and its institutions, have achieved a measure of greatness on this campus.

During those weary, varied years, generation after generation of undergraduates have rested, exercised, entertained their spirits and satisfied their souls within its walls.

And throughout those same years, the "House" has firmly resisted countless attacks from every quarter upon its masculine heritage.

Today comes news that Hart House has fallen.

Because of some silly confusion in a library committee meeting about the sex of Jay Macpherson, the hallowed traditions of nearly 40 years will crumble into dust.

For quite without realizing it, the members of the committee formally invited a woman to address them.

After smaller errors of diplomacy, have greater empires fallen.

But we are proud to note that Hart House, now in its darkest hour, still retains a measure of its former majesty.

No women will be allowed to hear Jay Macpherson speak.

teaching — the great facts of His redemptive life, death and resurrection (out of which developed the New Testament) and the two great Sacraments or signs of His redemptive work, Baptist and Holy Communion. The Anglican Church has always striven to give both the word of Christ and His Sacraments their proper emphasis. There have been, quite naturally since we are all erring humans, tendencies to emphasize one above the other; but there are always forces at work to bring the Church back to the balance our reformers stressed.

Secondly, the Anglican Church has, since the 16th century, tried to keep itself free of error, but at the same time to maintain itself as part of the mainstream of Christendom. That is why our Church has always deplored the rejection of episcopacy, for the order of bishop has always been the focus of Christian unity in the Body of Christ, His Church.

Since then, I have come to know many more of the features of the Church which I had grown to love, a brief appreciation of which follows.

First, the Anglican Church is both catholic and protestant, which results in the balanced emphasis of its ministry. When Christ ascended to His Father, He left on earth a small group of followers who were soon to be filled with the Holy Ghost. This group was, in fact, His Holy Catholic Church which He left as the steward of His

An Anglican Apology

Our bishops are the fathers in God of our people; they are more than administrators or overseers. It is perhaps hard for a non-Catholic to realize how important to us our bishops are; to lose them would be to lose something of the character and spirit of our Church. More important, to reject episcopacy would be for us an act of schism, a rending of the Body of Christ; in our bishops, we have a potent unifying force, which we believe all Christians should have.

The Anglican Church cannot, any more than any other Church, claim to be the Catholic or universal Church; but we do claim that we have tried in our ecclesiastical fabric to maintain and be loyal to the principles of Catholicity. The Church of God is basically one, but in its actual manifestations it has been divided for many centuries. This is an unhappy situation, and we have been in the forefront of movements trying to effect union.

The present Archbishop of Canterbury has described the Anglican Church as scriptural, traditional and reforming; scriptural because we believe the Bible to contain the fundamental facts of the Christian faith; traditional because we have remained part of the growing movement of the historical Church from the time of our Lord; and reforming because we realize that we are sinful and finite beings, who are apt at any time to distort the truth or to fail to grasp the whole of it.

Today there are many strains and tensions within our communion; we are, within our own order, embarked upon a great ecumenical venture. It is difficult to be at all times and in a proper relation scriptural, traditional and reforming as well as sacramental; and we must admit that we have not always kept the proper balance. Yet this is our aim, and on these principles we believe Christian unity must be built.

Ed Lacey

by John Robert Colombo

Who is Ed Lacey? If he were only a poet, I would need say no more, since the selection of poems on this page speaks for itself. However Lacey is more than a poet — he is an artist

Orpheus; For Ricky Nelson

The singer, last metamorphosis;—a boy
Who shuns the crowd and likes to drive fast cars;
His long legs quiver to the swift guitar's
Back-beat; the trained hips function with no joy;
Do we sense the god in his beardless dreaming face,
His self-adorning smile, beyond surprise?
Only in something mortal in the eyes,
Their too clear guardedness, their depthless gaze.

And his song;—catch the innocent mindless words;
"Stood up. Poor little fool. Now she's gone."
The adolescent face grows soft; the herds
Moan and whine like sick dogs upon his playing;
Bright hair 'ls hanging down; the hills are swaying;
The dancers surge; the dark night marches on.

whose expression is his way of life.

To Lacey the poet is not a literary man, neither a professor nor a critic. And only one thing can definitely be stated about Lacey's poet; he is sensitive.

This is the key word. Just as his perfect poet is sensitive, Lacey is sensitive. He cultivates the experiences of life as the gardener his narcissus, as the street cleaner his daily toil.

But exactly what is Lacey responsive to? Since he prefers Little Richard to William Shakespeare, it is obvious that he is in love with the modern world, with the world of rhythm and blues, gang wars and quiet contemplation — in short, with the world of 1958.

In addition, Lacey somehow manages to resolve the chaos of

But most of this is obvious — and much better expressed — in the poems themselves. I need only add that Lacey's voice is a new one and a strong one. With

The singer: last metamorphosis

Poem

Snow was falling in my mind
's still city, frettered by no wind.

It fell on parks and tenements, old men in windowless basements.

A gust flung handfuls at a street where waterfront and river meet.

Someone said "nowadays they call it a blizzard: if two inches fall."

Roucouling pigeons fluttered gray, horses coracoled close of day.

Night came, and I shall never know who stood beside me in the snow by a parked car; time covered me until I could not turn to see who waited; but a gull flew traced the changeless contours of a face unseen so long—then numbness grew tender as touch—till a wind blew and scattered doves of touch and town to parking lots of summer dawn.

Convalescence

A season of contentment follows pain's
Bright arid summer; folded days disclose
A nerveless calm;—and this is convalescence,
Spidering down time's web into senescence,
On sunlit mornings, when in empty yards
Leaves play, nor yet the heart dons winter clothes.
And this is time, though time of sand, not stone;
To see a house of cardboard turn to cards,
The cards whirl into alice leaves away;
The selfward eye turns timeward, knows each day
A bird: that's flying or a bird that's flown,
Until the hurt heart wakes to love again.

Nada

This July day,
A great opal
Arranging itself around nothing.

Like a looking-glass for the heat,
To center it in one spot,
This room.

I got up at two o'clock;
There was nothing to do.
This is an alien city.

But now a boy with gold hair
Has driven a spinning bicycle
Down the still street.

The Sleeper

In the cold room, the clock, the creaking bed,
The sleeper, tranced in self, by time unwasted;
Without, a tree of dreams, tapping the misted Window of self,—the life you might have led,
The love you might have lived, but you are dead—;

A pigeon hope beats vain wings on the glass
And in a mirror days and faces pass
And vanish, as a season's leaves are shed.
No words; were words to say, what ear would listen?

Though love may sing in false dreams spilled at dawn,
No road you'll ever find winds back to summer;

But you are happy, sleeper, in your slumber;
Time dies; winter begins to glaze and glisten
The illimitable sudden gap of gone.

Delicado

This is a portrait rung from adolescence;
Hamunculus beneath his bell of glass, carcus Tamburlaine, his vitreous manhood
Clutched in the manhood hands of dream.
Heart-hued cranes slide through a landscape
julep-green,
And he its leprechaun, dancing enano,
A bowing punchy, nigger-mexicano,
Shoke him, he grinds, men, boogie-woogie doll.

The boy leans tumbling from a turning tower
Into the lovely lady's curven arms,
Plummets, waterfalls, finds his lost girlhood,
An emerald punned upon her wheeling breasts.

Drag up the dance, orquesta, in this garden
Where all is glass and all the ladies false
Will flee before the day's encalderoned car,
While miners of pyrites tramp a kingdom;
But, brooming down the spiders of a fête,
Stoop not where, hugging his cracked golden innocence,

A seven-coated fairy sinks in grass
And, buoyless, bell-less and undolphined, drowns.

From Heine

I shall not cry! The heart may break, but I Love, love forever! I shall not cry!
Burn now for others in your splendid sin;
No sun shall ever pierce the night within.
I knew it all. I saw through every art;
I saw the darkness flower in your heart,
The snake that gnaws your heart, and twines
below;

I saw, my love, your hopeless, endless woe.

Ashkenazy: Sustained Touch

On Wednesday night, Soviet-born pianist Vladimir Ashkenazy gave a remarkable demonstration of his talents at Massey Hall.

The 22-year-old prize-winning artist did full justice to a well-rounded but difficult program which consisted of Brahms, Chopin, Liszt, Rachmaninoff and Prokofieff.

The Brahms Variation and Fugue on a Theme by Handel entails almost every conceivable piano technique; the piece is a good study, especially in tone, intricate runs, octave passages, and even a delicacy of approach to interpret the beautifully simple main theme which recurs periodically. It takes some adjustment to blend each of these distinct elements together, but Ashkenazy artistically achieved a unified whole.

The fourth Chopin scherzo, brimming over with continental merriment as it does, was interpreted with unusual freshness and vigor, while the third Nocturne lacked nothing of the romantic musing so typically Chopinesque.

The Liszt "Mephisto Waltz", on the other hand, demanded, and received, an entirely different approach. It is an excellent example of a tone study, for heavy chords and octaves follow one another in rapid succession throughout.

The Prokofieff Sonata No. 7 is, comparatively speaking, a modern work. Yet, like the other selections of the program, it was another way of demonstrating Ashkenazy's extraordinary musical abilities. The first and third parts of the sonata involve variations of tone as well as jumps and intricate passages which can only be played by lightning-quick movements of the hands. The second part, the Andante, is primarily a slow movement which, surprisingly enough, takes a great deal of time to perfect in practicing, owing to the necessity of emphasizing the theme while continuing the legato, or sustained touch, with the other fingers.

Ashkenazy was able to give such a fine performance, no doubt, because of the control he obviously had over his instrument. There was never a moment's hesitation throughout the whole program, as his fingers touched the keys and demanded nothing less than the best of responses.

Liberals vs PC's Debate Date Set

After several weeks of protracted exchanges and the issuance of numerous challenges to other campus political parties, the campus Liberal Club has announced a date for its two-way debate with the campus Progressive Conservatives. Club president Jim Doris last night said the Liberals have agreed to meet the PCs next Thursday night in a debate on the topic "resolved that the Frost government is aged, incompetent and irresponsible".

The debate, to be held in Trinity's Convocation Hall, will get underway at 8 p.m. next Thursday, Nov. 1st.

The Liberal leader added that a proposed tri-party debate between all three campus political groups had been turned down by the Liberals.

The Liberals will debate with the campus CCPCs on the topic "the world of today has no need for socialism" at a later date, Doris said.

Gordon Ross (I Law) and Jeremy Johnson (IV Trinity) will represent the PC club in next week's debate. The Liberal club has not yet named its speakers for the debate.

Campus Liberals yesterday held elections to fill two vacant posts on the club's executive. Clair Lewis (II Vic) was elected Publicity Director and Marguerite LeMay (III SMC) was named treasurer.

speaker for the first library evening of the season, Nov. 6.

Never doubting the masculinity of the name, members approved the suggestion and at the same time voted not to admit women to the event.

Female admission to every library evening depends on a board of stewards decision. Women have usually been able to attend in the past but the board voted to bar them this time as an experiment. It was not until after the meeting that the board realized it had goofed — horribly. Jay Macpherson is very definitely a woman, don't at a Vic women's residence, in fact!

Now they are faced with the ironical situation of having a normally mixed event attended solely by men and addressed, for the first time in the glorious male history of Hart House, by a woman.

Here, for the benefit of the board of stewards and any others, is a run-down on Miss Macpherson's achievements to date:

- Governor General's award last spring for her book of poetry The Boatman.
- Teaching Fellowship in 1955 to Victoria College where she is currently writing her PhD thesis on "Mythology and Symbolism in Renaissance Criticism".
- Bachelor of Arts degree from Carleton College in German, Classics and Philosophy.

BLUES WARM UP IN KINGSTON

Battered Gaels Host Determined Varsitys

Queen's Golden Gaels, staggered by their worst Intercollegiate football whipping in 25 years, face the perpetrators of the slaughter again in Richardson Stadium tomorrow.

Varsity Blues, hungry for their first Intercollegiate title and Yates Cup since 1954, meet the Gaels in a warm-up contest for the season's BIG game in London November 1.

Last week, Blues trampled the Tricolor, 44-0, and are rated four-touchdown favorites to repeat tomorrow. But viewing the statistical side of the ledger, Varsity may be generous to Frank Tindall's Gaels.

If Varsity and Western win tomorrow, and if Blues can make it three in a row over Mustangs a week from tomorrow, they'll need a helping hand from Queen's to wrap it up in London.

Should McGill defeat Gaels while Varsity and Western are battling it out, there would still be a mathematical chance for Redman to force a playoff.

But that would necessitate victories by both Queen's (over Western) and McGill (over Toronto) in the final games on November 8.

For tomorrow's battle, Blues will definitely be without the services of defensive back Ian Knowles. He suffered sprained knee ligaments last Saturday, and Coach Dait White plans to rest him for the Mustang fray.

As replacement, Coach White will carry halfback Al Connolly, who was instrumental in Baby Blues' 22-7 win over Queen's Comets last Friday.

Also travelling with Blues will be tackle John Evans, who has yet to see action in league play this year, and Morgan Dever.

Guard Don Johnston, plagued with a recurring shoulder injury, and wingback Dave Pinkham, suffering a shoulder bruise, will travel with the team, but may not see action.

If Pinkham is out, fullback Bob Dann will join Dunc Brodie at the wingback slot, although Brodie came into his own with a two-touchdown effort against Gaels last weekend.

Otherwise, Blues are expected to go with much the same offence that battered Queen's.

Blue Room . . . Argonauts worked out on the Back Campus last night, but the floodlights weren't doing them much good . . . in order to keep out of the mud-bath produced during the interfaculty game, Argos were relegated to a tiny patch of grass near the fence where the lights didn't reach . . .

Varsity quarterbackbacks Brian Aston and Larry Joynt are hitting at better than two-thirds in their passing averages in Blues' last three games . . . That's good shooting in any man's league . . . with Mustangs' Lionel Conacher seeing limited action in the other game tomorrow, Blues' Tim Reid could move into sole possession of first place in individual scoring . . . the picture on this page shows how Mr. Reid does it.

BELIEVE IT OR NOT. Varsity halfback Tim Reid (91) got away from both Queen's tacklers on this play and went 23 yards for a touchdown. But . . . a penalty called the play back and wiped out his fine effort. Queen's get another shot at him in Kingston tomorrow, but it's doubtful they will do much better.

UC, Pharmacy Collect Victories Redmen Total Biggest Of Season

University College walloped Forestry 24-0, and Pharmacy slithered past Meds by a 6-1 count in yesterday's Interfaculty football action on the Back Campus.

UC scored every time they got their hands on the ball in the first half in their game against Forestry and never looked back.

By DAVE GRINER
Varsity Staff Reporter

George Hynna and Ray Gouette scored in the first quarter on end runs, and Shelly Drebin intercepted a Forestry pass in the second quarter and ran 40 yards for the third UC touchdown.

Mike Copeland scored the last

Redman TD on a pitchout in the third quarter. All the converts were missed as ankle deep mud in the middle of the field hampered the footing of the players.

The Pharmacy-Meds encounter saw a spirited Meds team take a 1-0 lead at half time when a Pharmacy player fumbled a punt by the Doctors and was tackled in his end zone for the rouge.

The second half was all Pharmacy; they consistently made good gains on their running plays, but it wasn't until the fourth quarter that they were able to score.

Chet Maslenka went over from the three to cap off a 60-yard march. The convert was no good.

Both teams were hampered in their efforts by the atrocious playing conditions. The mud and steady drizzle eliminated any possibility of taking more than three steps without slipping and falling.

UC now have a win and a tie in two games, while Pharmacy have won both their contests. The loss was the first for Meds.

Pharmacy holds down first place in Group Two.

Rinkies Host Comets Hope To Quit Cellar

Baby Blues will be trying to make it two wins in a row in today's encounter with Queen's Comets at Varsity Stadium at 2 p.m.

Winners last week by a 22-7 count, Rinkies can get at least a temporary share of first place with a win.

After a dismal start that saw them lose by comfortable margins to Ryerson and Western, Baby Blues brightened up considerably in recording their first win of the season last week in Kingston.

Walt Sopinka will be down again from the Seniors along with end Ray Dunn and both should help the Rinkies considerably.

Coach John Sopinka was particularly pleased with last week's win because it gives him a chance to brush up little troubles during the week's practice instead of hammering at basics all week.

Also, the win was over the same team that trounced Western 31-14. Baby Blues lost to Western 19-6.

Dick Farr and Ev Rush are expected to lead the backfield again, while big Casey Wood and Tom Watt should spark a vastly-improved line.

In the other league game, Ryerson are hosts to Western in a battle for first place. Western won last week's game by an eye-popping 38-19 margin to tie Ryerson for the league lead.

Colts can get sole possession of first place if they continue to play the kind of football they've been showing in the last two weeks.

Varsity still have a good chance of retaining the title they won last year. If they win all their remaining games they will get at least a share of first place.

—Dave Griner.

Blues At McGill In Key Contest

Although most of the players are still cleaning up after Wednesday's mud baths, both Varsity soccer teams go into action this weekend. Blues travel to Montreal to play McGill Redmen while Baby Blues play hosts to Ryerson Rams here.

The intermediate game is scheduled for a four o'clock start on the Front Campus today. All players please note and report downstairs in Hart House no later than three-thirty.

Both games are key contests. Blues carry a two-goal lead to Montreal after the first of a two-game, total-point series and if they can preserve this edge they will retain the T and D Association Trophy for a second year.

Rookie Chris Carr, who proved to be a fine mudder in Wednesday's game, is staying up with the Blues to see if he can do as well again. With Brian Michez back and all injuries healed, Blues will be at full strength for the game.

Baby Blues must win if they wish to stay in the race for the Intermediate championship, since the Ryerson team is the one that has always given the Baby Blues the most trouble. They also will have all their players back in action and should finish on top.

Interfaculty Summary

A win over St. Mike's this Monday for Coach John McMurtry's Trinity football team would give them a commanding lead in Group I play. Victors over Sr. SPS and Vic, Black Panthers also meet SPS again later in the week.

Vic and SPS are only two points behind the leaders, but they meet each other on Monday, and the loser must fall by the wayside.

According to last year's Trinity coach, Bill McMurtry, the Black and Red seem headed all the way again this year. He mentioned in particular the depth and strength of the line.

The only hitch in the Trinity plans, however, is the loss of fullback Lynn McMurray for ten days with crushed ribs.

Varsity Gals Seeking Intercol Tennis Title

By SHARON MILGRAM
Varsity Staff Reporter

Last night's train to Montreal carried on it the University of Toronto's hopes for the Intercollegiate Tennis Title.

The girls who hope to retain the title won last year by Varsity are Irene Borecky, who will play first singles; Margot Nunn, who will play second singles; Meriel Gittens and Adrianna Van Dop who will play doubles.

Now that the very successful Interfaculty swim meet is over, the swim club is turning its endeavors towards the formation of a team which will participate in the Intercollegiate meet at Queen's on November 29. Practices for all phases of swimming will be held at 5:30 p.m., Monday through Thursday at the UTS pool, which has been repaired.

The wet weather, which was fine for the swimmers and any fish floating around, has delayed the ending of the softball schedule. As a result the softball play-offs will be held next week immediately after the regular games have been completed.

Down McGill Way...

Pair Heroes, Others Talk

MONTREAL, (CUP) — Two quick-thinking McGill students saved several Montreal motorists from what might have been a serious accident last week.

The two were standing at Sherbrooke and Victoria Streets when they noticed cars bumping through a slight depression in the road.

They started to direct traffic around the depression after they discovered the sunken area was widening.

Suddenly the pavement gave away, leaving a crater 25 feet deep and 10 feet wide — "a woosh like snow sliding off a roof" signalled the cave-in, one of the students said.

The two managed to ward off all cars proceeding along Sherbrooke until police arrived.

Public Works officials blamed the cave-in on a break in the main sewer line. The water had been eroding the area for some time, they said.

In another field, a two-week United Kingdom tour for two McGill University debaters got off to a good start this week when they beat St. Andrew's University debaters.

The McGill team of Marvin Cameroff and Bryce Weir beat the St. Andrew's team by a 73-36 score. The McGill students were debating the affirmative of "Resolved that the Commonwealth is a thing of great potential and paltry achievement."

UC Triumph For SMC Debaters

Two members of St. Michael's Oratorical Society Wednesday came home triumphant from University College's Parliament.

Mike McCabe and Joan Sherry supported the resolution "Resolved that Eloquence is a Dying Art" and won the division 16-10.

Opposing the Orators in their first venture outside St. Mike's were UC's Malcolm Wallace and Arnold Weinrib.

Miss Sherry cited the lowbrow language of modern theatre. The public now likes "silly sophisticated comedies," she said.

Wallace defined eloquence as "the art of persuading either reason or emotion with force, fluency and appropriateness." Modern

De Gaulle Invited To Back Follies

University College Follies officials yesterday sent telegrams to General De Gaulle, prime minister of France, and a French-Canadian actor and dramatist, Gratien Gelinas, inviting them to be patrons of their show.

The telegrams were a joint effort of Debby Schwartz, publicity manager of the show, and Richard Lee, one of the show's producers. The French text was written by Dolly Penwick, show secretary.

Lee said yesterday the telegrams were sent "to promote friendly French-English relations."

The following is the English translation of the telegram sent to De Gaulle.

"CONGRATULATIONS ON SUCCESSFUL PLEBISCITE STOP UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO SUPPORTS YOU STOP PLEASE HONOR US BY PATRONIZING OUR UNIVERSITY COLLEGE FOLLIES STOP COMPLIMENTARY TICKETS WILL FOLLOW BY MAIL STOP PLEASE REPLY AT OUR EXPENSE."

The show's staff is hopeful of a reply from both men, Lee said.

Meanwhile, follies rehearsals are continuing. Opening date for the show is Nov. 13. The show runs for three days in Hart House.

Victoria College's Bob Revue, also presently under rehearsal opens at Hart House on Nov. 3 and runs till Nov. 5.

Bissell Pledges Past Will Balance Future

THE VARSITY Lavish Ceremony At Installation

Vol. LXXVIII—22

Monday, October 27th, 1958

VSP Freely.

SELF-STYLED ceremonial prop for a great University celebration, President Claude T. Bissell contradicts himself by radiating calm dignity as he addresses 1,800 listeners in Convocation Hall.

Raisman To Seek Repeal Of SAC Ban On Stickers

A U of T student who was refused permission to use the official university crest for a commercial venture says he hopes to have the ban removed.

Ron Raisman (IV UC) said "I hope that the SAC and myself can reach an agreement suitable to both of us. I'm perfectly willing to co-operate with them in every way possible."

The SAC told Raisman at its last meeting he would have to withdraw his decal car-window stickers bearing the U of T crest from circulation within seven days.

"I've asked all outlets for the stickers to withhold sales until this whole matter is settled," Raisman said.

"I wasn't aware until just over a week ago that permission to use the crest had to be obtained from the SAC," he said.

"Before I first started production over a year ago, I checked with the SAC office and officials of the university bookstore, and at both places I was told that no permission was required."

"As a matter of fact, the bookstore indicated they would definitely be interested in my decals as soon as they could dispose of a large inventory of the old-model stickers," he added.

"When I approached Hart House they told me this was the kind of thing they'd been looking for for a long time," Raisman continued.

"A large number of students have come up to me since this issue came into the open," he said. "And all of them have sympathized with me. Most of them say my crest is good-looking, in good taste, and is more representative of the University than the present one."

Car-window stickers printed by another private firm are at present the only ones available to students. They do not incorporate the crest.

Raisman said that profits of the venture were "minimal" and added that under a thousand stickers had been sold.

At the same time he also denied earlier reports that the stickers, designed and distributed by himself, are available in some 12 outlets, only two of which are on campus.

"The stickers are available at five outlets on campus and nine near the campus," he said. "I published an ad in The Varsity of Oct. 6 which listed all outlets where my decals were on sale."

Raisman disclosed no further details as to how he would approach the SAC about negotiating an agreement whereby he would be able to use the crest on his decals.

"I've been talking to several SAC members privately, but as yet no formal approaches have been made," he said.

The University of Toronto installed its youngest president Friday evening and heard him pledge to balance future expansion with past heritages.

Students cheered and faculty members applauded in a packed Convocation Hall as Lt.-Col. W. E. Phillips, chairman of the Board of Governors, administered the oath of office to 42-year-old Dr. Claude T. Bissell.

In his inauguration speech Dr. Bissell emphasized the university's traditions of scholarship and excellence, its academic freedom, and its development to form a cultural synthesis.

He spoke of a new concept of a university, where one "invested in people" and a class of "professional intellectuals" was created.

"The sudden discovery that universities are primary producers of valuable goods has brought in a whole host of self-styled experts on production and marketing," he said.

Dr. Bissell conceded this fact, plus plans for an enrolment of 23,000 by 1968, could lead the university into mass-production of the stereotype article.

This possibility would be prevented, he said, by adapting the "traditions of the past to meet the exigencies of the present."

Dr. Bissell said the two major traditions were "the secular traditions of the usefulness of all knowledge and the religious tradition of the redemptive power of truth."

These traditions grew out of federation of the university in 1906 which marked "the successful fusion in an institution of the main trends of the last century."

Remarking that the 1906 University of Toronto Act was the university Magna Charta, he said the legislation encouraged an atmosphere of academic freedom which has allowed the university to flourish.

Speaking firmly and clearly, Dr. Bissell told the 1,800 listeners the traditions of academic scholarship and excellence and vigorous individualism were underlying powers in the university's progress in the last 100 years.

He said one of the U of T's greatest developments were the honor courses in the Arts faculty.

For all "the periodic attempts to bring about a magic permutation and combination of subjects that will in some mysterious way produce the liberally educated man — the honor course principle has remained unchallenged," he said.

Speaking of scholarship, he said it was not only a product of industry and exactitude but also of imagination.

"The scholar may not make any discernible addition to the pile of facts, but he may provide the synthesizing concept, the sudden illumination that seems to leap beyond the available evidence."

Dr. Bissell also dealt at length with the organic growth of the University of Toronto and the leaders it has produced.

All universities, he said, are distinctive institutions emerging through the centuries with certain characteristics which cannot be changed.

Stressing Toronto's own development, he quoted the Commissioners of 1906 on the subject of federation of separate colleges with the university:

"The colleges will maintain the importance of liberal culture in the face of commercial and industrial development, and the growth of scientific activity."

"This," said Dr. Bissell, "they have emphatically done."

Dr. Bissell concluded by saying all the past traditions and heritages would give the university confidence in the expansion battle looming ahead.

He hoped there would be a co-ordinated plan in Ontario to meet the flood of students, but said the U of T had detailed plans for the operation.

"I want to make it emphatically clear that all this involves no thought of abandonment of academic standards," he said.

He said the real criterion of a university's size was the ratio between faculty and students.

By this criterion we have always been and will continue to be a small university, he said.

processional

In his installation speech last Friday, Dr. Bissell stressed the humility of his position.

He quoted Fuller, who suggested the qualities required of a good college administrator were "useful mediocrity". He also spoke of Pope Gregory the Great's description of himself as "servant of the servants of God".

Dr. Bissell recognized that with humility must go a sense of the crucial role of the office.

A university president must be the spokesman for his academic colleagues and give public expression to the ideas and values demonstrated in the university community.

Going further, Dr. Bissell acknowledged that a president must never be content with words. He must take the initiative and translate words into policy and wise action.

Now the tumult and the shouting have died and the learned and honored guests have departed, Dr. Bissell remains to face—in his own words—"a future clamorous with problems".

In his analysis of the university's position last Friday, Dr. Bissell made it clear that he has not forgotten the twin roles of greatness: meekness and action.

We feel sure that under his leadership the problems will be solved.

Hey, look Ma!... We made it!

Our Readers Write: Foul By Follies

Dear Sir: I was astonished at the brazenness of Debby Schwartz and her cohorts in signing "University of Toronto" to a most insulting and ridiculous telegram. The juxtaposition of the congratulations and request for patronage is naive enough to reveal the telegram as a cheap publicity stunt and what is worse degrading the name of the university. There is also the absurd sophistry of signing the University of Toronto and asking patronage for the University College follies. Anyone unfamiliar with the U of T could easily equate the two. Unwittingly they have succeeded in subtle and cutting insult by the association of de Gaulle's success with their own follies, suggesting that by his own follies he would be a suitable patron.

An apology to the University is certainly in order and the matter of who has authority to sign for the University of Toronto should be given serious consideration.

Nicholas Pawley, II Trin.

Dear Sir:

Full marks for a first-rate editorial. It is quite clear, especially at a university, that a person's intellectual ability is the main criterion for judging that person in view of his present or future contribution to society.

It is rather disquieting that this unjust punishment was delivered by a student disciplinary body, an indication that some students of this university suffer from the universal ill of a socially acceptable set of values — a fact no doubt, very heartening to the ad-men.

DEATH OF A SALESMAN

Arthur Miller's "Death Of A Salesman" is intended as a memorial to the little man who with millions of his fellows is bartered and bullied by the gruesome immorality of a once promising America. Through the pathetic history of Willy Loman's career as a commercial traveller, Arthur Miller points the follies of a nation, in which compassion is reduced to vulgar and short-lived pity, by the colossal force of a success myth ill-suited to the vast urban centres and the crass, hopelessly competitive business giants. "Death Of A Salesman" is a sociological treatise heightened by moments of great theatrical force. However it misses completely the heights of great tragic power. Unfortunately, the importance which the playwright believes his subject deserves, the gradual destruction of that subject's family life, and the blighting of the all-important filial attachment of his son, Biff, in part, through love-destroying pride—all evoke from the audience a need for the splendour and the resolution of tragedy. We emerged at the end of the play disappointed and tired by an excess of unresolved and repetitive situations.

Why does Mr. Miller's drive falter? It is not because his theme lacks importance or the understanding of any modern playgoer. The salesman who works himself to the point of utter exhaustion, spurred on by false dreams of himself, his world and his family is known to every one of us. Nor are we ignorant of the profound effects on the personal hope, moral strength and driving faith of millions of ordinary Americans which resulted from the closing of the frontier at the end of the last century. Willy Loman had been raised on a pioneer's wagon, his brother was a paragon of the frontiersman, and his own move to the once semi-rural, now squalid and urban suburbs underlines with force and pathos the American's craving to maintain faith in personal nobility with a now obsolete form of individuality. Yes, we understand all this and our social sense is sharpened and jolted.

However our compassion which needs to be centred upon a real person is not really awakened. Willy Loman is not a very believable man, as Miller has created him. When his wife, Laura, berates her shallow and heartless, son, Happy, for his neglect of his father, she says of Willy, "He's not the finest character that ever lived. But he's a human being,—so attention must be paid." This is a very stirring appeal, but the Willy of the play is not very human. In fact, he is a hopeless dreamer, without intelligence and, far more important, without any real moral fibre. His downfall is not a downfall at all, but rather the bursting of a pathetic but faintly ludicrous bubble. Loman remains for too much, a veritable Mr. X in a prosy, social report. Biff, Loman's elder son and the centre of his faltering hope in life, is given strong touches of moral fibre by Miller, although not by the actor. But there he remains in suspended animation. The playwright does not let him develop, but cuts the play shortly after the point at which Biff, in a moment of passion, makes a first step towards clarification of his society's false dream. However he has not been given the strength which might make further development possible. There is no indication given to the audience, that Biff will not lose the way despite his streak of conscience. In short, Miller, the social observer, has evicted Miller, the dramatist.

In producing this play, Hart House Theatre has tackled a gigantic task. Fraught with technical difficulties, in addition to its purely literary failing, "Death Of A Salesman," if inadequately produced, could clear a large section of the house long before the final curtain. Despite the usual first-night failing in sustained pace, Robert Gill's production contained sufficient dramatic shading. Indeed both pace and shading were mainly responsible for precluding the dire boredom which an interminable series of unresolved crises can evoke. Against William Lord's well-balanced, tunctional, and starkly effective set, the production brought forth many moments of pathos and powerful theatricality. Moreover the comic touches, despite their rarity, were grasped and well-handled whenever they could be found in such a predominantly sociological work. The responsibility for this achievement belongs mainly to Alan Proctor and Matthew Corrigan, as Charley and his son, Bernard, Willy Loman's taciturn, but quietly sympathetic neighbours. Willy, himself, unwittingly kindles mirth by his contradictory attacks on modern technology. With Ray Stancer in the role, these touches could not fail. They remained however in Mr. Miller's intended pattern of pervading pathos and this fact is a great tribute to Mr. Stancer. His portrayal of Willy did its utmost to arouse our compassion. Its failure to achieve this task is the playwright's fault, not his.

Unfortunately, however, any really imaginative painting of dramatic situations, which could have heightened the play considerably, was rather lacking. Once or twice, it failed completely. For example, Uncle Ben, the destructive influence in Willy's outmoded concept of success, was blown into a music-hall caricature, which was totally unsuited to the importance Arthur Miller gives to both the role and the idea it represents. If that idea is to be scorned and dismissed, it is to be done by the audience, not by the actor. It is in the restaurant scene that imagination and a touch of sharp caricature could be used to the greatest effect. In this climactic scene, Willy loses contact with his sons and his sanity forever and the squalor of his world's morosity is fully revealed. Neither the prostitutes, nor the bartender, nor Willy's younger son, Happy (George Golden) point their roles with that clarity which the vulgar and aimless sensuality of the incident demands. Except for Laura's (Maureen Fox's) passionate denunciation of her sons' part in this squalor, the scene would have passed by the opening-night audience far too lightly.

Despite these limitations, Robert Gill has created a commendable production of a play which handles a problem vitally important to our age. Miller's failure to present this dilemma in great dramatic form was perhaps unavoidable, yet rather tragic.

Cheesecake Filler

La Parisienne (Odeon Carlton) is, of course, Brigitte Bardot, herein generously exposed to Toronto eyeballs for the second time.

Her first outing, And God Created Woman, turned out to be a frivolous sexpedition commercially capitalizing BB's super abundant natural endowments. This time, despite the addition of some mild social satire and a few good actors, the steamy piece of celluloid is again little more than a vehicle for the saucy mamselle, who pilots it around the curves with typical "Joie de vivre".

No one can deny, however, that it achieves its one and only purpose—the disturbance of a few tired male hormones.

The absurdly simple plot line is so thin as to be almost imperceptible. It all concerns the chemical reactions Miss Bardot produces in Henri Vidal, her Prime Minister father's private secretary, and Charles Boyer, a suave visiting prince. Throughout it all, Brigitte flounces about in various stages of undress and keeps the bald-headed row in suspense as to what is coming off next.

French Jazzman Andre Hodeir's modern flavoured background music keeps the whole production swinging and Charles Boyer's built-in urbanity cannot help but delight. As for BB, the dubbed dialogue seems hardly necessary. Her vocabulary is always articulate and the language she speaks, universally understood.

While the overall commercial flavour of this spicy cinema sandwich may be unpalatable, it's the meat and cheesecake filler that keeps the viewer happy.

Outstanding Cellist

If a musician is able to persuade his audience of the uniqueness and universality of music, with its power to transcend all stylistic barriers, then he has contributed much to a greater understanding of his art. Such an achievement should be attributed to the famous Hungarian cellist, Janos Starker, who performed last Thursday evening at the Conservatory of Music.

The first half of the programme consisted of two of J. S. Bach's suites for unaccompanied cello. Composed for performance in a courtly drawing-room, these suites consisted of a short but elaborate Prelude followed by five dance-like movements. Mr. Starker's interpretation was imbued with joyous simplicity and spiritual fervour. Judging from his frequent references to Albert Schweitzer, during the Thursday afternoon lecture, Mr. Starker was considerably influenced by that critic's emphasis upon the "pure religious emotion of Bach's music. As a result, a certain worldly element was conspicuously absent, but not entirely missed. The rhythmic interest, formal clarity, and dynamic intensity were drawn in a balanced perspective with subdued colours of transparent purity, making each suite a unique work of art.

Mr. Starker's performance of Kodaly's Sonata for unaccompanied cello was a moving experience for all of us. This work, composed between 1910 and 1915, combined national traits such as the strong Hungarian dance rhythms, and the spontaneous "unlyrical folk-song melodies, with the new sonorities of contemporary harmonic trends. With its kaleidoscopic colours, and ever-changing moods, it seemed to reflect all aspects of human experience. Mr. Starker's sympathetic insight and rich depth of expression translated the Sonata into a poem of unimaginable beauty.

Janos Starker left upon us the indelible impression of a man of intelligence and humility, and a musician of wisdom and understanding.

"Long to reign over us,

And then everybody sat down so the installation of Claude Thomas Bissell, incoming president of the University of Toronto, could proceed.

The murmur of gowns, undergraduates in the second balcony, furs being draped artistically over the backs of seats on the ground floor, a few hurried comments from many people in the almost-packed Convocation Hall, soon subsided.

On the stage and spreading out into the backs of seats down each side of the vast auditorium, multi-colored gowns were splendid, along with a few people in military uniforms.

The wearer of one academic gown, sat with ramrod-black clerical coat against backdrop of scarlet gown. At the end of one row, great sleeves of yellow and of wine on two scholars, flashed with white bars.

On the stage the Chancellor of the University of Toronto was a mass of gold gingerbread, others were red.

But most of the robes were black, shoulders draped by countless variations of the letter V in all the colors.

Professors from the U of T, the United States and England addressed capacity audiences on campus Friday.

Hundreds were turned away from the three installation lectures because of lack of room.

Prof. Northrop Frye of Victoria College told a packed Hart House Theatre audience the "ideal of productivity and the 'vision of the unobstructed assembly line' dominates the university as it does the rest of the modern world.

American anthropologist Dr. Clyde Kluckhohn said the social scientist is ceasing to regard the study of values as mere verbal rationalizations.

And Cambridge University's Dr. V. B. Wigglesworth said pure and applied science are basically linked.

Prof. Frye said today's university reflects social attitudes as much as it did when Samuel Butler wrote "Erewhon", an indictment of the attitudes produced in British universities by the industrial revolution.

"The increased systemizing of scholarship," he said, "our libraries with their stacks and microfilms, modern recording, reproduction of pictures—is part of a technological revolution which has transformed humanities equally with sciences."

Our division of liberal arts into humanities and natural sciences can be traced back to the Middle Ages when they were also classified into two parts — words and numbers.

The professor of English cited several reasons for modern-day confusion about the humanities.

High-school graduates wrongly believe they have mastered the intricacies of reading and writing, he said. We are substituting "slick verbal trash" for literature.

Prof. Frye scored the jargon used by university professors currently—"burbled cotton wool" which they think will please professors.

Jargon, he said, is writing in which "words do not express meaning but are merely thrown in the general direction of their meaning."

Saying the university is addressed to the "consumption of literature" rather than the production, he nevertheless urged students to accept literature actively as an active appreciation of literature is essential to the humanities.

Good writers, he said, put self-expression aside and submit themselves to the "discipline of words."

Dr. Kluckhohn, lecturing on "A Scientific Study of Values", said values may be defined as "selective orientation towards experience, implying deep reevaluation or commitment."

The Harvard anthropology professor and Viking award-winner for anthropological work described investigations still conducted at Harvard to discover why five different sets of values still persist in the five New Mexican cultures, Zuni, Navaho, Spanish-American, Mormon and Texan.

He described the theory of classifying values developed by his wife Dr. Florence Kluckhohn which is more flexible than previous systems.

Linguists, he said, had reduced the American English language into eight basic sounds. Anthropologists were treating values in much the same way.

But he warned of overemphasizing statistics at the 400 Come to Breakfast

President Claude T. Bissell had 400 students to breakfast in the Great Hall of Hart House Saturday, heard SAC president Vince Kelly make him honorary chairman of the SAC, and lauded the fact there were no "brass" at the affair.

Following hard on the heels of his formal installation the evening before, Dr. Bissell's giant breakfast party was the president's first official social function with students since he came into office.

At the conclusion of the meal, SAC president Vince Kelly rose and congratulated the president on behalf of the student body on his installation.

He then asked the president if he would accept the specially-created position of honorary chairman and presented Dr. Bissell with a ring bearing the University of Toronto crest.

Dr. Bissell told the gathering he was happy to see that with the exception of Hart House Warden Joseph McCulley, there were no "brass" present.

"But the ideas," he said, "of Joe McCulley and 'brass' are incompatible."

The president said he was in an unusual position, not having having heard before of an "after-breakfast speaker" and felt disinclined to speak at length.

While photographers edged quietly around the hall the 400 chosen students — a combination of student officials and scholars — sat ranged around the president and ate a huge meal.

He thanked the SAC for the honors, and said he would not keep the gathering too long.

"The day is young," he said, "and I will not take any more of your precious time."

Adrienne Poy, SAC vice-president, thanked Dr. and Mrs. Bissell for the breakfast.

The breakfast ended with singing of "Old Toronto" by the entire gathering.

"We'll shoot and fight for the Blue and White."

Three cheers for Bissell.

Red capes were draped over the pink and red gowns of Gerald Herzberg, Director, Division of Pure Physics, National Research Council, Irene Lussier, Rector of the University of Montreal and William Lewis Morton, Head of the Department of History, University of Manitoba.

They became Doctors of Law, "honoris causa".

When Monseigneur Lussier came forward to say thanks for the three of them, his pink academic robes followed the hang and swing of his clerical ones underneath. He leaned on the podium and his cool eyes bored into the audience as he pleaded for unity.

Unity between French and English-speaking Canada. Unity between the humanities and the sciences.

The music the organ played seemed half-military and half-ecclesiastical and the gowned and capped scholars walked out, dismissed by the Chancellor.

Two military men blended their uniform caps into the procession of many mortarboards. A few academics were wearing what looked like overgrown berets and one black cap looked like a miniature of a chef's.

In the corridors, fur wraps were everywhere and gowns were wrapped into bundles, thrown over arms, everywhere but in hip pockets.

The undergraduates walked home in the drizzle.

University Paper Evading Lawsuit

FREDERICKON, (CUP) — The Brunswickan may have squeaked its way out of a plagiarism suit from the University of Western Ontario.

The University of New Brunswick student paper this fall ran a cartoon slightly changed, which had originally appeared in the Western Freshman handbook last year.

The Brunswickan gave no credit to the original publisher or artist of the cartoon. Western student council members threatened a libel suit of The Brunswickan did not re-run the cartoon, giving proper credit.

Last week The Brunswickan editors admitted their transgression:

"We today admit our error, republish (with permission) the original cartoon, and apologize to the creator and original publisher for any disservice to them."

Western's protest had warned that even if The Brunswickan retracted, legal action would be open to them. However, it is not expected to take the matter to court.

Correction

In Friday's Varsity it was erroneously stated that the Hart House board of stewards was responsible for banning women undergraduates from a coming library evening. The Varsity apologizes for its error; it was not the board of stewards but the library evening committee who made the decision.

University Union Blasted

A government move to have St. Michael's College withdraw from the Canadian Federation of Catholic University Students was given a thumbs-down by one of the biggest crowds ever to attend a debate in Brennan Hall last week.

Don Hall, first speaker for the opposition, said "if SMC pulls out of CFCUS, the Catholic students of U of T will never gain a true understanding of the variations in national Catholic culture."

"If St. Mike's leaves the federation it will be openly admitting a refusal to recognize the other Catholic colleges in the country," he said.

Calling the organization "assinine," "wishy-washy," and "grossly inefficient," first speaker for the government, Lloyd Grey, said "CFCUS is dying because it has lost its national character and was bogged down with petty details."

"The college will support the federation if the entire framework of the constitution is overhauled. But at the moment the government finds CFCUS incapable of carrying out the ideas it was founded on," he said.

A speaker from the floor, John Pierce, compared the Federation to a "pathetic phoenix attempting to raise its singed head from piles and piles of burnt details."

GAELS ROUTED AGAIN

Reid, Joyce Lead Powerful Attack

By GEORGE WILSON
Varsity Staff Reporter

Showing their true form in the second half, the Varsity Blues smothered Queen's Golden Gaels 32-3 last Saturday afternoon.

Leading by a 7-3 score at the half, the Blues scored 25 unanswered points in the last two quarters to complete the rout and thereby prove that last week's score was no mistake.

In the first half, although the score didn't indicate it, Varsity had a wide margin in the play, obtaining nine first downs as compared to four for Queen's and outrushing them by 122 yards to 30.

Penalties ruined a number of good scoring opportunities for the Blues in the first two quarters. However, a strong defensive line kept the Gaels hemmed into their own end for practically the entire half, and the running of Tim Reid and Peter Joyce made sure that the ball stayed there.

The game's total statistics give an excellent indication of the play. Offensively the Blues pounded out 442 yards along the ground and in the air while holding Queen's to a total of 113. The first downs gave Varsity a big edge; 27 to 8.

About midway through the first quarter, the Blues had the Gaels pinned down on their own one yard line. Terry Porter carried the ball to his own 30 where he fumbled and Doug Baird recovered.

The Varsity drive bogged down on the 11 yard line, but when Queen's were offside on a placement attempt, on the next play, Pete Joyce carried around left end for a touchdown. Walt Adams' convert was good.

However, the Golden Gaels, not to be denied so early in the game, put on their only sustained drive of the afternoon. Getting three successive first downs, the Gaels had the ball on Varsity's eight yard line where they were held on two attempts for a TD and had to settle for a field goal by Jocko Thompson.

The second half was all Varsity, and from the opening kick off there was no doubt about the final outcome: Stopping the Gaels cold, the Blues took over for their own 43 and twelve plays later the score was 14-3, Joyce again carrying the ball for the major and Adams converting.

The next time Varsity got the ball they travelled 71 yards to paydirt. Thanks to two spectacular pass completions by Lorry Stacey, which covered a total of 34 yards, plus the running of Paul Burroughs, Reid and Joyce, the Blues were on the Queen's four yard line. Tim Reid did the honours this time but the convert attempt was wide.

Queen's could get nowhere after the kickoff, being forced to kick again. On the first play from scrimmage, faking the lateral perfectly on an option play, Brian Aston ran 54 yards for another touchdown. The convert was good.

It seemed that everytime Varsity got the ball, they marched downfield for a TD, till about the middle of the fourth quarter when Queen's made a last ditch effort at getting back into the game, by putting together a couple of first downs after forcing the Blues to kick.

This burst was shortlived however, as Bobby Dann, who played a solid game at left tertiary, intercepted a Chuck Conner pass and ran it back 18 yards to put the Blues into scoring position once more.

Tim Reid bulled his way past two tacklers who had good clear shots at him, and ran fourteen yards for the game's final touchdown. Not letting up, the Blues were pressing hard as the game ended, with a first down on Queen's eighteen yard line.

The Blues played well both offensively and defensively, on the line and in the backfield. It was a solid team effort, especially in the second half when Queen's were not able to bring the ball out of their own end of the field. For the Golden Gaels, Porter, Conner, Mike Wicklum, and Ross Ritchie played well behind a rather weak line by Intercollegiate standards.

Illustrating their awesome power, Varsity tried twelve times for first downs when they had anywhere from one to five yards to go. They made first downs ten times, missing once on a fumble and the other on a fake field goal attempt which was only short by a yard.

STATISTICALLY SPEAKING: . . . the Blues gained 367 yards along the ground and 75 in the air for their total of 442 . . . Queen's total of 113 was made up of 84 yards in the air and 29 on the ground . . . Aston tried 12 passes, had five completed, none intercepted, for 75 yards, while Connor had eight completions out of 15, two intercepted for 84 yards . . . Varsity's defensive line held Queen's to minus one yard rushing in the second half . . .

fought match on the Front Campus.

Mike Mahon and Bev Walker scored for Varsity in the first half with well-taken goals. Mahon was again on the mark in the second half with his team's third goal. Stan Nashimura counted for Ryerson.

Baby Blues half-line of Doug Grant, Oscar Reimann and Doug Taylor played magnificently throughout the game.

Lloyd McKenzie was best forward.

All the Varsity team played well, and they deserved the win richly. Ted Jensen, Herb Hilgenberg and Fred Ruprecht were standouts in defence.

Rinkies Rout Comets Muir Scores Twice

Varsity Baby Blues claimed their second win of the season over Queen's Comets by a 31-2 count in Varsity Stadium on Friday afternoon.

Queen's backfielders appeared to be suffering from a severe case of "drowsy" as they fumbled no less than 12 times during the game.

Recovered fumbles led to every Varsity touchdown as an alert defence took advantage of each Tricolor lapse.

The win moves Varsity into a second place tie with Western Colts.

There was no scoring in the first quarter as both teams found it difficult to get going in the muddy conditions that prevailed.

Near the end of the quarter, after Varsity had marched for three first downs, Mike Muir pounced on a fumbled kick and gave Varsity a first down on the Queen's 30.

Ev Rush drove over from the six three plays later, John Reimer's convert attempt was good.

Later in the second stanza, another Queen's fumble was recovered by Varsity on the Comet's 32 yard line, and Rush hit Muir with a pass for the TD on the first play after the recovery.

The half ended with Varsity ahead 12-0.

Two more recovered fumbles led to Varsity touchdowns in the third quarter.

Ray Dunn was responsible for the first when he pounced on a fumbled kick at the Queen's three. Muir went over from there for his second TD on the first play. Reimer converted to make the score 19-0 for Varsity.

Later in the quarter, Casey Wood jumped on another Queen's bobbie. Mike Innes then capped off a thirty yard drive by passing eight yards to Russ Bayko for the major.

Varsity got their final TD in the last quarter. Pete Warren intercepted a Queen's aerial on his own 45, and ran the ball to the Comet's 40. A roughing penalty gave Varsity a first down on the 20, and Pete Robertson ran around left end behind some fine blocking for the last Varsity score.

Queen's finally broke into the scoring column when Jim Green threw Reimer for a safety touch with five minutes left in the game.

Varsity completely outclassed the Comets as a hustling defensive unit led by Casey Wood and Tom Watt forced the Queen's team into many errors.

Rush, Robertson and Muir were the pick of the Toronto backfield. Muir was converted to a halfback only two weeks ago. He was formerly an end.

Plea For Peace Issued At SMC

An appeal for an end to dissen- sion was issued from St. Michael's College yesterday.

The plea came as SMC student council members prepare for a meeting tomorrow night.

"The time for accusations is over, and the time for action has begun," St. Mike's student council president Mike McCabe said last night.

He referred to charges that the St. Mike's Senate Club is an "ex clusive, fraternal organization". The charges were made last week as the SMC Students' Administrative Council approved a move to implement recognition of the Senate Club as part of an official college debating organization.

I have personally investigated the charges laid against the Senate Club and found no basis in fact for them," McCabe said.

Further charges would be "com- pletely irrelevant to the debating situation at SMC," he said.

Charges were laid on the basis of an alleged "character clause" in the Senate Club constitution. McCabe said he had examined the official club constitution and all minutes of meetings and found "no reference to a 'character clause' or anything resembling such a clause."

"The SAC has approved creation of a women's 'Forensic circle' which may merge with Senators at the Senate Club's discretion," McCabe said.

"The SAC has put the Senate Club in a position where they are forced to exert every effort to make the Forensic Circle an ef- fective organization," he said.

The council does not intend to recognize either group officially "until both have achieved an ac- ceptable debating standard," he said.

McCabe said he was "proud" of the Oratorical Society, and felt the society could do "the most good for St. Mike's" as a debating train- ing ground within the college.

De Gaulle Silent On Follies Offer

No reply had been received last night from French prime minister Charles de Gaulle who was last week sent a telegram request- ing his patronage of the Univer- sity College Follies.

Follies officials said the prime minister of France had not replied to a telegram dispatched Thurs- day night.

"We're really not too hopeful of receiving a reply from de Gaulle," Follies co-producer Richard Lee said.

An extended deadline for ap- plications for editors of a cam- pus literary magazine brought no results last week.

Three applications for the post were received by Wednesday's original deadline. Publications Commissioner Alex Havriant ex- tended the time limit one day— in vain.

Only one of the three appli- cants is a member of a profes- sional faculty, Havriant said. One qualification for the post is good contact with professional faculties.

Name of the new editor will be announced later this week, he said.

Two Artsmen applied for posi- tions on the editorial board, Havriant said. Applications for the board will be accepted in the Students' Administrative Council office until the new editor chooses his board, he said.

The new magazine is intended as a voice for would-be campus writers. Havriant said he is es- pecially interested in publishing material from professional facul- ties.

But quality of submitted ma- terial will be the first consid- eration, he said.

HOOA In Big Trouble As Sales Aren't Made

Hart House Orchestra Asso- ciates may "fall flat on its face" if 350 subscriptions are not sold by the end of this week, the associates chairman said last night.

"We are on the brink of dis- aster," Elmo Ciprietti said.

"Only 200 of the 550 sub- scriptions which must be sold be- fore HOOA can break even have been sold," Ciprietti said.

Ciprietti attributed the "dis- appointing" ticket sales to the late start, and to the unexpected change of concert dates from Sunday to Saturday nights.

"In an attempt to increase total income HOOA has been forced to seek non-student sub- scriptions," he added.

Non-student subscriptions are seven dollars, as opposed to the $3.50 price tag for student tickets.

"If the required amount of money can not be raised pro- grams will have to be revised to comply with a restricted budget," Ciprietti said.

The Associates may even be forced to cancel their entire pro- gram for the season, he said.

Subscriptions for HOOA's five-concert season may be pur- chased at the Hall Porter's Desk in Hart House or at the SAC office.

The opening concert of the season, to be held this Saturday night, will feature an all-Mozart program. Guest soloist will be oboist Perry Bauman.

Engineers On Carpet After Fishy Practice

The practice of the U of T senior swimming team was dis- rupted on Friday, under some- what fishy circumstances.

In the middle of time trials, two large carp suddenly appear- ed in the pool. Attached to the fish were blue and gold ribbons, the colors of the Faculty of Engineering.

Lacrosse sticks were hastily borrowed by the team managers, and within 15 minutes the carp were netted.

One carp measured 21 inches, and the other 23 inches.

The fish were taken to a Hun- garian family where they met their just end — as dinner.

Bill Yorzyk, a team member, said last night he has no idea how the fish got in the pool, but they did manage to delay the team's practice.

PC's Pick?

Campus Conservatives will elect a Model Parliament leader Nov. 5, publicity director Dave Crane said last night. Deadline for nominations is Oct. 30, he said.

Two club members have thrown their hats into the ring, and three more may do so, he said.

Nominations should be sent to Joyce Walker at St. Hilda's College.

Mainly Artsmen Apply For Campus Magazine

An extended deadline for ap- plications for editors of a cam- pus literary magazine brought no results last week.

Three applications for the post were received by Wednesday's original deadline. Publications Commissioner Alex Havriant ex- tended the time limit one day— in vain.

Only one of the three appli- cants is a member of a profes- sional faculty, Havriant said. One qualification for the post is good contact with professional faculties.

Name of the new editor will be announced later this week, he said.

Two Artsmen applied for posi- tions on the editorial board, Havriant said. Applications for the board will be accepted in the Students' Administrative Council office until the new editor chooses his board, he said.

The new magazine is intended as a voice for would-be campus writers. Havriant said he is es- pecially interested in publishing material from professional facul- ties.

But quality of submitted ma- terial will be the first consid- eration, he said.

Frats Angry

Zeta Psi fraternity house man- ager Bob Morgan Friday denied re- ports that the fraternity will take police action if they don't get back their front door which was stolen Thursday.

"The Zetas can handle their own problems," he said.

However, several members of the Sigma Chi fraternity, which had its door plaque stolen last week, have indicated they will consider police action if there is a recurrence of such incidents.

Charge U of T Quarterly “Russian Propaganda”

By MARK NICHOLS
Varsity Managing Editor

Charges that the October issue of the University of Toronto Quarterly, given over entirely to an examination of the study of the humanities in Russia today, constitutes “Russian propaganda” have been denied by the Quarterly’s editor, Prof. W. D. B. Grant.

Prof. Grant said last night charges that the Quarterly had served as a vehicle for propaganda by securing articles on Russian education through the Russian embassy here were “absolutely fallacious.”

He conceded, however, that the 10 articles by leading Soviet scholars that constituted the issue, had “to be read intelligently.”

The whole idea of the issue, he said, was to give the Russians a chance to express themselves on their educational system to counteract what is said about it in the West.

Dr. George Luckyj, head of U of T’s department of Slavic studies, said last night that the Quarterly had presented “as scholarship what was really a collection of far from objective articles.”

Dr. Luckyj said that in his opinion the worst crime the Quarterly had committed was that it published under the University of Toronto imprint official Russian doctrine without any editorial explanation.

“The study of the humanities,” Dr. Luckyj said, “is not like the study of science in which progress can be clearly assessed. There are a great deal of statistics in the Quarterly, but no indication of what the actual content of their study of the humanities is like.”

He gave as an example the fact that quarterly articles nowhere admitted that every Russian student, regardless of his course, must study the philosophies of Marx and Lenin.

He charged further, that the Quarterly had been amiss in not consulting with Slavic scholars at the University of Toronto.

“They seemed quite prepared,” Dr. Luckyj said, “to disregard any Slavic scholarship in Canada and work instead through the Russian embassy.”

He said that in his opinion the editors might just as well have obtained the material through sources other than the embassy.

Prof. Grant said that when the idea of the Quarterly’s issue on Russian education was conceived it was decided that the “very best men in each field” would have to be obtained.

“How else could we have obtained these but through the embassy?” he asked.

The articles were obtained on the basis of what has been described as “a scholarly understanding.”

“It was understood,” Prof. Grant said, “that these articles would be directed toward a highly intelligent audience and it was agreed that they would be as free of propaganda as possible.”

“And this is largely what they are,” he said.

He said that in his opinion the articles are very close to the facts, that there is naturally the imprint of Soviet thought on them, but that they still present an accurate picture.

He added that no editorial judgment had been exercised on the articles that came from the embassy. They were printed as they were received.

“If the picture the articles give is erroneous,” Prof. Grant said, “it is still of value because if we manage to surpass this, we are well in the clear. If the picture is true, then we are still ahead.”

He pointed out that Soviet achievements in science had been clearly demonstrated to the world. “Why should we not believe they are doing as well in the arts?” he asked.

“Every evaluation,” he said, “is that these articles give something that is very like the truth.”

Dr. Luckyj charged that “a history of very serious repressions have been omitted” from the articles.

Criticism of the Quarterly also came from Dr. Frank Ancevitch of the School of Graduate Studies who said in a letter to the editor of The Varsity that “skillful Communist propagandists” had used the “Quarterly’s hospitality to hide deliberately from Canadian readers the objective said truth about Soviet humanities.”

The letter also remarked that “Mr. Douglas Grant’s position, as that of the editor, would require a more adequate introduction to the series of articles than the present foreword. The Quarterly owes an unbiased explanation to Canadian readers.”

deadline today . . . Applications Slow For Conference

Lack of applications for a McGill world affairs conference is “incomprehensible,” Dave Lee, SAC Weekends chairman Dave Lee said last night.

Only three students have applied for the weekend so far. Applications close tonight, and no extension on the deadline can be arranged.

“The weekend is at least as good as Carabin weekend,” Lee said.

Students from Canadian and American universities will discuss “Canada’s Relations with the United States” at this year’s conference in Montreal Nov. 13-15.

“Grievances against the U.S. are on everyone’s tongue these days,” Lee said. “This is an opportunity for Toronto students to discuss common problems and work out differences with Americans.”

This year delegates from a number of American universities will participate in the conference.

Prof. Edgar McInnis, president of the Canadian Institute of International Affairs, will open the three-day meet Wednesday, Nov. 12 with a comprehensive introduction to the subject of Canadian-American relations.

Thursday and Friday will see round-table discussions.

U.S. Congressman Frank M. Coffin will deliver the final speech at a banquet Friday night. Mr. Coffin collaborated with the Hon. Brooks Hays of the Canadian government on the Hays-Coffin report on Canadian-U.S. relations.

Returns Down As Appeal Winds Up

As United Appeal ended on campus yesterday, returns were still barely past the half-way mark. Campaign chairman Charlotte Hubbell said late returns might push the total slightly higher. Final figure should be about $5,500, she said.

The returns are slightly under those of last year. Final tally last year showed a $5,900 balance. Two years ago, the total was $5,500.

“Although the campaign didn’t reach its objective, returns are consistent with those of the whole city,” Miss Hubbell said last night.

Almost one-fifth of the grand total came from campus events this year. All records were broken for the Revue, Tag Day and Las Vegas night, but faculty canvassing fell far below last year’s average.

All faculty and college representatives are asked to complete their returns today in the Students’ Administrative Council office, Miss Hubbell said.

For the most part faculty reps did a “fairly good job” during the campaign, she said.

“Special thanks go to Jerry Caplan, Judy Harmon, Mickey Spillane and Mr. E. A. Macdonald for action above and beyond the call,” she said.

For Existentialists . . .

Existentialism will be exposed at a U of T Philosophical Society meeting Thursday.

Dr. Lawrence Lynch will speak on “An Introduction to Existentialism” at a society meeting Thursday at 8 p.m. in the Croft Chapter House, University College.

Dr. Lynch is a member of St. Michael’s College philosophy department. He will attempt to “pierce the romanticism which surrounds Existentialism and to relegate this philosophy to its proper place in the history of Western thought,” a society member said last night.

PRETTY GIRLS are a necessary ingredient for any college revue, and the UC Follies is no exception. Here Judy Leizner, Joyce Pearl, Shiela Constant, Hyla Blumenfeld and Van Scraba take time out during a rehearsal.

chain of command

The term "student apathy" is a very convenient cliché. It is a university's way of passing the buck; no one gets hurt if the term can be connected, even remotely, with any failure on the campus.

But to blame the failure of this year's United Appeal campaign on the students of this campus would be an insult.

No one has given them a chance to be apathetic.

A campaign is like a pyramid; at its top is the chairman, responsible for its success. In the middle are those who carry out the orders, do the canvassing, make the arrangements. At the bottom, the student body forms its foundation.

Students this year were generally receptive to the campaign. When they gave, they gave generously.

And campaign chairman Charlotte Hubbell was energetic, dedicated and hard-working. Her one fault was that she trusted those to whom she delegated responsibility.

There the pyramid crumbled; there lies the weak link in a long and theoretically strong chain.

One faculty on this campus did not appoint a campaign chairman until last weekend. Some elected representatives two days before the campaign opened. Many reps were not aware they were responsible for the campaign.

It is impossible for a campaign to be a success under such circumstances.

If the campaign chairman could contact all faculty reps at the beginning of the year; if she could set up a chain of subordinates responsible for separate aspects of the campaign; if she could then pinpoint failures and correct them during the campaign, then, and only then could United Appeal be a success.

And then the loud exponents of "apathy" could honestly blame a campaign's failure on the students of this campus. SB

Our Readers Write:

Quarterly Propaganda

Dear Sir:

It is surprising, to say the least, how "The Humanities in Soviet Higher Education" have been presented to Canadians by a Canadian journal of the humanities. Dispensing with an appropriate explanatory introduction, the October issue of the Toronto Quarterly consists of elaborations on that topic by Soviet state officials, who are engaged in teaching or administering the humanities in institutions of higher learning of Soviet Union.

There is no doubt, that from Moscow's point of view, the Soviet team did its best. The editor of the Quarterly is perfectly justified in thanking them for having "so ably discharged what must have been an onerous task." Indeed, even for skilful Communist propagandists it could not have been an easy undertaking to use the Quarterly's hospitality to hide deliberately from Canadian readers the objective and sad truth about Soviet humanities. And this is exactly what they have done.

Following the general line of Soviet propaganda, the authors produce such an attractive picture, that the reader is led to believe that Soviet humanities are enjoying a unique golden age in the Soviet Union. Every field of the arts seems to be thriving miraculously on Soviet planning. Institutions are overflowing with highly trained and devoted specialists and industrious, enthusiastic and dutiful students. Even factory workers and collective farmers are actively participating in creative work in various study circles. Publishing houses are putting forth original Soviet works as well as selected translations of western authors; Soviet philosophers and economists devote their precious time and brilliant minds to ponder on problems like peaceful co-existence.

The reader would leaf through the Quarterly in vain to find any shortcomings, soul-searching problems, failures, or similar difficulties. The articles lack a critical approach and conceal the vital truth extremely well. No mention is made of the fact, that Soviet humanities are subjugated and wholly employed by a totalitarian, ideocratic, single party state in order to keep the minds of multinational human beings in permanent captivity. The Marxist-Leninist philosophy, which is forced on all Soviet citizens (including professors and students) as the official and only state creed is the prescribed dogmatic pattern for the shaping of the captive human mind in procrustean manner. Whatever does not fit into this pattern — embodied by the infallible dictator and adjustable to his wishes only — is cut off without mercy and condemned as treacherous heresy in every field of the Soviet humanities. The appalling story of the Nobel Prize Winner Boris Pasternak (by no means the first or only example) reveals the real situation in the paradise of Soviet humanities.

That the Soviet authors have neglected to mention the sad truth to the Canadian readers, and that the Soviet Ambassador in Ottawa has assisted them by showing "kind and active co-operation" with the Quarterly is self-explanatory; however, it seems that Mr. Douglas Grant's position, as that of the Editor, would require a more adequate introduction to the series of articles than the present Foreword. The Quarterly owes an unbiased explanation to Canadian readers.

Margot Nunns Tennis Star In Montreal

By SHIRLEY WRIGHT

Last weekend a determined group of four girls travelled to McGill to defend their title as Intercollegiate tennis champions.

Because court space had been decreased, the officials were forced to reverse the tournament schedule and to substitute an elimination programme for the usual round-robin. As a result no university was awarded the championship, but Toronto girls starred in individual events.

Adrianna Van Dop and Meriel Gittins, playing doubles for Toronto, lost by the slightest of margins in the semi-finals to McGill. The set, comprising a minimum of ten games, doubled its number in this match, and it was only after a tremendous effort that Toronto yielded to their opponents, 11-9. The outcome of the final doubles match which found the McGill girls again victorious, indicates the high calibre of the Toronto players.

Margot Nunns, who was playing No. 2 position in singles, romped through the tournament, without effort, to take the final match against Mary Walsh, Queen's, 6-0; 6-0.

The most exciting game of the tournament also included one of Toronto's racketeers, Irene Borecki, playing singles in the No. 1 spot, never saw a dull moment during her final match. After losing the first set to Margaret Benson, Queen's, 4-6, she reversed the call by upsetting Miss Benson 6-4 in the second. The final set left not only the players breathless as the play progressed, Miss Borecki found her opponent difficult to beat but finally rallied once again to take the match 6-4.

points for three years stand at 75, all from major tallies (some coming when a TD was worth five points instead of the present six).

Lionel Conacher, who sat out Western's 28-6 win over McGill, remained in second place with 30 points, but was joined by Varsity's Pete Joyce, who also scored twin touchdowns against the hapless Gaels.

Following Conacher and Joyce are Dave Creswell of Toronto and Western's Frank Cosentino, each with four touchdowns and 24 points. Creswell was scoreless on the weekend, while Cosentino picked up one major.

Western's Bill Mitchell moved into fifth place with three converts and a single, giving him 21 points. Mitchell leads the league in points-after with 14.

Top McGill scorer is Wally Bulchak, who netted three touchdowns in Redmen's first two games, and has been held off the score sheet ever since.

Terry Porter and Mike Wicklum each have two touchdowns to pace Queen's scorers.

Varsity, with an average score to date of 35-10, have 11 men in the scoring parade. Western has 10, McGill four and Queen's seven.

Blue Room: Rumors trickling from London say Conacher spent a few days in hospital with his bad leg, and that the injury he suffered two weeks ago is more serious than thought. . . . Cleat marks were two inches deep on his leg. . . . Conacher is expected to play Saturday against Varsity, but may be favoring the gimpy game.

Ian Knowles is definitely out for the approaching game. . . . his sprained knee ligaments did not respond as well as had been expected. . . . he'll probably miss the McGill game here on November 8 as well. . . . Dave Pinkham and Don Johnston, other casualties, will be ready. . . . Joyce is troubled with a chest bruise, but he, too, is expected to be his usual devastating self. . . .

Western athletic officials expect a capacity crowd to jam J. W. Little Memorial Stadium for the crucial tilt. . . . A Varsity win, coupled with a McGill tie or defeat, would bring the title home.

Panthers Whip Irish Collecting 46-0 Win For Third In Row

Trinity Black Panthers rolled to their third straight win of the interfac season on the Back Campus yesterday when they laced St. Mike's by a 46-0 count.

SMC were hopelessly outclassed as Trinity turned the game into a rout with two touchdowns in the first three minutes.

SMC's first play of the game was a pass that was intercepted by a Trinity back. On the first play from scrimmage, Trinity quarterback Brook Ellis hit John Swinden with a pass that was good for 75 yards and a touchdown. Boeckh converted.

SMC fumbled the kickoff and Trinity recovered on their own 52. Eight plays later, Rusty Dunbar capped off a long march by diving over from the eight yard line.

With five minutes left in the half, Johnny Evans pounced on another Irish fumble at the 45. Ellis threw a screen pass to Boeckh on the first play after the recovery and he threaded his way to the goal-line. The convert was wide, leaving the score at the half 19-0 for Trinity.

The Irish kicked off to open the second half, and on Trinity's first play, Ellis hit Mike Coke with a 65-yard pass-and-run effort to bring the score to 25-0 for Trinity. Pete Eby converted. Three minutes later, Eby recovered another Irish fumble at mid-field and it took only two plays before Ellis passed to Swinden for his second TD. The play covered 65 yards.

Later in the third quarter Ellis again passed to Boeckh for the sixth Trinity major of the game. The play went 45 yards.

Ellis opened the scoring in the last quarter with a 30 yard single. Trinity 39, SMC 0. With five minutes left, Dunbar scored his second TD of the game from six yards out to cap off a 30 yard drive. Boeckh converted to close out the scoring.

The Irish were, to put it mid-ly, terrible. This was the third straight shutout posted against them this year. They fumbled the ball numerous times and Trinity was quick to take advantage of their mistakes.

Ellis passed for over 400 yards during the game as he found many holes in the Irish pass defence. Both of Boeckh's touchdowns were on screen passes. He ran brilliantly on each of the score.

When Ellis was not passing, Dunbar was eating up the yardage on the ground.

Credit must also be given to the Trinity defensive unit. Their tackling was devastating, and they forced the Irish to fumble almost a dozen times. In addition, they intercepted five SMC passes.

Eby and Evans were prominent for their sharp tackling for the Black and Red.

Vic Tops Skule On Late Major

By PETE STANLEY

Victoria College Red and Gold advanced to second place in Group One football standings yesterday on one big play.

Late in the fourth quarter, Paul Sapuntjis threw a long pass to Grant Bull, who went all the way for the game's only major. Rick Oaks converted the score.

Neither Skule nor Vic could get an attack rolling until the third quarter, when Vic marched to the SPS four-yard line. Two unsuccessful running plays and an incomplete pass ended the threat.

Then, with a few minutes left in the game, Sapuntjis hit Bull perfectly. Bull went the last 40 yards unmolested. The play covered 84 yards altogether.

The passing of quarterback Derek Lunn of SPS was outstanding in a losing cause.

CAMSI stands for the Canadian Association of Medical Students and Interns. This year Toronto holds the CAMSI executive.

Many will already have heard of his visit through their College or Faculty. For those who have not and would like to put questions to him, he will be in the Howard Ferguson Auditorium on Wednesday, October 29th, from 9:30 to 10:30 a.m.

Positions Available For All Students

The Civil Service Commission announced today the federal government requires 800 graduates for permanent positions and 1,200 undergraduates for summer work.

There are some 125 engineering, over 100 agricultural science and about 200 arts and commerce positions open for graduates. In addition, a considerable number with a background in mathematics and physics are needed for training in meteorology.

The starting salaries vary: about $350 for arts and commerce, $400 for engineers, and up to $500 for some with post-graduates training in the sciences.

The summer students will receive from $245 to $305 per month, depending on year and experience. Postgraduates will get more.

For next summer about 300 engineering, 130 geology, 250 agriculture, and 110 forestry students will be required.

The Commission is sending senior officers to the campus to describe the needs and acquaint the students with conditions of government service.

CBC Problem Reviewed Critically By CCF MP

Problems of the Canadian Broadcasting Corp. were given a thorough airing Friday by a CCF Member of Parliament.

Addressing the campus CCF Club, Douglas Fisher, Port Arthur MP, analyzed the present position of the CBC in relation to a recent bill passed by the government.

Concerning nationalization of the CBC he said there are few constitutional problems to face as all provinces but Quebec have waived their constitutional rights.

The solution is to control and regulate the CBC to provide an honest concept of nationalization, he said.

Main criticism of the CBC, he said, is that regulators have not had the "guts" to make private stations toe the line in conforming to the rules.

Even the 1956 Fowler report, which upholds free enterprise, did not approve CBC's performance, he said.

Report mentioned the common fear of being overwhelmed with American programs and warned Canada could not afford to turn control over to private stations.

The CCF voted for the government's bill, which followed the Report in substance, but criticized the large governing body of the CBC, he said.

This group consists of 12 members on the Board of Broadcast Governors plus the CBC Board of Governors.

Fisher taught history in a Port Arthur high school before being elected for the CCF in June 1957.

Scot Minister Will Visit All Frats, Residences

The Rev. Tom Allan, Scottish evangelist, will visit the university campus as part of an inter-denominational mission sponsored by four churches in the mid-town area of Toronto.

The mission will be in session from Nov. 2 to Nov. 12. During this time, services will be conducted on the campus.

The university program has been arranged by the Inter-Faculty Committee and the University of Toronto Christian Leaders Committee.

All university residences will be visited, as well as the fraternity and the sorority houses.

A series of five meetings has been arranged. Four meetings are for specific faculties. The fifth will be an inter-faculty service at Hart House.

Rev. Allan was minister of North Kelvinside Church in Glasgow until 1953. He then toured Scotland as a missionary and was chairman of Billy Graham's 1955 Scottish Crusade.

By LIZ BINKS

A great deal is said these days about student apathy. SAC members complain about lack of applications for various events; faculty members say there are no "hungry fighters" amongst students any more, and graduates boast of escapades in their day which make ours look pretty anemic.

Apathy, if it is as serious as some people think it is, is indeed lamentable. But what is more lamentable is the current form of student prank that appears to be the modern undergraduate's only way of displaying spirit.

This year, in the space of six weeks, there have been three outstanding examples of this so-called "prank" on the U of T campus.

All three have been sponsored by groups whose general characteristics can be found in the following list: comic names, anonymous letters and phone calls, mass attacks at midnight, and an unbelievable disrespect for other people's property.

The first two of the three claim to be performing solely to aid this year's somewhat stricken United Appeal campaign.

The Blinded Dog Society got the whole thing off to a flying start with its attempt to organize a mass kidnapping of campus leaders. The attempt was unsuccessful. It was badly executed and when victims objected to being held at Caledon Hills farm for two days, they managed to escape with little difficulty.

So the Big Seven Renegades set about to show their predecessors how this sort of thing should be done. They very cleverly invaded Fraternity Row, stole plaques and trophies from numerous houses and chuckled in glee as word of their heroic deeds spread about campus.

Soon another group joined the fun—this time nameless—and made off with more fraternity plaques in order to decorate their "be a crook" party.

None of these groups deserve much praise. But at least the third, in admitting their aim was as stupid as their actions, was being honest.

What we object to almost more than the outright stealing of fraternity property, is the use of United Appeal as a front to make these thefts seem excusable.

They are not excusable. They are not even funny. That few or none of the fraternities involved have complied so far by paying the ransom money demanded is an indication of the way they are being received.

We sincerely hope the stolen property is returned soon and that the pranks prove as dismal a failure as their instigators attempts at humor have been.

queens loses goal posts may be sold at auction

Several members of the Chemical Engineering class of ST9 yesterday said they have the goalposts from this weekend's Varsity-Queen's game at Kingston.

The members of the class, in Kingston on a field trip, attended the game. After most of the spectators had left the stadium, "four or five" of the Engineers pulled down the goalposts at either end of the field.

They took one crossbar and part of the other to a hotel room, transferring them to a Toronto-bound car late that night.

The souvenirs are currently at the Kappa Sigma fraternity house, 108 St. George St.

The Engineers said the seizure was made in retaliation for a similar theft by Queen's after the Queen's-Varsity game in Toronto the week before.

The posts may be disposed of at a "Skule" auction, the Engineers said.

U of O Council Rebels

OTTAWA — CUP — The University of Ottawa's Students' Federation refused Monday to accept resignations offered by the three editors of La Rotonde, the student newspaper.

The vote came in the face of public notices dismissing the editorial board signed by Rev. Leonard Ducharme, Dean of Men.

The motion, finding it impossible to accept the resignations and suggesting a meeting with U of O authorities, was unanimous but for one abstention.

The three editors, Louis Cliche, Pierre Trudel and Roger Roy had their posts ratified by the students' council Oct. 20.

On Oct. 24 notice of their dismissal was distributed on campus by the Dean.

Cause of the firing was publication more than three weeks ago of the opening issue of La Rotonde. The issue contained a full report on La Rotonde — written by Normand Lacharite, one of the two editors, fired last summer.

Monday's special council meeting was called after the editors submitted a letter of resignation Oct. 25.

The resignation letter drew the council's attention to the Dean's notice of dismissal and asked the council what action it would take.

Motion passed by the council reads:

Whereas La Rotonde is the responsibility of the Students' Federation and ;

Whereas the Federation ratified the editors' appointment Oct. 20 and;

Whereas administration authorities are denying the Federation control of student activities by their action;

Therefore the Federation finds it impossible to accept the editorial board's resignation and suggests a special meeting with authorities be called.

The motion was proposed by the Law faculty and seconded by the Medical faculty.

Only abstention came from Cliche, one of the editors involved and also vice-president of the Federation.

La Rotonde's trouble began last spring with publication of an anniversary issue in which co-editors Jean David and Lacharite levelled strong criticism against "paternalism" in the university. They were both fired.

Father Ducharme's letter last week dismissing the year's editorial board said the University "regrets to be obliged to forbid to the present members of the Editorial Board any participation in any way with the activities of La Rotonde."

The action was taken to "ensure the maintenance of good relations between the student body and the University."

Criticising the paper's first issue this year, the letter said the editors "made no distinction between editorial and news" in publishing Lacharite's report.

Publication of the report was censured by Father Ducharme.

In Monday's meeting U of O student president Marcelle Prud'homme told council members administration authorities were displeased with news reports leaking out concerning the La Rotonde issue.

Prud'homme also read a letter to the council from U of O public relation director Bill Boss.

Boss said in his letter "in my mind there is no question of the right of association to be preserved in their entirety."

Monday's meeting except decide on a new editor or editors."

News of the Dean's action in dismissing the three editors has aroused student ire in Quebec.

Three student leaders, University of Montreal student president Jean Cournoyer, Laval student external affairs director Gabriel Gagnon and Nfcus' Quebec regional president Jean Dionne are quoted in Montreal newspaper Le Devoir as condemning U of O authorities.

Cournoyer guaranteed Ottawa students the support of the U of M and said no one else but students "has the right to interfere directly or indirectly in their business."

Gagnon accused U of O authorities of contradicting a recent statement by their rector, the Rev. Father Legare O.M.I., to the Nfcus convention to the effect that "students are the most important part of the university community."

Dionne, saying student councils were the only bodies with the right to appoint or dismiss students in official positions, encouraged Ottawa students to "fight fiercely for the essential freedoms of the press and the right of association to be preserved in their entirety."

Committees and Warnings At SMC Council Meeting

A peaceful St. Mike's student council meeting last night sought a solution to the college debating crisis and withdrew conditionally from the Catholic Federation of Canadian University Students.

Problems involving the controversial St. Mike's Senate Club were relegated to a debating committee after council members found approval of a charter for the club would be unconstitutional.

"We feel a temporary understanding has been achieved, and a permanent one is in sight," Oratorical Society president Peter Dembski said last night.

The question of constitutional validity arose when debates commissioner Lloyd Gray proposed a motion putting the Senate Club under council charter.

Issuing a charter would put the club under SMC Students' Administrative Council control, and would make it eligible for SAC funds.

Speaking from the floor, Dembski quoted a section of the SAC constitution providing that organizations supported by the SAC must have a common membership of male and female undergraduates.

Since the Senate Club is composed of male members only, it is not eligible for charter, Dembski said. The objection was upheld by the chairman.

The SAC then adopted a motion from council member Mary Conway creating a nine-member committee to study the problem.

Senate Club president Bob Carberry informed the council he would apply to the SMC men's House Council for charter if necessary.

The investigating committee will be composed of three members from the Senate Club, three from the Oratorical Society, and three from the yet-to-be-formed Forensic Circle.

In its second major action of the evening, the SAC resolved to withdraw conditionally from CFCUS for one year.

If CFCUS refuses to accept SMC proposals for a revised constitution, the college will withdraw permanently from the organization, it said.

External Affairs representative Brenda Boyle recommended the move in a report on the organization.

Her report recognized the need for a national Catholic student organization, and said if St. Mike's pulls out of CFCUS, it will be a death warrant for the organization.

Main basis for criticism lay in the ineffectiveness of the organization, she said.

Unknown Group Removes Painting

The staid halls of St. Hilda's College rang with alarm last night when residents finally noticed a painting of a "nude Indian" was missing from its accustomed spot near the dining hall.

But no one knows when the painting was stolen, who took it, or how.

Residents said they first noticed the painting, a gift of a former class, had vanished about 7 p.m. yesterday.

A note left in the space formerly occupied by the painting said it could be reclaimed Thursday at the SAC Building upon receipt of $10.

The note was signed "BSR" — the initials of the Big Seven Renegades, a group of pranksters that recently raided fraternities on campus.

But a member of the group, known to The Varsity, last night flatly denied his group had anything to do with the St. Hilda's incident.

Miss Katherine Darroch, principal of women at St. Hilda's last night said college authorities were not concerned at the disappearance of the painting.

She said the police had not been notified and they would not be as far as she knew.

"I cannot make any statement beyond that before consulting with other authorities," she said.

She said the feeling was the missing object would be returned as the note indicated.

VCF Kidnaps Statue From Girls At Queens

A seven-foot statue taken from brought back the statue that a Queen's University girls' residence is now on display at a Spadina Ave. co-operative residence after a one-night stay in the nurses' residence.

A "nursing resident" last night said the papier-mache representation of a man in street clothes running with a football, adorned with gold paper and Queen's University ribbons, was taken from outside the second storey of the Kingston home.

The two men who performed the feat were with a bus load of students from the Varsity Christian Fellowship which went to the same Saturday morning, and Varsity sports editor John Brooks couldn't miss getting a shower after the St. Hilda's - Vic girls' football game yesterday in Varsity Stadium. Above, Vic girls, winner of the match, herd their wet coach out of the showers. For John their was only one hitch: he coaches both the teams.

They dug and dug:

To Salvage 3,500 Years From Flood

When thousands gathered at Cornwall, Ont., July 1 to watch the historic blast that sent water rushing over the coffer dam, and into the new Seaway channel they felt awed and perhaps a little saddened by the significance of what they saw.

For many it marked the passing of communities and settlements they had grown up with and the advent of a new stage which they respected but could not altogether welcome.

For a small group of archaeologists standing among the crowd, the blast had a much deeper historic significance. It indicated the passing of a way of life that dated back 3500 years.

The group was composed of five U of T students and Professor J. N. Emerson who, under the sponsorship of the National Museum of Canada and the University of Toronto, had just completed three summers of survey work in the now demolished area.

Begun In 1947

Archaeological survey work there began in earnest in 1947 when the National Museum sent an expedition into the regions that were to be affected by seaway plans then underway.

The result was a last minute clean-up of pottery and burial remains by Professor Emerson and his party before the inundation went into effect.

"We camped on Sheek Island which is about a mile and a half from where the blast went off," Bruce Trigger, fourth year Archaeology student and member of the group said.

"The first summer we had all our water and supplies on the island and it was pretty easy-going. But this year we were completely cut off — even trees on ours and surrounding islands had been cut down to prepare for the blast. As a result we were pretty isolated."

Siberian Tribe

Object of the search, Bruce explained, was to investigate the traces of what archaeologists call the Point Peninsula Indians, a tribe who it is believed entered Ontario 3,500 years ago from Siberia.

"We think they were a hunting tribe," Bruce said. "They left little evidence of permanent camps, but a great many tools and weapons made of flint and bone."

Their strangest cult was cremating their dead and burying the remains in high sandy places above the lakes and running water."

All the burials, he said, were characterized by patches of brilliant red ochre which was also found surrounding remains of tools and other offerings made at the time of burial.

"In all we brought back about 40 bags containing burial remains," Bruce said. After a report has been made on them, we hope to get them on display."

Elaborate Display

Professor Emerson's party has attracted not only students in the past. Two summers ago,

By LIZ BINKS
Varsity Staff Reporter

Bruce said, they were joined by a researcher for Time magazine, a member of the Arabia-American Oil Company and Ezra Pound's son, Omar.

Anxious to get some of their findings on local display, Bruce and another student, Dick Pearson, third year Trinity, worked on a showing in the Cornwall Museum's Point Peninsula Room. They left behind a permanent and fairly elaborate display — the only remains of the valley now completely submerged by man-made floods.

Following the inundation, the party spent most of July and August doing similar survey work in Prince Edward County.

After a month of scouting the area, they settled around Iroquois sites near Wellington. Here, Bruce said, they found evidences and village palisades and garbage dumps, and were able to catalogue a good number.

"At one point I discovered what appeared to be a well of some sort," Bruce said. "In it were buried a human jaw and other bones—and they had obviously been well chewed before some hungry Iroquois flung them away!"

Other finds Bruce could remember were an entire Y-shaped hearth-filled with bits of broken pots, and numerous bits of pottery showing crude attempts at design.

"We think some of these may have belonged to the Laurentian Indians who lived some 5,000 years ago," he said.

Dozens Of Finds

But probably the most exciting aspect of the summer's work was the rush period in June. "We had to have all our work done by June 30," Bruce said.

"Dozens of finds had to be mapped at the last moment — and more and more kept turning up right until the last day."

"But when we left the area three days after the blast, the lake was full. Even the highest dunes piled by our bulldozer had been covered and a buoy fastened to a rock marked the site of one of the historic parks."

"It was a satisfying feeling to know we had taken at least some of it with us."

Keep Africa In

Dear Sir:

In an editorial on the 20th of October headed "Stained Bedfellow", you stated that the Union of South Africa wants to leave the Commonwealth, and suggested that the sooner she does so the better for other members. I believe you are wrong on both counts.

I would say that a minority of the white citizens and very few citizens of the other groups wish the Union to leave the Commonwealth, which leaves a vast majority in favor of retaining membership.

The Commonwealth is a family of nations, and, as in most families, there are members unable (at present) to get on well together. Canada has had its color-bar problems and recently Britain has faced race-rioting; Pakistanis and Indians have been fighting each other; Australia and New Zealand have been angered by British and Canadian trade policies; Ghana and other Commonwealth countries have cause to remember a large number of their citizens imprisoned under British rule; many West Indians feel that Britain has enriched herself at their expense. Yet, in spite of these and many other problems, the Commonwealth has survived and grown stronger.

The situation in South Africa is one of immense difficulty, requiring sympathy and understanding. The best hope for the millions of Negroes and colored people in the Union is in the continued membership of that country in the Commonwealth.

To wish South Africa out of the Commonwealth is a denial of responsibility: without South Africa, the Commonwealth would be immeasurably weakened.

Prop The Bubble

Dear Sir:

Surely we should be able to read what we like, when we like, where we like and how we like. This occasionally pricks the smug bubbles we in the West build up around us by condemning Russian statistics as "propaganda" and dismissing them as such before examining them. University students should not live in bubbles.

The articles in the U of T Quarterly were to be as free from propaganda as possible.

Does this not include Western propaganda? We should not have to doctor or comment on Russian articles before printing them in a "learned" atmosphere. The cloak of the word "propaganda" thrown carelessly over many unpleasant facts and figures, must not become confused with the academic gown. Let us look things in the face, for we may not have long to do so if we don't.

Less Cake For Trinity Officials Crack Down

Trinity's famed cake-fight will usually a mixture of motor oil, eb less messy this year, college officials say.

"Extraneous material", usually dropped from above on battling sophomores and freshmen has been forbidden by Trinity Dean A. J. Earp.

"Extraneous material", concocted by senior year students, was usually a mixture of motor oil, raw eggs, bad tomatoes and other garbage.

Last year the material left a permanent stain on college walls, Head of Arts Doug Grant said last night.

Object of the cake-fight, traditional end of freshmen initiations, is for freshmen "worms" to break through ranks of second-year men guarding Trinity's tower on Philosopher's Walk.

If the Worms manage to get a man into the quadrangle with a piece of cake they win the competition.

Last time freshmen won the fight was in the veteran's year after the Second World War.

The garbage, dropped by seniors from the tower roof, has always cushioned the running blow the freshmen give the front rank of sophomores.

Some Trinity students feel serious accidents will occur this year if there is nothing to stop the freshmen's impetus.

He said it was dealing with a "many-headed dilemma" as it passed its resolution.

In 1962, the Canadian Medical Association will demand a year of internship in Canada before it grants a license to practice.

But many medical students are forced to intern in the United States because of low salaries here, he said, Canada's largest hospital, the Toronto General, pays junior internes $50 a month, while some pay as little as $25 monthly, Brawley said.

In addition, many of those forced to intern in the U.S. remain there. Thus, much of Canada's medical talent is lost.

While CAMSI has no power to enforce its resolution, members hope to work with individual hospitals and eventually make the $200 figure standard throughout Canada.

The convention also advocated a $50 monthly raise in salary for each additional year of internship.

Other highlights of the convention were:

—inauguration of plans for exchanges of medical students between Canada and European countries —decision to prepare a complete report on medical summer employment for Canadian medical students, —announcement that CAMSI would prepare a brief on federal student taxation for the National Federation of Canadian University Students.

—report on CAMSI's medical student insurance plans.

—a report from the University of British Columbia regarding mental health among Canadian university students.

Jazz Goes To College Here Michael Kater Swings It

Several years ago, two young men in widely separated places were suddenly getting interested in jazz.

One of these was in the smoky theatre of a liner crossing the Atlantic. The ship was somewhere off the coast of America and the young man was returning to Canada from a year in Germany. On the screen was a movie featuring the dixieland jazz band, Firehouse Five plus One.

The other, about the same time, was having a similar experience in a movie theatre somewhere on Prince Edward Island. He was watching a movie featuring Louie Armstrong.

The first of these two was Michael Kater, the second Norm Stewart. Today, on vibraphones and guitar respectively, the two form the core of one of the University of Toronto's most ubiquitous jazz groups — the Michael Kater jazz quartet.

The paths of life and wandering interests in music, moments on shipboard or listening to the square dance-country music of the East coast of Canada brought these two together as students at university.

Dusseldorf only once since then. When he was young he had studied the piano sporadically. "I used to go off and turn over musical ideas by myself," he explains. "This is the way you really learn, this is the way you begin to understand what you're doing."

It wasn't until the night on the Atlantic when he heard Dixieland music for the first time consciously that he became interested in playing jazz.

So he picked up a cheap, second-hand set of vibraphones and started teaching himself to play them.

At the same time, one idea remained firmly in his mind; the jazz musician must understand the whole history of jazz and something about classical music before he can be any good.

"So I worked my way up. First Dixieland and the older New Orleans music, then into the swing era, Benny Goodman and Lionel Hampton; then into the 40's and bop."

"A musician," he feels, "should have the feeling that he is constantly developing, that he is never standing still—that's way

I'm not playing any particular style now, I'm still learning."

"There are too many 'angry young men' in jazz who don't really know what they're doing," he says.

But Mike, who feels that the whole history of jazz as well as the classics is bound up in modern jazz, doesn't find complete support in his guitarist Norm Stewart.

Norm, who came to U to T after a year at Prince of Wales College in P.E.I., has been playing the guitar for about 13 years — as well as trumpet, piano and violin. And through his understanding of jazz runs a long familiarity with the country music of the Maritimes.

For him every kind of music is worth while. "You can't," he feels, "judge music according to what you think it ought to be, but on its own merits."

For that reason Norm believes that even in the crudest rock and roll there is some value if it is the best of its kind.

At any rate, Michael and Norm are having a good time playing jazz. For dance jobs around the campus, they enlist the services of musicians on drums and bass—currently Derrick Collins and Bob Lush respectively.

quarter rally

Unfair accusations have been levelled against the University of Toronto Quarterly which in its October edition undertook to present a unique picture of Russian higher education.

That the Quarterly decided to use as its source of material Russian scholars themselves has been the main point of critics within the university. They feel the imprint of this university has been used to garnish a vehicle for Russian propaganda.

But, as the editor of the Quarterly, Prof. Douglas Grant, has pointed out in his defence, there is every reason to believe that the picture painted by the Russians is "something like the truth."

And this, as we have learned, is quite an achievement in view of the general silence observed by the Soviets.

It would be silly, furthermore, to believe that anyone could be misled by the Quarterly. In the mass of statistics it is easy to spot what is missing.

In many places, such as in the article on the fine arts, the outmoded tradition followed by Russian painters is clearly shown, thus revealing to the Western eye at least one fault in the so-called "rosy picture".

Many more of these emerge. Prof. Grant points out, furthermore, that the dreary, stilted quality of many of the articles reveals that these are the writings of men trying to give to a certain extent a picture of the truth—not the work of the trained propaganda hacks of the Russian government.

If the Russian writers have chosen to omit anything, it is the extent to which Russian study in the humanities must adhere strictly to the Communist line.

But this is something we already know about and needs no further elaboration. Hence, the editor is justified in not apologizing for the fact that the men who wrote the articles were Communists.

In view of the attack on the Quarterly, we belatedly congratulate the editor for his honest attempt to elucidate for Western readers another aspect of the Soviet situation. MN

Yugoslavia - III

Marxism: The new opium

By HOWARD MILLS

Howie Mills, III Emmanuel, was the third U of T delegate to the World University Service's summer seminar in Yugoslavia. Here is the third of a series of articles written by delegates on what they saw and learned there.

free to worship or not and the various faiths are at liberty to hold their own services, train their own clergy, and solicit financial support from their parishioners as they see fit.

But there is more to this story. For a Communist simply does not attend or support religious institutions — the two are not compatible. Thus religion is the loser, because there are considerable material and vocational benefits which go with membership in the League of Communists. And in a country as impoverished as Yugoslavia there are many who aspire to membership in the League, if not on conviction, at least for expedient reasons. But you have to prove yourself worthy; attending worship services does not accomplish this!

World War II has also made the Church's row a difficult one to hoe. Yugoslavia, perhaps more than any other country, was disrupted in every aspect of its life. Everyone was involved in the fighting such that communities had to be mobile, families were broken up, education was terminated and religious institutions closed down while the priests were fighting too. The outcome was that family bonds and dependent religious roots were severed, leaving the youth particularly open to Communist propaganda. Particularly in education has this been capitalized upon. A high school course in philosophy concludes that religion is false and propagates Marxist humanism. "Partisan" youth movements attract teenagers into a collective relationship — and away from family life.

In contrast, preaching is allowed the religions, so long as it is not contra the state, its idealism or practice; the church's social voice is thus limited to mystical platitudes. So, while religious freedom is real, there are many subtle ways in which religion is being pushed to that "natural death".

The even greater danger is that, although no avid Communist would admit it, nor perhaps realize it, Communism itself fills the void and becomes a religion: Marx is a sort of infallible god with Lenin as the prophet who interprets the "master" to the world. The Communist accuses the Christian of blind adherence to scientifically untenable doctrines, while he himself holds an unquestioning conviction. The students I met admittedly accepted, quite sincerely and with a religious vigor, the dogmas of Marx and Lenin and the programs and policies of the Tito regime. This faith is a humanism, not particularly concerned with the essential worth of the individual, but rather with an overly optimistic assessment of man's ability to rise up and, through collective thinking and responsibility, to make right all the social and economic evil of society, thereby bringing about the comparable Communist "Kingdom of Heaven" within society.

I have only had space to suggest my strong conviction that Communism must be dealt with, by those who wish to oppose it with me, in terms of religion as well as of economics and politics. Certainly, Yugoslavia teaches us this lesson as I see it.

Because of the tremendous social improvement that Communism has brought, it is a very tempting religion for Yugoslavia to accept. But its humanism fails to account for the fact that the efforts of wise, inventive and sincere men have only brought this world closer and closer to destruction, not salvation or fulfillment. Men have only ever found their fulness or "salvation" in obedience to and through the gracious, mysterious power of the very God whom the Yugoslav and other Communists deny.

It is my prayer, and I hope yours too, that before a more moderate form of socialism evolves in Yugoslavia (as I think it must), the material benefits of the present development will not be outweighed by the permanent damage done by Communism to the spirit of her people.

B. C. Camsi Report:

Undergraduates' Mental Health

By PETER BRAWLEY

Mental health is the most serious single health problem affecting Canadian university students today.

This is the published conclusion of a survey conducted by the University of British Columbia last summer in connection with the mental health of college students. The report was presented to the national convention held by the Canadian Association of Medical Students and Internes earlier this month. The report also revealed that —at least one student in ten has a mental illness serious enough to interfere with his university studies;

—at least one in twenty is ill enough to require psychiatric treatment;

—medical students are affected by mental illness in a proportion significantly greater than other students;

—most universities have NO method for the psychiatric screening of incoming students.

How serious a problem, then, is mental health in the university; what form do the disorders take, and what is being done about it? Some of these answers are provided by the report. Commenting on the incidence of mental disease, the researchers write: "Even these conservative estimates . . . present a considerable problem in morbidity." In fact one university replying to a questionnaire sent out by the UBC workers wrote that twenty-five per cent of the students at that school had emotional problems serious enough to interfere with study. What is important here, however, is the reference to morbidity. This term is variously used by medical men to denote a diseased state, the ratio of sick to well in a community, or the probable morbid effect of a present disease on the future life of an individual. Taken in any of these aspects, university student mental illness poses a singularly difficult problem.

What form does this diseased state take in afflicted students? It was reported that characteristically the illnesses have a rapid onset, are associated with violent symptoms of anxiety and hypochondriacal tendencies. Neurosis is more frequently encountered than psychosis in ratios varying from three to one to 40 to one. This is encouraging, since in general neuroses tend to be somewhat more reversible and amenable to treatment than psychoses. The common "syndromes", or groups of symptoms, consisted of hypochondriasis, somatic preoccupations, transitory symptom formation, anxiety and depression; there were the "psychoneuroses", and as is the case with the majority of such disorders, they have responded well to treatment. The most common psychosis is the borderline schizophrenic state, which presents a difficult problem of therapy, and not uncommonly requires drastic measures, for example electroconvulsive shock, insulin shock, and confinement to an institution. Schizophrenia is generally characterized by a lack of normal harmony between thought, feeling and behavior, and in addition is often accompanied by a withdrawal which makes communication difficult.

The etiology of mental illnesses in general is not a point of agreement for psychiatrists, and with respect to this problem no special studies have been done. The report does list several precipitating factors; these lack the dignity of the term "causes", but it appears they play some part in the immediate pathogenesis of the disorders. Heading the list are examinations, and two other important ones noted are sex and separation from home, in that order. Other precipitating factors of lesser importance are finances, marital problems, social isolation and living arrangements.

A judgment on the real morbidity of these disorders, and an appraisal of their effect on the university and its students, awaits further study of the whole issue. The report noted a singular lack of reliable data on the subject; they were even unable to compare incidence of mental illness inside and outside the university, because no such studies were available. Yet the basic figures are: at least ten per cent of all students in the university, future leaders in society, have a significant mental disorder today, and one half of these need formal psychiatric aid. No doubt as the problem begins to attract attention and facilities improve, the incidence will rise.

Lilac Time And Love In Bloom

It's been a long while since a French-Canadian play was on view in Toronto. For this reason alone the Theatre de Nouveau Monde production of The Time of the Lilacs at the Royal Alexandra is a major event. But that is not the only reason. Playwright Marcel Dube's reputation had leaked through the wall between Ontario and Quebec a long time before his play got here and the great vitality of French-Canadian playwrighting with Dube in the vanguard had become almost a myth in English Canada.

The Time of the Lilacs indicates more than anything else that French Canada has by no means licked the problem of bringing into existence a worthwhile Canadian drama.

In this play Dube demonstrates three positive possessions: an amiable talent for characterization, a fair sense of theatrical effect, and a theme. But he does not seem to have learned as yet how to put them all together to make a play.

What he seems to have done is to take these three elements and string them together in a theatrical structure that Ibsen invented about seventy-five years ago, that is, a loose structure in which characters are continually coming in one door and going out another whenever it comes time for them to do their bit toward advancing the proceedings. Unfortunately, seventy-five years is a long time. Even if Dube's play had achieved the level of the best Ibsen structure it would have been obsolete, but it resembles the most awkward of the early Ibsen plays and the continual entrances and exits become somewhat tedious.

The Time of the Lilacs is about love—all kinds. The love of a young couple, the love of an old maid and a reluctant bachelor, (both loves owing much to William Inge's Picnic), the love of an old couple for each other for their dead son, and for their home, the love between the young girl and the old couple. Required and unrequired, no kind of love is missing. As long as all of this is kept on the level of light romantic comedy in which no one is doing anything but everyone is having fun Dube seems to be in fair control. It is thin stuff but it is at least charming. But the minute he decides to turn it all into heavy drama with an unlikely suicide and a gratuitous breakup of the old homestead the play falls to pieces. Tragedy is just not M. Dube's forte. Had Dube been content not to overstep his undoubted talent for the sweet little vignettes of French-Canadian life the play might have disappointed by its thinness. As it is, it disappoints by its pretentiousness.

Dube's feeling for the theatrical moment, however, is occasionally rewarding. There are individual little events with a touching bittersweet quality. Often they are gimmicks, such as the young lovers hiding in the shadows while the bachelor and the spinster act out a painful scene, but usually they come off fairly successfully.

And the individual characterizations although never very deep are always charming. Here the company is of great assistance. It is in fact often difficult to tell how much of the characterization is due to Dube and how much to the performances. Three especially stand out, Jean Gascon and Huguette Olinay, as the old couple and Denise Pelletier as the spinster.

The one set in keeping with the play is thin, charming, and smells of lilacs. The direction although it is often slow and plodding is on the whole adequate.

There is at least one refreshing thing about Time of the Lilacs. It is almost alone among plays that have come out of Canada in that it can be talked about as a play and not as that queer creature the "Canadian-play". Though to be sure the play is unmistakably Canadian. It could have been written now.

where, but in French Canada it springs from the same ground that nurtured "The Plouffe Family."

For all its faults, The Time of the Lilacs is well worth seeing, and the quality of the acting gives the impression that the Moliere plays also being done this week at the Alex are not to be missed. Especially for its lack of a self-conscious attempt to produce a Canadian national play. Time of the Lilacs bears looking at in a province that has produced things like "Bright Sun at Midnight" and "The Ottawa Man."

Tilting With Windmills

"O evil Freston, use me as you may! I know that love, mercy and devotion will prevail!" And with these words another idealist comes crashing to the earth.

Such is the conclusion of the windmill scene from the Russian Don Quixote, now playing at the Bellevue Theatre, alongside another celebrated Soviet film, The Forty-First—surely the most intriguing double bill anywhere in Toronto.

The film star Nikolai Cherkasov, who established himself as Russia's most esteemed actor in Alexander Nevsky and Ivan the Terrible. This summer, he won the best actor's award at the Stratford Film Festival, for his work in this film. Don Quixote also placed third at the Vancouver Film Festival.

Director Grigori Kozintsev has very wisely refrained from throwing too much of the original novel into the screenplay; as it is, the film runs at least two hours, and contained the most famous episodes of the Cervantes story, including the battle with the windmills.

Perhaps the most striking change in adapting the novel to the cinema is in the atmosphere; there is no real evocation of sunny 17th century Spain; on the other hand, there is no hint of the darkly passionate Russian atmosphere anywhere in evidence either. The scenes that Moskvina has captured on film are not of this world, just as Don Quixote himself is not. The strange, muted hues of Soviet color enhance the unreality of the film, highlighting and transforming the arid wastes of the Crimean landscape.

The atmosphere is at its eeriest and most oppressive in the highly stylized court scenes, where the courtiers' movements, slow and stately, resemble the patterns of a sarabande.

Nikolai Cherkasov's Don is a noble, pathetic, and compassionate figure, a saint in a world that has no place for saints, and thereby sitting on the horns of a 17th Century dilemma.

Yuri Tolubeyev's Sancho is raucous and exuberant, while L. Kasyanova (Aldonsa) and T. Agamirova (Altisidora) demonstrate the new look in Soviet films—leading ladies who are beautiful as well as talented.

While never slick, the editing is always exciting, especially in the magnificent lateral tracking shot among the rocky gorges, with Quixote and Sancho silhouetted against the pale blue sky, or in the cellar scene, where the wine sacks take on grotesque and frightening shapes.

And it is encouraging to note that the Russians have not perverted the novel to their own ideological ends. It is a film that should, and must, be seen.

Danish Baritone At Hart House

The Hart House Music Committee's series of Sunday evening concerts resumed activities this week with the Danish baritone Aksel Schiotz singing a program predominantly lieder. Mario Bernardi accompanied at the piano.

Schiotz, who holds a knighthood from King Christian X, started his career as a tenor, but to-day, his rich baritone in its lowest register could rival the fullness of the best Russian basses. Bernardi, on the other hand, was only moderately interpretive in much of the piano work.

One could criticize, perhaps, two features of Schiotz's technique. One is that he has a tendency to bellow sudden high notes; the other, that often intertonic syllables aren't audible in delicate passages.

But his interpretation and enunciation were most satisfying. We noticed this markedly in Schubert's "Der Doppelgänger", with words by Heine. It's a song concerning a lover who has been replaced in the affections of his beloved by another, the "double" of the title. In Schiotz's deeply felt handling of the work, we felt the heart-break, despair, and anguish which the lover feels. The emotion was often vehement, but never artificial or expressed in too polished a manner.

Again, in Brahms' "Wir Wandeln", Schiotz transferred well the sense of anxiety and deep affection of Daumer's text. His phrasing was always careful and apt.

Schiotz sang several light songs, as well, affording a sort of comic relief. Such were Brahms' "Der Salamander", Wolf's "Der Musikanter", and "Drick ur Ditt Glas" (Empty your Glass) by the relatively unknown eighteenth-century Swede, Bellman.

Barber, Hindemith, Nielsen, and Tchaikovsky were also represented on this well balanced program. The second concert in the series is in two weeks' time, November 9th, when the soprano Ilona Kombrink will sing.

Bon Voyage moa woa foa hhoa

At last perhaps Toronto can hope for a successful run on Broadway—at any rate we have reason to believe that Barry Morse's production of SALAD DAYS has a good chance as any to succeed, after its triumphant run here at the Crest Theatre.

SALAD DAYS has proved itself to be one of the most popular English musicals ever to hit the London stage. Written by Dorothy Reynolds with lyrics by Julian Stude, this delightful musical about students and an old piano, is now finally preparing to make its onslaught on the Americans; and no production could be more fitted for this task than the one we witnessed here by Barry Morse and his company.

Full honours go to Barry Morse in this enterprise, even Julian Stude (who has just arrived in Toronto) could not find fault with his production, and with this auspicious omen, we wish them all the best. Good luck to 'em! . . .

With slightly over one-third of the required subscription sales the Hart House Orchestra Associates intend to go on with the first concert this Saturday night.

The programme consists of Mozart's Divertimento for Two Horns and Strings, K. 334, the Concertone K.190 for two violins and orchestra and the Divertimento No. 11, K. 251. Albert Pratz, concertmaster of the CBC Symphony Orchestra will play the first violin solo in the Concertone, opposite Morry Kernerman. The orchestra itself will be augmented by two horns and two oboes. The well-known oboist Perry Bauman will play first desk.

The concert, conducted by Dr. Boyd Neel will take place in the Great Hall of Hart House. Subscribers are also welcome to all of the orchestra's rehearsals the next of which will take place in the Conservatory's west hall on Friday at 8.00 p.m.

The next concert in the series, on December 6, will feature an all-Vivaldi programme. Soloist will be the first flautist of the Toronto Symphony, Nicholas Fiore. Mr. Fiore will be heard in one of the Red Priest's flute concerti and one of the piccolo concerti. Carol Pack, harpsichord will augment the orchestra in this concert.

Students subscriptions for the five concerts are $3.50-70 cents per concert. Individual tickets may also be obtained at $1 per concert. Non-students will pay $7.00 for their subscriptions $2.00 for an individual concert.

Tickets are available at the Hall Porter's Desk, Hart House, the SAC office and at Promenade Music Centre; they will also be on sale outside the Vic Union at noon hour and outside the Faculty of Arts office at the same time.

The Associates have cried wolf often but this time the wolf is at the door. Will this campus allow the group of musicians which gained such praise at Brussels to fade away? To quote La Libre Belgique, Brussels, "The Hart House Orchestra can take its place among the best chamber orchestras of to-day." But can it take its place on this campus? —Imola Ripietti.

Dents, Vic, Follies Rehearse Shows

Auditions got under way Monday for Dentatics '58, the annual revue show of the Dentistry Faculty. Rehearsals for Victoria College's Bob Revue and the University College Follies were proceeding according to schedule.

Dentatics '58, a book show and musical comedy, this year presents a fake-off on the Grey Cup, producer Marc Legault said last night.

Script, original songs and music, have been written by Don Knowles and Barry Sable. Featured is a 20-girl chorus line, directed by Shiela Pennington.

The show, directed by Al Mills and produced by Marc Legault, "promises to be Dents' best," Legault said.

There will be two stagings, both on Dec. 8.

Rehearsals for the Bob Revue and UC Follies have been in full swing for several weeks.

Following established tradition, the Vic Bob Revue will be the first college show to be produced this year. The story centres around the financial difficulties of Vic, when a very large first year enrolment hits the college.

Needing money desperately the boys disguise themselves as boy-scouts, hoping in this way to obtain money from a financier. The girls, unaware of the boys' disguise, dress themselves up as girl-guides.

Tickets went on sale yesterday for Vic's Bob Revue which is being staged Nov. 3-5.

UC Follies centres around the eternal love triangle. An engineer, UC arts student, and a "gun-moll" engineering girl are involved in the triangle.

Choreographer for the show is Elizabeth Pollmer, a professional ballet dancer who has danced with leading ballet companies throughout the world.

UC Follies claims to be the only show on the campus with a real car on stage.

Tickets are being sold for the Follies now. The show is to be held Nov. 13-15.

Find Burial Site Near Bradford

The Department of Anthropology is excavating at an Indian site near Bradford, where remains of fifteen skeletons have already been uncovered, anthropology Professor Dr. Norman Emerson announced yesterday.

Field director for the dig, he was first informed of the site two weeks ago by the Ontario Provincial Police.

Eleven skeletons had been uncovered on the Bothamworth farm during the excavation of a gravel pit; four more have since been recovered by members of the Department of Anthropology.

These last four burials are each separate and are all different. One is doubled up, as is another, but with an extra skull, one consists of a shoulder blade, an arm and some fingers, and the last is completely dismembered.

The only artifact found with the burials was a bone projectile point, which resembles those previously found at the Black Creek site near Toronto. This would suggest Iroquois origin.

"Three adze blades found near the burials, as well as the rotary chewing pattern and lack of caries in the teeth, indicate that we are dealing with a pre-Iroquois culture," Dr. Emerson said.

But a village site found last Sunday near the burials, is of the Lalonde or Middle Iroquois culture.

"The burials appear to be enemies of the Iroquois, who were killed in battle and tossed into these graves," Dr. Emerson said.

McGill Creates Post For J. W. McConnell

MONTREAL (CUP) — The appointment of Mr. J. W. McConnell as McGill University's first Governor Emeritus was announced by the university board of governors last Wednesday.

The move followed an announcement Oct. 21, that three members of the board had resigned. They were Mr. J. W. McConnell, the senior governor, Mr. B. C. Gardner, Chancellor, and Mr. Sydney Dobson, a member of the Board.

Mr. McConnell is McGill's greatest single benefactor. From 1911 to his latest gift of approximately $4,500,000, he has donated more than $13,500,000 to the university.

In addition he has served for many years as chairman of the Nominating Committee for membership of the Board of Governors and was chairman of the University's Investment Committee.

Wednesday's announcement said the new post was created so governors who had served the university with distinction but no longer desired to be active members of the board might be enabled to maintain close contact with McGill.

The new appointment carries with it the provision that Governors Emeritus shall have the right to attend meetings, as well as all other university functions, and to participate fully in discussions of university problems.

Resolved PC Govt Aged Debate Held Next Week

Names of the two campus Liberal debaters who will debate against the Progressive Conservatives on the resolution "Resolved that the Frost Government is Aged, Incompetent and Irresponsible" were released last night by Liberal president Jim Doris. They are Ken Wyman (III UC) and Phil Goulston (II UC).

The debate will take place in Trinity's Convocation Hall at 8 p.m. Nov. 6.

PC debaters, announced previously, are Gordon Ross (I Law) and Jeremy Johnson (IV Trin).

The Liberals will debate with campus CCFers on "Resolved that the World has No Need for Socialism" at a later date.

Tonight will see a CCF discussion group in the Copper Room of Victoria's Wymilwood under the leadership of Romaine Pitt (IV UC).

Topic is "Economic Aspects of Democratic Socialism". CCF president Gerry Caplan yesterday called the meeting "a logical follow-up to the last discussion group at which we discussed philosophical ideals."

Temperance Now Non-U Concept of Authors, Artists

"We have been indoctrinated against temperance."

"The word temperance has been changed from one of high prestige to one of slightly non-U."

These words were uttered by Dr. J. K. W. Ferguson, Director of the Connaught Medical Laboratories who spoke yesterday to over 60 staff and students in one of the series of lectures on "Controversial Ethics", presented by the SCM.

After the lecture Dr. Ferguson replied to many questions and partook in the highly informative discussion period.

Artists, writers, cartoonists and dramatists are responsible for making non-drinkers non-U, according to Dr. Ferguson.

Actually most people are for temperance, but their ideas of the meaning of the word vary greatly. "To some it means moderate usage, while to others total abstinence," Dr. Ferguson said. "For alcoholism, after all, is a matter of degree and can be one glass or ten glasses drunk."

Some alcoholics are able to go on for twenty or more years by regulating their drinking to fixed hours, while others limit themselves to weekend splurges. "But they all run into trouble sooner or later," Dr. Ferguson said. Temperance for these people usually means total abstinence.

"It is important that young people recognize early in life that as soon as we forget that alcoholism is a real danger to all of us, it is easy to slip into that very danger," Dr. Ferguson concluded.

first lecture on alaska

"Alaska, the Forty-ninth State" will be the topic of the presidential address at the first meeting of the Royal Canadian Institute Saturday.

President L. Everett Jaquith will give his lecture at the first meeting of the season in Convocation Hall at 8.15 p.m. The lecture is open to the public and will be illustrated with colored slides and motion pictures.

Dr. Jaquith will describe the natural features, people, history, and economic developments of Alaska.

Conacher Is Mustang Key In Crucial Weekend Tilt With Determined Blues

The key factor to Varsity Blues' hopes for the Intercollegiate football title lie not in Dalt White's fire-up crew but in the distant camp of Western's do-or-die Mustangs. And they lie in one individual—Lionel Conacher.

The Little Train suffered an ankle injury October 18 in the Western-McGill game and has been out of action ever since. He was confined to hospital for four days. Reports from London say Conacher worked out with the team last night, but it is not known whether he will be at full power come Saturday.

A probable 60-minute man in the Mustang lineup (if he's in healthy condition), Conacher is Western's bread and butter backfielder. Without him, Mustangs could suffer.

Coach John Metras expects Conacher to be in uniform Saturday, when Varsity can wrap up their first intercollegiate title since 1954 with a victory.

And since Western has their backs to the wall, and face a MUST game, it is highly probable Conacher will play. But whether or not he will play as the usual Little Train remains to be seen.

Conacher, despite continual warnings from Coach Metras, insists on running like a two-legged telephone pole, i.e. driving legs, but a trunk as straight as an arrow.

With one weak ankle, and ankle-lacking the simplest way to bring Mr. C. to earth, the Little Train may be hampered by a hard hitting Varsity defensive corps that Coach White is moulding into top form for the crucial battle.

With 26-20 and 34-18 wins under the belts, Blues are favored to whip the Western crew in their own back yard and return home with the championship.

Coach Metras has different ideas, but admitted that his team needs Conacher in order to upset Varsity and force a post-season playoff.

"For us to be at our strongest, we need (Meco) Poliziani on defence and Connie going both ways. We'll need all our men at their very best to beat Varsity," he opined.

In Western's favor for the crucial game is their switch to the old Diamond-T formation. With Art Turner in a deep tail-back position and Frank Cosentino at the T-quarter slot, an added threat appears.

Cosentino is a potential passer-receiver, and caught one aerial against McGill last week that was good for a touchdown.

As Blues' mentor Dalt White sees it, this added threat is solidly in Western's favor, but, says Dalt, it's not likely Metras will change his basic running offense much.

Some members of the present Varsity team have played against the Diamond-T, and this is a solid factor on Blues' favor.

Varsity is expected to go with much the same balanced offence that has carried them to victory in their five league games to date.

With Pete Joyce and Tim Reid excelling on the ground, and quarterback Brian Aston hitting at a 54.8 passing percentage to date, Blues have a diversified attack to throw at Western.

Blue Room: Reid has covered 393 yards in 69 attempts for a 5.7 average, with Joyce toting the pigskin 84 times for 522 yards and a 6.2 average . . .

Joyce won't be eligible in the annual CRU draft next winter . . . He's already Ottawa property.

Varsity 2nd In Harrier

LONDON, Oct. 25 — University of Western Ontario today won a cross country meet in competition with University of Toronto, and Wayne University of Detroit.

The four man teams ran over a course measuring four and one half miles.

Western defeated Toronto, the runners up, by a 25-11 count. In cross country competitions, the low score counts.

Toronto gained second spot by defeating Wayne 20-16.

Don Bell, who last week won the mile and came second in the half mile Intercollegiate races, was the top Toronto runner as he finished in the fourth spot.

Michael Berger caught two Wayne runners at the tape and squeaked out a sixth place standing.

The other Toronto runners, Dick Hamilton and Bill Varey, placed 9th and 14th respectively.

The intercollegiate finals are at OAC on Saturday, Nov. 8th.

varsity sports editor

It's not what you'd call the longest sports' editorial in Varsity history, but comments to follow are short and to the point on other newspaper writings that were the same way.

Perusal of an afternoon Toronto paper Monday brought to light an interesting paragraph or two, headed by a bold-face caption reading: HORRIBLE FIELD.

It appears that a reporter covering the Toronto-Ottawa game in Varsity Stadium last Saturday considered the field "muddy and dangerous, unworthy of professional football."

And the reporter goes on to comment: "Hard in the summer, bare of grass all year, the Varsity field is below the standard pro football should have. No wonder the Argonauts are taking their average $75,000 rent to the CNE."

This reporter apparently failed to enquire as to the circumstances before blasting our stadium turf. The field was seeded three times before the current football season.

That was not a negligible expense, nor would be a resodding job. One Toronto firm gave us a $5,000 estimate for putting new sod on the field.

Varsity Stadium was in as good shape as any football field before the first pre-season exhibition tilt this year.

That was played in a driving rain, and we'll admit there is nothing more damaging to a football field than 24 football players and a handful of officials digging in to a muddy turf.

But, Mr. Reporter, if you have a solution for keeping even the greenest of lawns in perfect shape despite conditions mentioned in the preceding paragraph, our athletic officials would be glad to hear it.

Argonauts, Blues and Baby Blues all use Varsity Stadium. That's at least one game a week, and sometimes two. Grass is just like a baby—it won't grow up in six days.

We'd be willing to wager that if Argos play three games in the rain (and there have been more than that in Varsity Stadium this year) at the CNE grounds next year, the reporter under fire would have grounds to repeat his comments.

And we'll chuckle.

Pro Scouts Take In Vic, Trinity Contest

By A REPORTER

The annual unsponsored game of football was held in Varsity Stadium yesterday between those perennial powerhouses of interfaculty athletics, Victoria and Trinity Colleges.

Although urged on by three of the weirdest looking cheerleaders seen on campus in some time, Trinity couldn't cope with the strong Vic squad.

The game was featured by strong line play, and only one touchdown was scored, that by a certain S. Potter who ran almost 66 yards with a Trinity punt.

Sign Will Be Returned By Thieving Renegades

Phi Delta Epsilon fraternity was assured yesterday by the Big Seven Renegades that their stolen sign will be returned as soon as possible.

The move was a result of a donation of $10 to the United Appeal by the fraternity last Friday.

"The theft was entirely a prank," the Renegades said. "We offer our deepest apologies, and assure you your plaque is in good hands."

Phi Delta Epsilon feels the matter has been satisfactorily ended.

Beta Sigma Rho is still minus a trophy cup, and Pi Lambda Phi has found their door plaque as well as two group pictures missing.

These two fraternities have not as yet decided whether to make a $10 donation to the United Appeal.

Several articles have been returned by a group which is familiar to at least some of the fraternities. These items were the props for a "be a crook" party.

Will Send Letters To Student Editors Fired

By SUSIE BRESLIN
Varsity Staff Reporter

The Students' Administrative Council rose from the shambles of dissension last night to draft a resounding motion of support for students at the Universities of Ottawa and Montreal.

A unanimous motion charged administrations of the two universities with "thwarting of academic freedom and freedom of the press."

The council pledged its "full support to the students involved", and ordered copies of the motion to be sent to all student editors in Quebec and Ontario and student presidents of U of O and U of M.

Amid accusations of "timidity" she said. Therefore the crisis is completely different from anything which might happen at U of T under similar circumstances.

Miss Poy read an alternative letter to be sent to student presidents and newspaper staffs at the two universities.

"We sincerely regret their dismissal", the letter said of the editors. "We hope the efficiency of news reporting will be resumed shortly", and assured sympathy from "your sister university".

UC rep Marv Catzman called the letter "an insult". Sending it would be like "sending a letter to the United States government the day after Pearl Harbor saying 'hear you had a little trouble — sorry,'" he said.

Traditional coffee and biscuits were ignored at the recess as members lobbied furiously seeking a compromise.

Ten minutes after the resumption of business, the two motions were passed unanimously.

Primary reason for new unanimity after the break was realization by council members that letters would not necessarily be sent to university administrations.

Varsity editor Doug Marshall told council members the present conflict at the U of O was based on interference by administration in purely student activities.

He said the reason why the editors had been fired did not enter into the issue.

Most council members felt a letter of disapproval sent directly by the SAC to university authorities would be out of place.

Katzman then moved the amendment to the original motion which was passed unanimously.

After hearty table thumping, the SAC passed on tranquilly to the Music Committee report.

—VSP Palm.

YES— and unanimously is the final answer of the Student's Administrative Council last night as it considered whether or not to vote support to three student editors dismissed by authorities at the University of Ottawa.

SAC Downs Grand Plan For Plush Reception Room

The Students' Administrative Council last night defeated a motion to appropriate $2,500 for furnishing the SAC president's office and a lounge for representatives.

SAC president Vince Kelly, supporting the motion, said a comfortable lounge was needed for prestige reasons.

"Toronto is the largest university in the country, and we should be able to entertain guests in decent surroundings," he said.

Money for the furnishing would have come out of the SAC's $16,000 capital reserve, finance chairman Barry Moore said.

Speaking against the motion, Vic rep Dave Lee said he did not think prestige reasons were great enough for spending so much money.

Medical rep Bob Lee said he thought the money could be put to better use.

The motion was defeated 12-11. Other finance business discussed by the SAC included the question of parking on a vacant lot north of the Dentistry building.

Finance commissioner Barry Moore said the lot would be used next March to build new superintendent's quarters.

Until then, he said, the SAC could make some $1,500 by charging students 25 cents a day to park.

There is room for 160 students, he said, and cost of levelling the lot and supplying parking attendants would be $1,000.

Dents rep Norman Levine was appointed to investigate the matter.

— welcomed Hugh Wallis as the new Graduate Studies rep — acknowledged Dean A. J. Earp as a faculty adviser to the council — looked guilty when chairman Jerry Case told them the meetings were supposed to start at 7 p.m.

— agreed with Trinity rep Alec Havriant that maybe council members were not always the best delegates to external conferences

— confused chairman Jerry Case about the spirit of amendments — glowed with the pride of fame when a record number of nine spectators showed up

— glowered when they learned the nine spectators represented the UC Lit en masse — were congratulated by chairman Case on their conduct — pretended not to notice alert Varsity photographers — welcomed the coffee break as they have never welcomed it before — ignored Ronald Raison when they discussed possibilities of student parking stickers — became very involved in the various combinations of the word "tolerance"

— adjourned.

SAC At A Glance

Besides supporting their brother Councils at the universities of Ottawa and Montreal, the Students' Administrative Council last night:

Call Police Unless Painting Returned

St. Hilda's College authorities are threatening police action unless a painting stolen from the college Tuesday night is returned—free of ransom.

The painting—a Rudolf Beny original valued at about $400—was taken from the resident front hall sometime between 5 and 7 p.m. Tuesday.

A note on the empty wall said it could be reclaimed Thursday at the SAC building on receipt of $10.

St. Hilda's Head of College Marilyn Jeckell said the college had no intention of paying the required sum out would take definite steps to get the painting back.

"We are waiting until 5 p.m. tonight," Miss Jeckell said. "If the painting is not at the SAC by then we will ask police to take over."

New Party Hits Trouble Rules Say It's Not Legal

U of T's new political parties are waiting for constitutional changes to allow them to take part in the annual Model Parliament.

Leaders of the parties hope there will be an amendment to the U of T Debating Union's constitution which now bars them from the Parliament.

The clause—which allows only parties elected to the federal Commons in the last election—would bar Canada's Social Credit party, which forms the governments of Alberta and British Columbia.

Social Revisionist leader Tom Drew-Brook criticized the UTDU constitution for barring new parties. Students do not come to universities to support the established political parties, he said.

Students in the annual Model Parliament take themselves too seriously. There should be some method for them "to air their gripes" and stay away from established political creeds, he said.

One section of the Drew-Brook platform is abolition of horse watering troughs on Bloor Street.

One leader of the other new party, Tim Reid, said his party would reconsider its announced platform if the UTDU revises its constitution to allow new parties.

He hoped to find solutions to many student and staff problems through the new party, he said.

Council Names Literary Editor

Fourth-year student John Robert Columbo was appointed editor of the campus literary magazine last night.

The Student's Administrative Council ratified the appointment at the recommendation of publications commissioner Alex Havriant.

Columbo is a University College student majoring in Honours Philosophy and English. He is editor of the UC Gargoyle this year.

springhill

They do their work far beneath the surface of the earth and they are called draegermen.

They work with coal-dust in their mouths and coal-gas in their lungs. They work with their faces ringed and caked with black around goggles and lamps cutting the darkness where men have died.

In their hands are hammers and drills and in their stomachs the agonizing pain of urgency and time running out.

Through walls of stone and coal where men were never meant to go they work with hope and with a love we don't understand any more.

Yesterday afternoon their work was rewarded. Through a broken air line 13,000 feet below Springhill, Nova Scotia, a draegerman heard the voice of a man named Gorley Kemp and learned that 12 men lived and they had not worked for nothing.

The draegerman toiling through the earth like a mechanized mole with a burning mission hearing the voice of Gorley Kemp, a miner, is a very important thing.

Important to a small child lugging his books home from school in Springhill and important to a wife who had waited so many hours to cry for joy when she had never cried in despair.

Important, too, for many more wives, children and parents who still wait in Springhill.

And it is very important for us, for everyone.

Perhaps it is trite to say this. Maybe it is out of our province to comment at all on what has happened and continues to happen in Springhill, Nova Scotia.

But events in Springhill, events that continued through last night and continue through this morning as we drag ourselves from complacent kitchens to lazy lecture halls, are things with meaning.

In our well-fed life where cross-walks present the greatest daily threat and a bank balance or signer ring our only obligations, we cannot ever forget what is happening beneath the dreary wooden homes and the soot-blackened collieries of Springhill, Nova Scotia.

Our Readers Write:

A Blind Dog Howls

Dear Sir:

The Blinded Dog Society wishes to take exception to Miss Liz Binks' column, Men and Angels, in Tuesday's Varsity.

The spirit shown by the undergraduates of this university is almost a negative quantity. This year that spirit has been even poorer than in the past.

Miss Binks seems to feel that by running down other people's attempts to remedy this lack she is in some weird way aiding the situation. This critical destructive attitude is not only confined to Miss Binks; rather it permeates several of the Varsity staff. Some writers on this paper must think of themselves as some sort of a god whose power and even duty it is to analyze, rationalize, criticize, and tear apart the actions of others both as individuals and collectively.

They lament the "student apathy" on campus and say that "graduates boast of escapades in their day which make ours look pretty anemic".

The Blinded Dog Society undertook to kidnap campus leaders to try and create a little spirit and possibly raise some money for the UA campaign. Miss Binks says it was unsuccessful. If there was any fault it lies in the fact that the Society members were too trusting and tender-hearted.

One hostage had to be in Cleveland the following day. He was told he would be released and returned in time. Instead he chose to spend the night hitch-hiking back to town. That was his privilege.

Another hostage had a date on Friday night — his first in five months. We felt sorry for him—he returned in time.

Still another leader was returned because the college to which he belonged threatened the expulsion from residence of all those who might have had any connection with the incident. The Society did not want any innocent people harmed.

One faculty presented the Society with a cheque and then stopped payment on it. Another collected the required ransom but failed to pay it.

The fault lies not with the Blinded Dogs; rather it shows the same niggardly self-centered attitude so prevalent on this campus.

The whole purpose of this "prank"—as Miss Binks puts it—was not so much to help the UA campaign, which fell flat on its face through this same self-centeredness, as to spice a dull situation with a little spirit.

It was not accepted in the harmless fun-loving spirit it was intended. We feel very sincerely sorry for those narrow-minded people who have no sense of humor.

Nor is this letter an attempt to condone vandalism. The Blinded Dog Society brought no harm to any individual or to any one group. There was no repercussion which caused anyone embarrassment or hurt.

The Society has never and will never engage in vandalism of any sort, and we feel fully justified in condemning the inferences in Miss Binks' column.

Our prank was an honest attempt to create a little spirit. Miss Binks is quite right in one respect. It failed in its purpose.

There is no spirit at this university.

The Blinded Dog Society.

Dear Sir:

NFCUS does rhyme with discuss and the Varsity rhymes with university — but, alas, is no connection in either case.

Just a note to the unsophisticated sophisticated on the NFCUS Photo Contest. I personally administer the NFCUS Photo Contest without interference from other universities or the NFCUS National Office.

The congress most certainly does not arrange the contest (this I am sure you, personally, are quite aware of).

As for the fact that no-one pays any attention to it let me state two examples. The contest last year had double the number of entries of the year previous. This year we have increased our prize money and will not be at all surprised at over 2,000 entries. Secondly, the Varsity ran a few inches of copy as well as a cut of one of the winning photos last week. Thank-you, I appreciated the publicity very much.

Campus Tension High As THE Game Nears

Tension mounts across the campus as Varsity Blues enter their final workouts before the Game of Games, to be enacted on the University of Western Ontario stage Saturday.

A mass exodus is expected Friday evening and Saturday morning as Varsity fans head for J. W. Little Memorial Stadium to cheer their favorites to victory in the crucial contest.

The circumstances are an old, old story.

A Varsity win, coupled with a Queen's victory over McGill or a tie in the latter game, will give Toronto their first Yates Cup since 1954.

A Western win will make a

Sports Editor Protests Error Threatens Suit

Varsity sports editor John Brooks last night indicated he is considering libel action against the news staff of this newspaper. The possible suit followed a picture which appeared in yesterday's edition.

A caption under the front-page photograph identified Brooks as coach of two women's football teams, and called Trinity tackle Ann Perdue a "Vic girl".

"This careless mistake is definitely an example of the athletic apathy shown by the news staff of The Varsity. Why, one reporter asked me the other day if Varsity could win the Mulock Cup by beating Ottawa Tiger-Cats this Saturday," Brooks said.

"What makes the error even more ridiculous is that I was in the office less than an hour before that caption was written. I was wearing a Trinity sweater, singing Trinity songs, and I have a red and black ribbon in my typewriter," he added.

A news staff spokesman expressed regret over the error, and issued the following statement:

"It was our firm and unbiased Victorian opinion that John Brooks was coach of two women's football teams. In view of the error, we will probably settle out of court."

Brooks said he would consider withdrawal of possible legal action if The Varsity news staff makes a personal apology, in print, to Victoria coach Milt Jewell and his team.

post-season playoff necessary. If that is the case, site of the sudden-death battle will be decided by a flip of the coin.

Blues enter the game minus defensive halfback Ian Knowles, the team's first serious injury of the season. Knowles is still on the sidelines with sprained knee ligaments.

Mustangs' problems injury-wise are more severe. Lionel Conacher is below par with leg and ankle injuries. His playing condition for Saturday remains a question mark.

A large portion of any Western hopes of pulling successful defence of their title out of the fire rests on the Little Train. Another sizeable chunk depends on the Diamond-T.

If Blues can stall the added potential in the revised formation — and Coach Dalt White thinks they can — Varsity will be a tough team to hold back.

Possessing a double-barrelled ground attack, aerial potential that has accounted for many touchdowns, and a solid defensive unit that has held the opposition to less than two majors a game, Blues have more all-round power than Western.

But Mustangs have a kid called Frank Cosentino, who threatens to put Champion spark plugs out of business with his rah-rah type of football.

And they've got an upstart halfback named Meco Poliziani, who filled in for the injured Conacher last weekend, and ran rampant against McGill Redmen.

But that's something Varsity Blues realize. They've had two comparatively soft games against Queen's, and an average observer would think over-confidence to be high.

Not so. Blues know what the approaching game means. They know what a victory signifies, and they realize the result of a loss. The latter, they don't want.

Interfaculty Summary

Wycliffe rolled to their third consecutive win in Division II soccer yesterday as they defeated Architecture 2-0.

In all three games the score has been exactly the same.

John Hayes, a freshman, scored both goals. Each came at the closing minutes of a half.

Wycliffe leads Division II soccer with six points, while Forestry are runners up with four.

Senior Skule and St. Mike's A tied 2-2, in other soccer play. Half-time score was 1-1.

Magiso and Ochrym tallied for SPS, while Detullio and Ferreira netted the Irish goals.

Skule G came from behind to defeat UC Sammies, 9-15, 15-13, 15-7 in volleyball action.

Zamboni Here, Ice In Blues Seek Fifth Win

By GENE GLISKY
Varsity Staff Reporter

As of last night, that slippery, cold stuff is back to cover the cement at Varsity Arena.

The coming of the ice, a little thin and cracked, wet in spots, and not too flat in others, heralds a big, big season of hockey with the Blues.

The Arena sports a new floor, a rejuvenated freezing system, and the latest in inter-period entertainment the "Zamboni".

Zamboni, neither a magician nor an operatic tenor, is the latest in ice machines, creating (it is said) the smoothest, slickest ice in the shortest (it is said) possible time.

These impressive preparations are only fitting. This can be the record-breaking year for the hockey Blues.

Last year, the Blues, winning the Queen's Cup for the fourth consecutive time, tied the record previously shared by Queen's and McGill.

This season the Blues may rewrite the record books. Can they do it?

Jack Kennedy — head coach, thinks so.

Jack Wheildrake — assistant coach, knows so.

A dozen returning veteran players, would like to see who'll stop them.

Half a dozen rookies, fresh from Junior A ranks, certainly hope so, while all the Varsity hockey fans, shall soon know.

With a maximum of four practices under their shin pads, the Blues visit Scarborough Arena Monday, Nov. 3, to take on Turk Broda's Marlboros.

Distaffers Play Softball Semis; Vic Tops Irish

By PAM HILL

The women's softball season is almost ended. The semi-finals will be over tomorrow, and the finals will be played during the noon hours of Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday at the Stadium.

In the third league (comprised of teams from PHE I, P&OT, Vic M and St. Mike's), PHE got a bye into the finals by defeating the second-place P&OT team.

The winner is to be decided by the total number of runs at the completion of two games. To date, Victoria leads St. Mike's, nine runs to three. The second game of this semi-final round will be played at Varsity Stadium today at noon.

All these teams are playing pretty top-notch softball (for women), so come out and have a gander.

Over tea this afternoon, I found out that badminton goes on in the Drill Hall every Wednesday evening from 7:00 p.m. to 10:00 p.m. This sounds pretty good because it's open to anybody, whether you've ever played before or not, and you can even be supplied with the equipment.

Miss Forester or somebody is guaranteed to be there, which case there'll always be a game on hand. So, if you're keen on the game, or interested in learning, or coaching, or anything to do with badminton... might see you there sometime.

Dents Edge Woodsmen

The score followed a recovery of a fumble on a punt by Forestry.

John Houston kicked the single that gave Dents their slim lead at half time.

On Wednesday, Jr. SPS trampled Medicine by a 19-2 score. Touchdowns were scored by McTaggart (2) and Loneragan for the Jr. Engineers who led all the way.

Trinity meets Sr. SPS on the back campus in today's football action. The Panthers are undefeated in Group I play.

Faith Healing Verifiable Detroit Theolog Claims

Spiritual healing was given a thorough examination at a Canterbury luncheon yesterday when Canon Robert D. Bohaker of the Anglican cathedral of Detroit, Mich., visited the newly-established Anglican centre.

Joining in the discussion with some 55 students were Dean J. A.

MacFarlane of the Faculty of Medicine and Dr. R. W. Carveth. healing is health of the soul," Canon Bohaker said, "But often there is a connection between spiritual and physical illness."

The proper approach to this work is in conjunction with doctors and psychologists working as a team, he said.

"In recent years science has lost faith in its own ability to solve all problems," he said. "The development of psychosomatic medicine has made the world aware of non-medical factors in human illness."

Canon Bohaker told students his daughter had made a phenomenal recovery from polio which doctors ascribed to the power of prayer.

"It was at this time that I decided to give my life to work in this field," he said.

Both Dean MacFarlane and Dr. Carveth emphasized the importance of clergy and doctors working together. "The spiritual healing missioner who keeps people from needed medical help bears a great responsibility," said Dr. Carveth.

Canon Bohaker said that the Anglican Church was taking steps to set up standards in the work of spiritual healing. "After many centuries the Church is again taking this work seriously," he said.

We Lean On U.S. Claims Speaker

Canadians are afraid to invest in situations they are not sure about, a U of T student told a CCF club meeting last night.

Romain Pitt, a fourth year political science student, was leading a discussion on the economic aspect of democratic socialism.

More than 20 club members, a quarter of them women, attended the meeting.

"As long as Canada is in the position it is in relation to the United States, our party will have to be very careful in its economic planning," said Pitt. "We depend largely on the goodwill of the States."

Following his remark on the hesitation of Canadians to invest in an unsure thing, Pitt said, "Americans are ready to invest."

American investment is largely in risk industry, a speaker from the floor said. He quoted 43 percent of Canada's industry to be under the control of Americans.

Questioned whether a social ist government in Canada would cause a decline in American investment Pitt said, "Nationalization will result in a transitional period when our standard of living will stop."

Speakers from the floor maintained that such would be beneficial in the long run. "Russians have trouble convincing the populace that television is temporarily not so important as Sputniks," a speaker said. "Canadians have to be convinced similarly."

When the discussion centered again on American industry in Canada, a member said, "A socially conscious government is necessary in Canada to normalize American control."

Pitt stressed that profit is not essential in socialized industry. Nationalization was defined as government control and operation, while socialization was defined as community participation.

The important consideration, said Pitt, is whether an organization is a service to the community, not whether it shows profit. Provided, he added, that it remains within the planned economy.

U of O Council Negotiates As Editors Gain Support

OTTAWA — CUP — Developments are coming fast here as students on the University of Ottawa campus gain nation-wide support in their fight against administration authorities. The Students' Federation is scheduled to meet Rev. Leonard Ducharme, Dean of Men, today to negotiate the status of the three student editors of La Rotonde dismissed by authorities. Father Ducharme fired Louis Cliche, Pierre Trudle and Roger Roy from their posts a week ago. Monday the student council refused to accept resignations offered by the three editors because Father Ducharme's action threatened students' control of their own activities.

Earlier this week U of O Council, the Rev. Father Legare, sent a note to Prud'homme saying the affair was to be handled by Father Ducharme.

Student president Marcelle Prud'homme yesterday told of a special meeting called Wednesday by one of the 16 council members.

The informal meeting was called by Robert Baron, the fourth-year medical student who seconded the council's motion Monday not to accept the editorial board's resignation.

He suggested to other council members that they renege on their stand and sign a declaration saying they had been in error in refusing to accept the resignation.

Other council members refused to do this, Prud'homme said in a telephone conversation to Toronto student President Vince Kelly yesterday.

Prud'homme told Kelly that Baron, whose mother works in the U of O library, is a scholarship student at the university.

Last night the National Federation of Canadian University Students threw its weight behind the Ottawa council.

New Nfcus president Mortimer Bistrisky said in a press conference here the U of O authorities' action was "against the principle of students' rights endorsed by the 22nd Nfcus conference".

Prud'homme told Kelly that unless the council's stand was accepted by the authorities, all U of O student activities might be cancelled.

He said the next issue of La Rotonde, scheduled for today, would probably not be published.

Support for the U of O council has come in from the Toronto Students' Administrative Council and from Laval University in Quebec City.

Leading Quebec students have condemned the dismissal by statements in Le Devoir, Montreal French-language newspaper.

With the exception of Le Devoir and Canadian University Press, daily newspapers have paid scant attention to the dispute.

The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation's French-language television service, however, has scheduled a program Sunday in the "Opinion" series on the question of students' rights.

Frost's Fate Not Decided But Dog's Definitely Taboo

With a resolution that the Frost government is "aged, incompetent and irresponsible" placed before the audience, the first formal political debate of the season followed a hectic course last night in Trinity Convocation Hall.

Opening speaker for the Ayes was Ken Wyman—III UC—who said the Frost government refuses to face such problems as rising population, urbanization and industrialization.

"The Frost government has had to be dragged kicking and screaming into the twentieth century," he said.

At the conclusion of Wyman's speech a small tri-colored dog which had left at the beginning of his remarks, re-entered the hall.

On a point of order from Clare Lewis, (II Vic), the dog was ejected.

The first speaker for the Noes and Progressive Conservative Club president Gordon Ross (I Law), compared the present government with the Hepburn administration several years ago. The major fault he attributed to the Hepburn government was a failure to support hydro projects.

"It was only through the interference of the federal government that the Hepburn administration was prevented from exporting this alleged surplus of hydro-electric power to the United States," Ross said.

Ross concluded that under the Hepburn government there was "wholesale exploitation of Canadian forest products by American lumber barons."

The second speaker for the Ayes, Phil Goulston, (II U.C.), termed the Frost government "a virtual dictatorship."

On the matter of education Goulston asked, "What sort of a situation is it when teachers of grade eight have only their senior matriculation and the benefit of a six-month summer course?"

Jeremy Johnston (IV Trin.), the second speaker for the Noes, pointed out with regard to education that under the Frost government, "increasing aid is being given to students to help them pay their fees." He cited Dominion-provincial bursaries as an example.

At the conclusion of the debate, chairman James Baillie announced it had previously been decided there would be no vote taken.

A challenge has been issued to the C.C.F. party on campus to take part in the next debate, Liberal President Jim Doris said.

The resolution for the debate will be that "the world has no need for Socialism."

New Parties Are Vetoed Unless Sincerity Proved

New political parties on campus will have to prove their sincerity to the University of Toronto Debating Union before they are recognized as contenders in the Model Parliament.

Meeting last night, the union, defining the proposed parties as "wild cat" or "bastard" parties, voted to continue to follow their previous policy on the Model Parliament.

Stating the parliament is a model of the federal house, and as such can only admit those parties represented in the government, the union refused to allow the campus parliament to become a "mock" parliament.

As an Engineer put it: "If these parties are allowed to run, the Engineers may put forth a party, which with 1,500 votes will gain the house majority. Then the parliament will really be a farce."

Opposition to the move came from St. Mike's representatives Peter Dembski and Francine Grembs.

Both felt the new political parties should be allowed to participate in Model Parliament elections as a test of established parties.

If new parties made a sizeable showing, Dembski said, it would indicate students had lost confidence in the three established political parties.

The two were outnumbered by eight UTDU members. One member abstained from voting.

Chairman Robin Beamish invited representatives of the new parties to present their platform at the next Union meeting. If parties wish to make a serious effort to take issue with a vote rather than campus politics, they perhaps some change can be made in the constitution of the model parliament to allow them to be represented, he said.

The union was informed at the meeting there would be eight debating tours to various universities this year. Included will be a tour to Vermont, and, if the invitation is extended, to Harvard University.

Pleased with the calibre of the applicants for the debating team, the Union recommended the names of all who applied be filed for future reference.

The first of this year's major debates will be with McGill University at U of T, on Nov. 6 and 7 at Hart House.

Preparations have begun for a program of instruction to high schools in the Toronto area in the principles of debating. Teams are to be sent to the schools at various times in the year.

French Absorption Difficult U of M Professor States

A University of Montreal professor said here last night absorption of Canada's French-speaking element by the English-speaking element would be virtually impossible.

Speaking in the second of the two annual Gray lectures, Prof. Michel Brunet said not only is the English-speaking element too small to do this, but the French culture is concentrated in areas which largely isolates it from English-speaking neighbors.

About 100 students and staff attended the lecture, under the auspices of the U of T Modern History Club.

Dr. Brunet is a University of Montreal professor.

Mr. Brunet also attacked the idea of the "Miracle of the French-Canadian Survival" as a myth.

"Historians have approached the process with romantic, fancied notions," he said. "There was no miracle, only a sociological process. No one can escape the laws of history."

He said history, and "all social sciences should be approached with the same attitude with which we approach physics problems."

"We live in a world we don't understand," he added. We should try to understand that world by adopting a more impersonal, un-emotional approach, he urged.

The Gray lectures were endowed to promote better relations between the English-speaking and French-speaking members of our society.

U of T Doc Wins $5,000 For Heart Surgery Study

An Associate Professor of Surgery at the University of Toronto, Dr. W. T. Bigelow, has been presented with a $5,000 award in recognition of his development of hypothermia, a deep-freeze operation for use in heart surgery.

The award is the first international one for arthritis and heart disease presented by the Gairdner Foundation.

The foundation was incorporated last December to encourage and reward medical research into rheumatic and heart diseases. A. J. Gairdner, a Toronto financier and philanthropist, and other family members provide the foundation's funds.

Other awards totalling $40,000 have been made to six medical scientists in England and the United States.

Before Dr. Bigelow's development of hypothermia, surgeons could operate inside the heart only by use of a finger or an instrument. His development is considered a technical advance in heart surgery.

Presentation of the awards will take place in Toronto May 15 and 16. Scientific meetings at the U of T have been arranged in conjunction with the presentation.

Another Conference

Applications for the Texas Agricultural and Mechanical College Conference on National Affairs are now available to Students' Administrative Council members.

Information and application forms can be picked up at the SAC office.

Come Fly With Me....

Twenty members of the U of T Flying Club will go to Niagara Falls this weekend—but there won't be any honeymooners along.

The group will use eight aircraft for the flights. They will take off from the Island Airport at 8 a.m. Sunday, circle the Falls, and stop off at St. Catharines on the way home.

The entire flight will cost under $10 a person, Hoshkiv said. Last weekend's trip to Lake Simcoe and Oshawa cost just under $8 per passenger.

UofT Appeal D-o-w-n -Total Still Isn't Known

University of Toronto made a poor showing compared to the city at large as returns were tabulated last night.

And student returns were worst of all.

U of T's returns as a whole totalled $24,262, only 73 per cent of the objective, while students contributed only $5,000 of this sum.

The final student campaign figure, just 50 per cent of the objective, was lower than those previously released because of miscalculations during the campaign, chairman Charlotte Hubbell said last night.

While Toronto's returns smashed over an $8,000,000 goal, campaign officials here were hoping late returns from some student faculties would push U of T's returns to the 75 per cent mark.

The Faculty of Dentistry has not registered any of its returns as yet, Miss Hubbell said, and some other faculties and colleges may have more cash coming in.

An Appeal

The Varsity, famous for its insistent appeals for help, finds it necessary to make yet another.

Positions open, however, are paying ones: proofreader and copy-runner.

Requirements for proofreading are sharp eyes, a vague understanding of university life, and the ability to read and manage a pencil.

Copy-runners only need one thing: a car and a night or two a week.

Those interested in either position are asked to appear in The Varsity office tout de suite because we need help.

Into The Space Age... Movie Course On Technology

By ED ROBERTS
Varsity Staff Reporter

"The approach to the whole subject is just about the opposite of that of the Buck Rogers set," extension director Dr. D. C. Williams said last night.

About 180 students have registered for the 17-week course, described by Dr. Williams as "pretty advanced."

"Most of the people taking this course are aerophysicists and other post-graduate students," Dr.

The U of T took advantage of a three way academic airlift Wednesday and launched itself into the space age with a revolutionary new course on "space technology."

Williams said, "but we have a few undergraduates registered in it."

The course, offered by the U of T's extension department, is composed entirely of filmed lectures.

"This is the first time such a method of presenting an organized body of knowledge has been used at the university," Dr. Williams said.

"If the series proves to be successful we'll definitely be interested in further projects of the same nature," he added.

The seventeen lectures were originally given at the University of California in Los Angeles by noted space authorities, including Dr. Wehrner von Braun, "father" of the first U.S. satellites.

The films are kinescope recordings of the original lectures, and television cameras must be used to show them.

"A set of lecture notes which are about the size of an ordinary text-book have been prepared to be used by the students," Dr. Williams said.

Topics include flight dynamics; earth satellites; lunar flight; recovery dynamics; propulsion-rockets fundamentals; future propulsion systems; space communications; guidance technique; space medicine; human activity in space; the exploration of Mars; magneto-aerodynamics; time dilation effects in space travel; and what the future holds.

Two other Canadian universities—Carlton and McMaster—are also offering the course.

All three universities will use the same prints of the lecture-films. The films will first be flown to Ottawa from Los Angeles, then back to Toronto, and finally rushed by bus to McMaster.

The lectures are being given on consecutive nights: Carlton on Tuesdays, U of T on Wednesdays, and McMaster on Thursdays.

Officials of the three universities have expressed their worries that one of these weeks the film won't arrive because of bad weather.

"We're trying to get an extra filmed lecture here to be used in such an emergency," said Dr. Williams.

"Space technology" has sometimes been described as a graduate study of peaceful uses of the intercontinental ballistic missile," Dr. Williams added.

Christian Scientist Here Explains Power Of Faith

A Christian Scientist last night told her audience of 50 that she was talking to space.

Mrs. Clair Rauthe of London, England, told a largely adult group in Wymilwood Music room that as some scientists have said atoms are really only empty space, then that was what she was addressing.

In the small room, the audience whispered quietly. Scarlet and white chrysanthemums barely relieved the cold atmosphere of the room.

"But," she said, "we are not just space. We are substantial and essential to God."

As an illustration of the power of healing by faith, Mrs. Rauthe told the story of an aged man who lay dying in a London hotel during the war.

A Christian Science practitioner came to visit him, but there were no vacancies in Christian Science Hospitals, nor were there any Christian Science nurses available.

The old man was delirious. The practitioner prayed over him, then left. As she was walking out of the hotel, she fell and broke her ankle.

When she arrived home, exhausted, she sat down and read some of Mary Baker Eddy's inspirational writings. Soon she realized that her exhaustion had evaporated, and that her ankle was healed, Mrs. Rauthe said.

Next morning she received a phone call. It was from the man that she had left dying. He was alive and well.

Mrs. Rauthe cited the story as an example of the concept that what we feel in our physical senses is a dream condition. "Matter is unreal"; she said; it is only the objective state of mortal mind."

"But God is the Infinite Mind, and God knows no sickness, so prayer will overcome sickness and sin, fear and pain and wars and poverty."

Answers need....

Existentialism Is Lasting Crowd Hears Discussion

A St. Michael's College philosopher last night said existentialism is designed to provide "an enduring alternative philosophy" and "answer a need to turn to something more effective than reason."

Dr. Lawrence Lynch, president of the American Catholic Philosophical Society, attracted a crowd of 250 which was forced to move out of University College's Croft Chapter House to a lecture hall and then to UC's spacious West Hall.

Reason stands in the way of existentialist thinking, Dr. Lynch said. According to the existentialist, "life proceeds forward while reason proceeds backward. In reasoning we are concerned with abstract thinking involved in generalization."

"It is incorrect to speak of schools of existentialism."

According to the existentialist, Dr. Lynch said, "Existence precedes essence."

The existentialist believes each decision of a human individual is to create itself, the professor said.

Sartre stresses the concept of freedom, Dr. Lynch said. "Man is free in creating himself and the values on which he will act." This is Sartre's way of describing man, the professor added.

Grouping the existentialists, Dr. Lynch began by describing those who conceived a solitary human reality, lacking in divine support. This is the group which denies God's existence.

He traced the philosophy to the point where it becomes an attractive philosophy to the theologian, which gives a different exposition to religious dogma.

To some, he said, existentialism is an element of inspiration to religious life. Marcel, Dr. Lynch added, is convinced that to Christianize is the only attractive way to philosophize.

But, the professor said, there is even disagreement about using the term existentialist.

Thousand Tickets Sold For All-Important Game

Staid London, Ontario, seems to be giving bacchanalian Montreal a run for the U of T's football-ticket money.

The Hart House Athletic office last night said some 1,000 tickets had been sold for tomorrow's Varsity-Queen's game in London, with another day of selling to go.

Last away game of last season, the much-heralded McGill weekend, drew some 1,500 students from Toronto while this year's McGill weekend, near the beginning of the season, saw a turnout of about 600.

Ticket office officials said last night all, or nearly all, of their $1.50 tickets were sold but a number of $2 seats remain. The Students' Administrative Council office still has some $1.50 as well as $2 tickets.

Athletic Office officials said sales were good and a "pretty good crowd" can be expected.

Tickets will be on sale at the ticket office. Tickets for the game and the football train are available at the Students' Administrative Council office, where some 100 tickets have been sold.

Tickets are available at the Hart House Athletic office and the SAC until 1 p.m. today.

Return train tickets are available at the SAC for $5.50. The train leaves Toronto at 8:15 a.m. Saturday and arrives in Toronto 11:42 p.m. the same day.

Those who are unable to buy tickets here may purchase them at the game in London, Athletic office officials said last night.

Guess What....

Here's another one to baffle U of T's long-suffering male population. This time it's not Bermuda shorts or even knee socks. Some of them are black—the school girl look; some are drab brown or green—the bohemian, or maybe just sick, sick look. Some are red, too, for reasons better not discussed. Some are cable-stitched—all the way—and these aren't recommended for long lectures. Like the sack, it's debatable whether they do much for the female form. But the girls say they're comfortable and work wonders at pedestrian crosswalks when other ploys fail. For the uninitiated, they're called leotards. Balletinas have been using them for years.

Yoke on the Engineers —

Engineers entering Skulehouse today will find evidence of 10 chickens scattered through the corridors, an anonymous telephone caller told The Varsity at press time last night.

The caller said the chickens were placed there by a new society: "The Myopic Puppies Fellowship".

harvey meets doll nude indian back

St. Hilda's College has its nude Indian back—and Harvey Shepherd, Varsity news editor, has had the clandestine street-corner interview with an artificial blonde which he says he's been waiting for since he joined the paper more than a year ago.

And if the Big Seven Renegades had anything to do with stealing the painting, they certainly have an active ladies' auxiliary, Shepherd said yesterday.

An anonymous phone call to Shepherd in The Varsity office about noon yesterday was the first that has been heard of the painting since it disappeared from the St. Hilda's rotunda Tuesday night.

A girl told him she had the picture and wanted to return it but didn't know how to do so without identifying herself, Shepherd said he would take delivery of the picture at 2 p.m. at the corner of Bloor and St. George Streets.

Shepherd phoned Miss Katherine Darroch, St. Hilda's Dean, who said, "As it is both a valuable and a delicate piece of property, the first thing is that it be returned."

He was at the appointed corner at the appointed time and, very shortly, met the short-haired, blue-blazer peroxide blonde who smiled and asked him if he was Harvey Shepherd.

He was,

She directed him to a car parked a short distance up Bloor where Shepherd found the painting, wrapped in newspaper and bits of cloth and pillowcases.

Shepherd said yesterday he doesn't know who is going to reimburse him for the 60-cent taxi fare to St. Hilda's College where he was met by a not-very-excited hall porter.

"But I'm damn sure somebody should."

"You'll pay sales tax on your ticket to Mars!"

We're on the threshold of space travel! Wonderful visions of the future are drawn on every side. Even our staid economists predict exciting days within the reach of all. But, hold on! Some things won't change, and we'll enter that brave new world with many of the unromantic features that are with us today.

Your beautiful plastic dome of a house will have a mortgage, a heating bill and plumbing problems. Your clean-cut Canadian kids will outgrow their shoes and require dental care. You'll still pay income tax, and certainly sales tax on your ticket to Mars.

Yet, just as our scientists are exploring the future, you can prepare for these known problems because you can anticipate them, with the help of an expert. Planning for the future is the absorbing job of your North American Life & Casualty representative. He will have a keen understanding of your problems, and will help you work out a program of "planned income" for your family. He'll tell you about NALAC plans for paying off the mortgage, sending your children through college, and paying off bills when you're laid up. It's the key to confident living. Call in and see us soon, won't you?

Confidently.

Dean Defends Toynbee's Interpretation Of History

British critics have called Toynbee's "A Study of History" second only to whiskey as a dollar earner, Dean of Arts Moffat Woodside said in yesterday's University College Public Lecture on "Toynbee and the Critics".

They have compared Toynbee to a gibbon shaking fruit from the historical tree and throwing unwanted facts onto a garbage heap, and an American political scientist has called him "the Billy Graham of the Eggheads," the dean said.

Speaking in the UC West Hall

Donate To Mine Fund

Vince Kelly, Students' Administrative Council president, yesterday said the SAC office will accept donations for Springhill mine disaster relief.

Money will be turned over to the Chartered Trust Co. and receipts will be given to anyone who asks for them.

before a capacity audience of over 300, Dean Woodside said although he had read all 10 volumes of "A Study of History", he considered himself only an interested layman. "I am not a member of the closed guild of professional historians," he said.

"I am not here to say whether Toynbee's critics are right or wrong," he said, but he defended Toynbee's right to write history as he sees it. "History is a creative art; it must be studied by a variety of human minds. The past is gone forever and professional historians can only reconstruct it from dumb objects."

But critics who have accused Toynbee of imposing a pattern on history and shaping facts to fit it, have failed to recognize that Toynbee is the only historian "who was bold enough to look for, and find, a meaning in history, namely: that mankind must be one family or destroy itself."

"The historian who refuses to ask and answer questions that pertain to present society, is neglecting his duty to his society."

By his avoidance of technical jargon, Toynbee took his readers on an "exciting journey" into vast "reaches and areas of history" on a scale hitherto not attempted, Dean Woodside said.

Toynbee's worth rests not in the fact that he wrote "A Study of History", but that he recognized the need for such a work and will be an inspiration for other similar publications, the dean concluded.

The second of the UC Public Lectures will be given next Thursday at 4.30 p.m. by Professor G. M. Wickens. His subject will be "A Persian Emperor's European Tour, A.D. 1900".

THE VARSITY - a special report on EDUCATION

One monarch of England and two Lieutenant governors of Ontario ago, in 1950, the Report of the Royal Commission on Education in Ontario appeared. It disappeared the same year but under the surface it was having its effect. There was some talk and steps were taken to implement the proposals of the commission. A slow subtle evolution of this kind would have been the best thing that could have happened to education in this province, but the recent technological advances in Russia have provided the kind of artificial stimulus that is wrenching any gradual progress out of shape and is turning sober educators into radical revolutionists advocating extreme and immediate transformations—some of questionable value. It is in an attempt to reinstate a reasonable outlook that The Varsity is publishing a series of articles on education.

What is most in danger of being submerged in our present awe over the Russian "success" is that the true crisis in Canadian education is not that we are failing to live up to Russian standards but that we are failing to live up to our own. If we assume uncritically that the aim of education in this country is to "catch up with the Russians" we will eventually have to give up the traditions that we like to think are ours and accept an increasingly greater degree of totalitarian education.

If, on the other hand we are not content to accept Russian educational theory as the last word, we can meet the crisis of the times more reasonably by starting with a critical examination of our own aims and needs, and moving on to a consideration of the extent to which our present system is adequate in the light of them. Russian education cannot be ignored; neither can advances in any part of the world. But we must take account of them in the context of our own desires and traditions if they are not to sweep us off our pedagogic feet entirely.

This is roughly the spirit behind The Varsity series. It will begin with a consideration of the aims of education. This part of the series will take no account of practical problems whatsoever and will perhaps seem utopian. It will be utopian. Circumstances must be altered to fit the purpose. If the purpose is to be distorted to fit circumstances there is no point discussing aims; we would simply have to go in whichever direction practical necessity pushes us.

Practical problems will be considered in the second part of the series in the light of these aims. Before we can discuss questions like "are there enough teachers; are they good enough?" we must attempt to settle the question of "enough for what," "good enough for what." Here the aims come in again.

The feature will end with a return to Utopia, for a sadder, perhaps wiser look. In the light of one high-flown aim and practical problems we will try to find an "ideal" method of organization to meet our educational needs.

In a short series we cannot hope to cover the topic fully. We can hardly even suggest answers. But if we can gather together some of the more important questions we may have accomplished something.

This is the first of a series of articles on Education under the general editorship of Sam Ajzenstat. Further articles will follow through next week on a pattern outlined in the introduction above. First the aims of education in Canada will be considered, then the various elements of our present system will be examined. Finally, a utopian program will be outlined.

I - Aims Of Education

By SAM AJZENSTAT

Nothing depresses the theorist quite as much as finding out that what is "good in theory only" isn't much good at all. Perhaps there was a little of this depression in the back of a prominent British educator's mind when he said at the Canadian Conference on education, this February:

"Man lives in three overlapping worlds. He lives in a material world, the world of commerce, agriculture, and industry. Man lives in a social world which the Greeks would have called, a political world. And man lives in a spiritual world. The child must be prepared to live satisfactorily in all three . . . to achieve these ends, the school must play its part, perhaps a major part."

As a basic philosophy of education this statement fairly sums up the ideas of most Western educators. But it is also an open doorway into most of the problems facing them.

The first thing to notice is that "Man" is spelt with a capital "M". Right from the first word an endless debate starts among educators as to just who this "Man" they are supposed to be educating is. The next thing we are told about "Man" is that he lives in three worlds. This is a nice idea, too, but there are too many teachers who are fed up with a long academic life of student after student who just barely lives in one world or at the most two, to let that point get through without an argument. Still in the first sentence we find that these three worlds are overlapping.

Now, does this mean that in his classroom, the teacher is to let his material, social, and spiritual teachings overlap or should he teach them in separate pigeonholes in spite of their overlapping in life?

Where to Start?

The traditionalist because he is caught up in the traditions of his time and nation is something of a propagandist; his basic preoccupation is education as an agency for passing on of the traditions of his nation. The other way of thought is "influenced less than others by the current scene. They are more impressed by change, and they see little reason for regarding the external form of anything as permanent or as constantly valid." For this reason their approach is more comparative — comparative ethics, comparative religions for instance.

Perhaps some compromise is possible but at the moment all educational theory seems to spring from one of these two ways of thought, and the conflict between them springs the course and all academic discussion.

Book of Knowledge

There is some value in the trite old cliché that thinks of knowledge as a book, of which each of us can study in detail one chapter only. On this analogy primary education becomes a training in the basic skills that will allow us to read the book, secondary education becomes a cursory survey of the list of contents, and higher education is the final focussing on one chapter. This provides us with a rough framework.

Primary Education

At each level we ask different things of our educational system. And we ask more of the primary schools than of anything else. Few of the big problems of education have crystallized sufficiently at this stage to be fought in the open. Yet all are present. The idea of academic freedom in primary schools sounds ridiculous or insane yet the primary education can make the difference between a conformist and a revolutionary. This makes the primary school teacher the most important link in the academic chain, and yet no professional group has looser and more inadequate standards.

What must be demanded of the primary school teacher is the ability not merely to pass on basic skills, but intellectual excitement for all knowledge, moral sensitivity, and a subtle freedom that will flower later on into a clear-eyed critical attitude. This may sound impossible but this is partly because so much of the primary school staffs at present have neither the excitement, the sensitivity, nor the freedom. At this level the teacher is uppermost, almost, except for the basic skills, to the exclusion of the curriculum.

At this level the problems of defining aims are clearer. Here I will concentrate on what part is played in these aims by the teacher and the curriculum.

Secondary Education

A Carleton University co-ed, speaking at the Canadian Conference on Education, said, "It's a partnership in high school and the good teacher is like a good wife who plants an idea, helps it germinate, and lets the husband think it's his."

Without intending to, this statement contains the problem of the role of the teacher, in a nutshell. This is where the progressives and the traditionalists start going at each others' throats. The teacher cannot teach in a void. He is living in a presumably democratic tradition, for instance, and he will impress it on his pupils every time he lets them take a vote, on, say, which charity to support instead of just telling them. This kind of power cannot be taken away from the teacher. It is in fact a powerful pedagogic device. It is the curriculum that can keep the teacher's attitudes from becoming an insidious force.

Balancing Curriculum

The curriculum can help in a number of ways. The teacher's own religious convictions can be supplemented by the study of comparative religion. His conviction, if he has one, that the law is sacred can be supplemented by the study of an essay like Thoreau's "Civil Disobedience." The answer seems to lie in a compromise between the thoroughgoing progressive and traditionalist ideas.

Another point of dispute in curricula is the relative emphasis on science and humanities.

In the Renaissance, a man could reasonably hope to know everything about everything. We no longer can and this ability is the cue for a degree of early specialization that stifles us all in our little cubbyhole.

Over-specialization

What this specialization is robbing us of is the possibility that one field of knowledge may breathe life into another. The best book on the philosophy of art to be published in recent years was the work of a mathematical logician. And yet in our educational institutions philosophy, art, and mathematics are kept worlds apart. One of the world's greatest physicists taught himself Greek so that he could read Sophocles in the original, but in our schools the classicists and the physicists still keep at arms length from one another. These are isolated and perhaps exceptional examples but they provide a clue to a possible revitalization of our whole educational process.

By the time the student reaches university if he does, most of the good or the damage has been done. The problems of university education must be left to a later article.

salt of the earth

This was a news story.

It appears in the editorial column of this paper because, through necessity, some of the statements must wander from the strict line of known fact into those invidious regions where the writer is forced to express an opinion of his own.

This is not a news story now—but it should have been.

Last Wednesday the resident student body in Trinity College staged a demonstration against Trinity Dean A. J. Earp.

The feeling against Dean Earp began in a noon hour debate on the motion "Trinity Apathy Can be Cured".

The debate disintegrated into a unanimous oratorical condemnation of Dean Earp, sparked by Divines, and including speakers on both government and opposition benches.

Aroused by a prepared harangue by Divine John Potts, succeeding speakers, as if with one voice, attributed lack of Trinity spirit to "discipline dictated from above".

Not satisfied with verbal antics, the same speakers staged a visual demonstration of their feeling later at dinner.

Resembling many age-old Trinity traditions, complete with beloved incense, the demonstration took the form of a mock-solemn parade through the dining hall where the Dean sat with other members of the Trinity staff at the head table.

Theme of the parade, which included a cushioned skull and a draped coffin, was that John Strachan, who founded Trinity, was dead. He had been killed, the procession sang, by Earp.

After five minutes of winding round tables, during which the parade descended from the ridiculous to the merely embarrassing, the procession left and dinner resumed.

That is what happened in Trinity the other day.

It was nothing so very extraordinary or sacred. It was just Trinity's own special way of saying it is tired of a residence administration which threatens honored student traditions.

But, true to another special little tradition in Trinity, the organizers of the procession and the speakers at the debate refused to cooperate with reporters of this paper in telling what had happened and what had been said.

For all its many faults and blemishes, The Varsity has one stern tradition of its own.

Rather than publish a news story with inaccurate or incomplete facts, it will not publish the news story at all.

Trinity officials, most of whom took part in or condoned the demonstration against their Dean, repeatedly told reporters that the "prank" was a "family affair" and was of no interest to the rest of the university.

This attitude is interesting. It is sponsored by a clique of self-interested Divines many of whom have graduated from other colleges in other universities, yet are brimming with an ersatz spirit for an institution more complex than many of them can conceive.

These same Divines will expect, correctly, this paper to publicize to the hilt another "family affair in Trinity"—the Father Terry Mission.

We will.

For the Father Terry Mission, like Wednesday's demonstration, is no more a "family affair" than any other news event reported in this paper.

Wednesday's demonstration, ill-mannered as it was, still had implications which affect every student in every faculty on this campus. To pretend it doesn't is to assume the same narrow-minded attitude expressed by the University of Ottawa's administration.

Few newspapers, and certainly not this one, aspire either towards power or sensational glory. They seek primarily and principally to communicate fact and retain only the authority to decide what facts are worth communicating.

If Trinity's reticence is based, as it should be, on a realization of their own stately stupidity, then they should have the courage to admit it.

If it is merely another manifestation of a hard-boiled, regal disregard for the rest of the world emanating from an inner sanctum of supercilious self-righteousness, then it is small wonder Trinity has lost its spirit.

Don't blame me for being a Catholic. It wasn't my idea in the first place.

When I was two weeks old my parents, without consulting me on the matter at all, took me to their parish church to be baptized. With the colossal gall typical of Christian charity, my godparents in my name, and the priest in the Church's name, decided that I should become a Christian.

Nobody had asked me, two weeks earlier, whether or not I wanted to be born. And now nobody asked me this infinitely bigger question, whether I wanted to die sacramentally and be reborn from the womb of the Church, in the power of the redemptive death and resurrection of Jesus Christ, into a life which was divine and therefore forever above anything I could be capable of by nature. Well, the priest did ask me, but my godparents answered and I slept on.

And so I was supernaturally identified with Christ. I began to continue by grace the life He has by nature as the Son of God. I was given a share in His priesthood by which I could continue His priestly immolation on Calvary by offering with Him in the Church the Sacrifice of the Mass. That involved the right, to be exercised when I was free and old enough, to receive as my food His own Body and Blood as the fruit of that Sacrifice. Also, I was bound into a supernatural oneness with everyone else, living or dead, who keeps the Faith given at Baptism and who constitute together "the whole Christ", in the fullness of His life. And this at two harmless weeks old. It was all very high-minded.

But it was all very much like our God. For this is the strange preference of the Father, that He chooses not to carry out His Will directly but to depend on men, to hide Himself in them and to win their co-operation and love precariously, according to the conditions of human freedom. To such an extent, in fact, that he sent His divine Son to dwell among us; God Himself even became a man. And for this, He depended, on the free consent of one woman, Mary. This was the Incarnation, which is the why and the what of the Catholic Church. Christ, the Incarnate God, founded the Church so that He could continue His Incarnation not simply in one human nature, but in all men, and therefore in all cultures; in all societies, in all ages. That is why the true church must be utterly catholic, for its destiny is to embody in Christ everything that is human.

Now this divine plan for a Catholic Church is, like its Author, extremely beautiful, mysterious, and tough on all concerned.

Living in the Church which continues the Reality of Christ in the human situation is both exhausting and acutely embarrassing.

Exhausting because as Catholics we accept the burdens of God Himself: and yet we live with a constant and terrible capacity—one cannot truly call it freedom—to reject them and Him at any time, wholly or partly which rejection is precisely what cripples and deforms the Church. We accept divine Truth (through Scripture and Tradition) and with It the need both to fathom it ourselves and witness to it be-

The Student Press

By JOHN GRAY

In the past five months, five university students from the University of Ottawa have been plucked unceremoniously from their editorial chairs and dropped into the discard pile.

The students were editors of the university's student paper La Rotonde, and the students were fired by the administration for what the university officials considered to be disregard for the ethics of professional journalism.

In the province of Quebec another editor was expelled, and still another was given a very stiff ultimatum on the running of the paper.

All these firings have centred in French speaking universities, while the bulk of Canadian student papers have remained reasonably safe from repressing hands.

It is no accident that these editors should all be at French language universities. By nature more conservative English papers in this country have an entirely different conception of journalism behind them, and a different job to do.

In Quebec there is only one newspaper, which could lay even a vague claim to independence from the economic and political powers that be.

For its freedom Le Devoir draws the enmity of all whom it opposes, and it draws the respect of any would-be journalist who happens to believe in the right of the press, student or commercial, to protest against any aspect of society.

Following in Le Devoir's footsteps the dominant drive of college papers has been to attack, and to attack savagely. Outspoken criticism of the existing regime has become a mark of social distinction in a society where freedom of expression is closed by economic and political forces.

Canadian university papers show a remarkable disparity individually, but the difference between the French and English press is more remarkable Nothing corresponding to a news story exists among the French language papers. There are topical features and editorialized news items, but the main body of stories consists of editorials and editorial articles.

All aspects of student activities — though subject matter frequently extends into the realms of civic, provincial, or federal politics — are examined with a critical eye.

In all matters someone is to blame — either for doing something or for not doing it sooner. The grievances are in the main justified—there is no dearth of intellectual endeavor—but the shadow of super-critical writing is cast throughout the paper.

La Rotonde's editors, fired last summer, explained their position in their anniversary issue: "Student editorial writers are among the few to denounce systematically and without political interest the vicious social order which exists among them."

Explaining the editors' stands in relation to the Oblate fathers who run the university: "They are among the few who do not, by a guilty silence, make themselves accomplices to an empire erected on 'banditisme' and maintained for a long time by a certain complacency of the religious authorities."

This is certainly not the tone of any English Canadian papers; it is conceived by minds formed by different stresses, for readers expecting this "journalisme de combat".

exactly like everybody else in this world, that is both sinful and stupid, most of us ignore the high challenge of the Faith.

- So it is embarrassing to be a Catholic too. Precisely because it is in the total human situation that the Church incarnates Christ. And the human situation of the Church, on account of the idiosyncrasy of her members and the fluctuations of society, is frequently pretty scandalous. The human facts of Catholicism, in an Alexander VI, in the Inquisition, in an Italian or French or Irish society, or yes, even in Canada, can't hide the fact of Christ almost completely under corruption; deformity, and plain sluggish mediocrity, instead of revealing His jagged Beauty through the liberty, holiness, and endurance of Christian love. Inevitably then, when the Church voices her supra-cultural, supra-temporal, truly catholic and divine mission—whenever She makes demands—those outside of her point the finger of very understandable scorn. At that, we Catholics blush, squirm, and beat our breasts.

However, "Truly Thou art a hidden God, God of Israel, Saviour", says the Psalmist. "My ways are not crooked, it is thy ways that are crooked", says the Lord God to Israel in the mouth of the prophet Ezechiel. And then He proceeds to veil Himself under the deviousnesses of men. Look how Our Lord scandalized everyone, even in Nazareth, when His everyday agrarian village humanity was all you could see of His divinity. And if Christ our God has chosen to hide Himself in the Church He founded so that He can live within and work through and restore to His Father everyone, everything, universally... then all I can say is, don't blame me; it was His idea, not mine.

Maurice Duplessis' acceptability in polite company."

"The Koran of the Cocktail Set, the Torah of the Tea-party Types, the Bible of the Really Very Best"—the functions of the new Register, says the Daily.

"Try to realize the urgent necessity of the Best People being separated, realize that this book represents the Finer Things in Life."

While The Ontarion, from Ontario Agricultural College, blasted traditional homecomings as traditional flops, the Western Gazette said "We are proud to have you with us again" to their returning grads.

While The Ontarion was realistic The Gazette was idealistic: "We are all intensely happy to have you, to have evidence of Western's past and assurances of an equally bright future for ourselves."

The same Gazette had a bit of a birthday issue on the same Homecoming weekend. It marked 50 years since the paper was started. "We've had a heck of a lot of fun the past 50 years!"

With a brave cry of "he who pays the piper calls the tune," the University of Saskatchewan's Sheaf defended the firing of United College history professor Harry Crowe.

The Sheaf is one of the few supporters United College has managed to drag up after Crowe was fired on evidence from a private letter to a colleague.

The College is supported by United Church funds. "The United Church has every right to insist that those who teach in such schools must stick to the tenets of the same church," the editorial charged.

The strange interception by the College of Crowe's private letter did draw the ire of the editor: "The purported interception" of the letter should be taken to criminal courts.

From editorials across the country it appears Toronto is not the only centre for attack on the current Duplessis regime in the Province of Quebec.

Referring to "the opportunistic Duplessis" as "that grand old man of Canadian reaction," the Queen's Journal lambasted the premier's meeting with the self-appointed University Action League.

"The attitude towards higher education expressed by the Quebec government has a weird nineteenth century ring, which were it not tragic, would be quite ludicrous," said the Journal.

The Silhouette at McMaster University also lit into the premier and his meeting with the group who undertook to bargain for the whole of the province's university population.

Hinting at the "singular sympathy" charged between the League and the powerful premier, the Silhouette says the League has no real authority and represents "no one but themselves and perhaps political interests."

At the University of Ottawa La Rotonde editor Louis Cliche wrote that student papers are no longer the last bastion of freedom of the press. Firings of student editors during the previous summer had seen to that, he charged.

During the following week the sun rose majestically over Ottawa's campus revealing mimeographed letters across the campus. The letter announced that Louis Cliche and two colleagues had been fired by the university authorities.

Varsity News Editor Harvey Shepherd indignantly points to a pile of pipes and rubbish on the front lawn of the 300 building. The notorious matter began appearing from an open sewer earlier in the week. But when Shepherd asked the building and grounds superintendent Alec Russell about it he was told "ridiculous, there was nothing there at 5 p.m."

The world waded through its fair share of triumphs and disasters this week—and if the disasters seemed to outweigh the triumphs to Canadians, they treated those twin imposters just the same.

Biggest blow was the tragedy of Springhill, Nova Scotia. Thursday night a subterranean upheaval collapsed the lower workings of the deepest mine in North America, trapping 77 men 13,000 feet below the surface.

Wednesday brought news of a miracle. Weary rescue workers heard a tantalizing voice whisper through an air tube that 12 men lived after six days underground. Today a saddened nation revives hope as rescue crews still toil to discover whether any more of the men who go down to the mines in shifts are alive.

Other disaster came Saturday as 32 were injured in a blast which ripped open four business blocks in downtown Ottawa. Cause of the blast remains a mystery as federal investigators examine damage which may total $5,000,000.

Abroad, greatest triumph was election Wednesday of Angelo Giuseppe Cardinal Roncalli, 76-year-old Patriarch of Venice as Pope John XXIII. The Pope's election followed three days of balloting during which Vatican smoke signals mis-fired, throwing waiting crowds into confusion.

Pope John's first official action was to address an appeal for peace to leaders of all nations as disarmament discussions start in Geneva today.

Thursday Moscow answered, dangling yet another morsel of conditional delight, by saying Russia would immediately stop its nuclear test if Britain and the U.S. did the same.

This announcement steals the propaganda thunder from President Eisenhower's plan for a one-year suspension of tests beginning today. Throughout the week American scientists raced to complete current test series before the presidential deadline came into effect. This would leave Americans still one-up in the vicious circle of testy negotiations.

Thursday also brought reports that both Israel and Japan are potential atom powers in the near future. Israel's bomb would not only be a light to frighten the Gentiles but would blow Middle East balance of power into smithereens.

The new rising sun in Japan would do much the same for the Far East. There the Red Chinese last week announced a weird ultimatum to shell Quemoy only on odd-numbered dates of the month.

Tension in the Formosa Straits eased as Chiang and the U.S. seemed to be running out of faux pas as fast as the Reds seemed to be running out of shells.

Back in the Middle East, a more mature U.S. began to realize the doctrines of sacred law, with which they justified their 1956 action in Suez, were merely tools for lesser breeds without it. Putrid invective still flowed through Radio Cairo.

Cyprus, the running sore on the shaggy lion's backside, still bled freely and nobody seemed ready to come up with any miracle cure.

One bright spot came from Pasadena, California, where stargazers told a world who now accepts everything with a blasé shrug that outer space is clearing up and we should be able to see back to the beginning of time in two to four years.

On Africa

Dear Sir:

In reply to Mr. John Cole's letter of October 20, "Keep Africa In", we would like to state that although his opinion as to South Africa's remaining in the Commonwealth is one which is prevalent, we believe it to be incorrect and agree with your editorial, "Stained Bed-fellow". Fr. Huddleston has expressed the view of the African in his book, "Naught For Your Comfort" when he said, "—to the African in South Africa, Commonwealth citizenship means nothing. It seems only to accentuate an ugly truth, that, somehow or other, his Sovereign must condone the state of servitude in which he lives." Indeed what other impression is the African to get when he sees Britain siding with South Africa against the recent motion of censure, albeit mildly worded, which was passed in the U.N. The late Fr. Rayner also a great worker for the rights of Africans had this to say before the U.S.A. took a stand against South Africa. "We have a perfect right to know what exactly our Government is doing in relation to South Africans who are, in fact, British subjects. Are we being 'sold down the river' as the Americans say, for a mess of uranium?"

We feel that South Africa's continuance in the Commonwealth is a blot on the Commonwealth and that Canada or any other Commonwealth country can exercise just as much influence on South Africa outside the bonds of the Commonwealth as within them. This is borne out by the fact that it was in the U.N. not in a Commonwealth Conference that Canada censured South Africa. To compare the colour bar in Canada where the Government opposes this to South Africa where something akin to mass slavery is being enforced and extended by the Government is surely sheer folly.

Chrysanthemums Wilted With Smetana

The opening concert of the TSO's 1958-59 season was not an auspicious or altogether happy musical occasion. Under the direction of its permanent conductor Walter Susskind, and presenting in his debut with the Orchestra the young American pianist Byron Janis, our local symphonic organization presented a programme and turned in a performance which were neither technically distinguished nor artistically gratifying.

Mr. Susskind selected for the occasion three highly romantic compositions, Smetana's From Bohemia's Meadows and Forests, Rachmaninoff's third Piano Concerto, and Saint-Saens' third Symphony. The result was monochromatic, without the variety and contrast that are necessary in good programme-building. One could not help but feel that the ovation that greeted orchestra, conductor, and soloist (and there was something of an ovation) came as a result of the audience's desperate need to release energies that had been rigorously repressed by the overpowering noise and confusion that characterized the playing of concerto and symphony, rather than as a result of any spontaneous reaction to the musical experience. There was barely a lyrical moment in a programme largely given over to music of a distinctly lyrical nature. The espaliers of chrysanthemums and verdant foliage which constituted a floral bower for the performers were insufficient to dispel the general gloom, even if the greenery did succeed in providing the perennial note of hope.

The programme opened with the Smetana work, a symphonic poem which, although it had little to say, possesses a certain charm in its rhythmic and harmonic complexities. The fact that the contrapuntal configurations seemed to lack direction was doubtless not entirely the fault of the performance; the orchestral writing is not sufficiently unified to provide any total effect that has either meaning or emotional impact. The various sections of the orchestra demonstrated with some degree of finesse what they were capable of doing, but in the long run it seemed to this reviewer at least that they were not working towards a clearly defined purpose.

Mr. Janis brought to his performance of the Rachmaninoff Concerto a prodigious technical equipment that for the most part was admirably controlled. We have come to expect such virtuosity from our keyboard artists, and as a result we have become more critical of essentially musical values; Mr. Janis' conception of the Concerto as a display piece for all the bravado of romantic exuberance seemed to belie the predominantly lyrical texture of the scoring. Whereas the opening notes of a phrase were over-accented and over-punctuated, the closing notes faded away into nothing, only too frequently obscured by the heavy hand of the orchestra. The folk tune, first announced by the piano and in elaboration ultimately constituting the development section of the work, lost its identity in the crashing cadences and noisy declamation of the piano.

Comparisons are odious and it would be unfair and sacrilegious to compare Mr. Janis with the composer-pianist himself; but those of us fortunate enough to have heard Rachmaninoff as soloist in this work cannot but recall his singing tone, the controlled but controlled sweep of his performance, and the contemplative nature of the work as a whole.

Mr. Susskind, generally deferential in his reading of concert scores, was too concerned with the big orchestral effects to allow for a sympathetic rapport with the limited tonal qualities of the pianist.

The reasons for the infrequency of performance of the Third Symphony of Saint-Saens were amply set forth in the orchestra's reading of the score last Wednesday night. The Symphony can now be of little more than historical interest to musicologists and historians of French orchestral writing in the 1870's. The over-scoring, the interminable repetitions, the gnawing sentimentality, the vulgarly bombastic effects, the absence of any coherent idea upon which to build the symphonic structure—these unfortunate characteristics of the work were displayed with a verve and spirit that were almost embarrassing. The augmented orchestra, complete with a whining Hammond organ connected to no less than fifteen speakers, could bring little order out of the general chaos, and the final crashing of cymbals and the fortissimo chords of the organ did little to redeem the time, but it did provoke a most enthusiastic round of applause. One could only wonder why. George Falle canadian art

"This is one of the most important exhibitions by a Canadian artist to be shown in Toronto," runs the Laing Galleries publicity for their current show. And they're right.

Paintings by Alex Colville are rare. Done in a painstaking and careful egg tempera technique, they are a far cry from the hasty impressions or expressions that are usually exhibited by contemporary Canadians. There are few on the market, and even fewer are the occasions when one gets a chance to see several gathered together. The collection for sale at Laing's has been supplied from private and public collections.

Each is a careful crystallization of one moment in time, of one action, seen with an intense precision and clarity that gives his paintings a more than realistic atmosphere. More than realistic but not surrealistic. Far from being fantastic or dream-like, these pictures are just concentrated reality or super-reality. Hound in the Field, and Girl Skipping are the pictures that present this super-realism most successfully.

As interest in contemporary Canadian art grows, interest in Canadian art history also increases. Dr. Robert Hubbard, chief curator of the National Gallery of Canada, speaking to an audience of students, professors and gallery trustees at the Art Gallery last night, claimed that scholarly investigations into our art history have been carried on since the Second World War.

"In 1945, there was scanty literature on Canadian art," said Dr. Hubbard. Retrospective exhibitions were held of the works of Freighoff and Maurice in the '30's, he said, but until the Development of Painting in Canada exhibition was assembled in 1945, there was little idea of the scope of Canadian art in the 17th, 18th and 19th centuries.

After 1945, Dr. Hubbard was able to list an ever increasing number of retrospective and comprehensive exhibitions, books, articles and discoveries. As he traced a brief history of painting in Canada since French Colonial times, Dr. Hubbard was constantly pointing out discoveries of paintings and artists made in the past few years, or in some cases, in the last few weeks. theatre

Moliere—C'était formidable ;

"Trois farces de Moliere" was the second production in Toronto of the Theatre du Nouveau Monde. Here, in contrast to the Marcel Dubé "Time of the Lilacs", the players had material worthy of their mettle, and gave the sparse Toronto audience a hefty dose of the brilliance which won them such rave notices in Brussels this summer.

And brilliant they certainly are. The vitality and enthusiasm with which they present Moliere equals, and in some measure, even surpasses the more heavily stylized production of the Comedie-Francaise. They traverse every inch of the stage in grand, sweeping movements, they rattle off lines with the speed of machine guns, and always seem to be getting as much fun out of the proceedings as are the audience.

The first play of the evening, "Le Mariage Forcé", set the pace for the rest of the performance. Dealing with an elderly dotard who develops cold feet at the thought of his approaching marriage with a young and faithless wife, and who is finally forced into it at sword's point, the play jogs along at a furious pace, which only abates once (when the Magician—Jean Paul Jeannotte) sings a Lullaby interlude), and leaves the spectator limp with laughter.

Guy Hoffmann is absurdity personified as Sganarelle, master of the blank look, and of the fascinating leer. Dorimene, as portrayed by Denise Pelletier gives ample promise of pneumatic bliss, while Alcidas, as her brother, buckles swashingly.

But perhaps the best characterizations are those of the rival doctors, Jean Gascon and Georges Groulx, who, I think, even overshadowed Guy Hoffmann during the time they were onstage. Jean Louis Paris was properly nasty as the father of the bride.

"Sganarelle, ou le cocu imaginaire" was next on the program, and perhaps this was just as well. Director Jean Dalmain's blocking seemed artificial and forced in the extreme, especially those he imposed on Gaetan Labreche, the Universal Lover of the three plays. But even the continued excellent playing of the principals did not succeed in putting "The Imaginary Cuckold" across; this was in large measure a fault of the play, which, in comparison with the other two, lacks the sparkle and lightness so essential to comedy.

Guy Hoffmann this time shared top honors with Huguette Oligny; Denise Sainte-Pierre was an overly-mannered ingenue lead, while the rest of the company had little scope within which to demonstrate their talents. The curtain came as a distinct relief.

The final farce, "La Jalouse du Barbouille", was perhaps the high point of the whole evening. Denise Sainte-Pierre redeemed herself as the unfaithful wife, Jean-Louis Paris gave his best performance as the Father Image, and Denise Pelletier gave a ribald portrayal of the maid Cathaud; Jean Dalmain's direction was top-notch, order was restored, and a good time was had by all.

Georges Groulx repeatedly stole the scene from Guy Hoffmann, striding about the stage with his weird stomp (obviously a peripatetic philosopher), waved his arms, and uttered almost inimitable noises from time to time. The production, with its carnival atmosphere, was delightful in every way.

The evening was a success in every way but one: the audience, or the lack of it, which saw the plays. Those who by choice or accident missed these productions may console themselves with the thought that the loss was theirs, not that of this truly excellent company.

MacKellar recommends this one. It is a concert at Casa Loma November 13 featuring Portia White and The Ron Collier-Norm Symmonds Compositional Jazz Quintette.

Errol "the grunt" Garner and his Trio pays Toronto his respects Nov. 14, once again at Massey Hall.

WHAT'S NEW? Moe Koffman has just returned from New York and a big recording session. Should make good listening. More about release date and content later on... Cliff McKay has a new disc on Sparton Label. This is strictly a Benny Goodman type cut with the Canadian touch. Cliff always was and still is a very proficient jazz clarinetist and intends to devote all his time to this type of music.

Soccer At Western

Varsity soccer teams travel to London this Saturday to visit the University of Western Ontario teams. Both Varsity teams will be out to repeat their performances at the previous meeting of the two squads.

The Blues are already holders of one victory over the Mustangs as they defeated a fighting Western team several weeks ago in Toronto by a 4-0 score. This game was played in terrible weather conditions which favored the Blues more than it did the Mustangs and hence the Purple and White, on their own ground and with better weather, may give Tom Duncan and his crew a real battle.

The Baby Blues also own one victory over the Mustang Intermediate team registered when they swamped them by nine unanswered goals. Chris Carr has played his two allowed games with the Senior team and will be back with the Baby Blues. A doubtful starter is Mike Mahon. Mike, one of the main goal getters of the forward line is still limping with a bruised thigh. Georgie Walker is away on a field trip and will also be absent.

The following players should report at Hart House no later than eight o'clock Saturday morning.

BLUES: Vello Soos, Jim Watson, Paul Avis, Cabby Green, Ron William, Norm Shepherd, Jim Duncan, Bruno Bertolin, Emil Primorac, Bill Webb, Brian Michie, Stew Bell, and Roger Peretz.

BABY BLUES: Fred Ruprecht, Herb Hilgenberg, Ted Jensen, Oskar Reimann, Doug Taylor, Boris Sorokiwsky, Lloyd McKenzie, Chris Carr, Mike Mahon, Stan Fraser, Syd Smart, Peter Hamilton, Vic Herde, Doug Grant and Tim O'Leary.

Girl's Sports

It will be Vic I and PHE I opposing each other in a best two out of three girls' softball final which will be played at Western Stadium on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday of next week.

Vic, seeking its sixth successive softball title, reached the finals by defeating St. Mike's in a two-games, total-runs series by a score of 18-3.

The indoor interfaculty archery tournament ended yesterday with the team of Viuu Kanep and June Sceviuor, both intercollegiate players, winning the title for PHE. Meds, represented by Jean Hayward and Inara Grava were second followed by POT in third place.

Rinkies Meet Colts In Crucial Contest

Today's game is a must for Coach John Sopinka's Baby Blues. In order to win the title, they have to win all their remaining games. Western defeated the Rinkies by a 19-6 count three weeks ago, but Baby Blues have improved vastly since then.

After that loss to Western, Sopinka made several changes in his backfield to get more power running. Mike Muir, who started the season at the end position was moved to halfback, with the result that he has scored three touchdowns in the last two games.

Down from the Seniors is Al Connolly, who will be running from the fullback spot. Ray Dunn is also down from the Blues to lend a hand.

If Baby Blues win this game, they will eliminate the Colts from the title race. Ryerson, the current leaders, are meeting Queen's in the other Intermediate game this weekend.

Queen's can do Varsity a big favor by dumping the Ryerson team. That, coupled with a Varsity win over Western would give Baby Blues a chance to get the title all by themselves. First however, there is the little matter of beating the Colts.

Interfaculty Summary

Paced by the fine performances of Mike Berger and Roy Price, University College swept the Harrier Championship run yesterday afternoon at High Park.

Berger and Price finished first and second respectively. Dick Hamilton of Trinity was third and Jan Roos of Meds fourth.

Final standings had UC in first place with 24 points followed by Trinity with 31 and Emmanuel 37.

Soccer action had Knox defeating Pharmacy 1-0 on Harold Barker's goal.

Pre-Med "A" beat SPS III by a 4-0 count. Goal getters were Borgel (3) and James.

In Volleyball action, Sr. SPS defeated SPS III 15-12, 7-15, 15-5.

Lacrosse saw SMC "A" defeat UC I 7-6. Wheeler's hat-trick led the winners. St. Mike's "B" took Vic II 2-0.

Varsity offence again this week. He has not had a great deal of success this year with his passing, but Sopinka has been working hard on it this week.

Another surprise for Western will be the new angle that Sopinka has worked out on some of his running plays. It vaguely resembles the Fly-T of pro fame.

Man to watch on the Varsity defence is Casey Wood. Large Casey gets better every week out, and it is probable that the Western ball carriers are going to see a lot more of him than they want to.

And Don't Be Surprised If Blues Do Just That

Back on October 11, the Western Mustang football team chorused in unison: "Wait 'til November 1!" November 1 is here.

The entire 1958 Intercollegiate senior football program has been reduced to two hours of play.

They start at two bells in J. W. Little Memorial Stadium in London tomorrow.

Varsity coach Dalt White thinks his team can win. Blues are sure they can. Western coach John Metras gives his boys a 50-50 chance. Mustangs aren't really sure. Toronto has won in London only twice since 1938. First was a 9-8 playoff victory in 1954, and second was a 41-7 slaughter in league play two seasons ago. History would favor Western. But historical annals are being rewritten constantly, and Varsity Blues could well turn journalists tomorrow. They'll have plenty of contributing correspondents. Because no less than 1,000 game tickets have been sold here. At least one-tenth of the stadium will be Blue and White. By late afternoon, most of London could be the same color. Mustangs could be mostly blue. John Metras' stetson may even change color. The odds (and even the Western tern Gazette must agree) favor our Big Blue Machine. They favor Tim Reid and Pete Joyce on the ground; Brian Aston, Dick Risk and Dave Pinkham in the air; Larry Joynt, Bob Dann and Dave Creswell on defence. And they favor a third-year coach who paces the sidelines — tense moments from his first championship. The Yates Cup is on the wall—to which Mustangs have their derrieres. Blues must cross the Western moat and scale the battlements. Observers who have followed Varsity closely all season have placed their lira on Toronto. But . . . Western, perennially, is football-crazy. For never-say-die, small-school spirit, they're second only to Queen's. John Metras, for last-minute gambling, is notorious. Frank Cosentino is a gambler, too. Tomorrow, he may be forced to shoot the works on red when black has been a two-time winner. At hard, solid fundamental football, Blues are superior. At gambling, Mustangs are consistently successful. They will have to gamble tomorrow. And with Lionel Conacher's status uncertain, most of their bets will have to be through the air. And in the defensive backfield, waiting for those antes—Joynt, Creswell, Dann, Russell, Harding, Chisholm — some of the best croupiers in the racket. Go, you Blues!

Panthers Take Fourth Victory

Trinity Black Panthers kept their win streak intact yesterday as they defeated Sr. Skule 10-0 on the Back Campus in Group I play. Held to a 3-0 lead at the end of the third quarter by a rugged SPS line, Panthers took command in the last stanza when they scored their only touchdown. Pete Eby kicked a field goal to open the scoring late in the third quarter. The ball had been moved into position by some dazzling catches. First Mike Coke, and then Tony Boeckh took remarkable completions for the Black and Red. The fourth quarter was all Trinity. Their pass defence, porous earlier in the game, tightened up, while Brook Ellis began to find more Trinity receivers open. Again sensational catches set up the Trinity TD. Coke, John Swinden, and then Coke again for the score were the receivers in the drive. Boeckh converted to finish the scoring. Derek Lunn was a standout for the losers as he has been all this year. Bill Tyson led a hard tackling line. For Trinity, Coke was the individual standout with his uncanny pass catching, but essentially it was a team effort that gave the Black and Red their fourth win of the year.

Three years ago this coming February, a bombshell tumbled on the University of Toronto athletic scene. Robert Masterson announced his resignation as senior football coach. An era in Varsity sport had come to a close. Big Bob had established himself as a trade-mark of Toronto football, as a cup-winning leader, and as a groomer of top gridiron performers. His presence was to be missed. And the difficult task of selecting a replacement was undertaken by athletic officials. It was not in easy job. Not a few people were surprised when the final decision was announced. The complex and demanding task had fallen on the shoulders of a man who had never played an organized game of football. A. Dalton White, a virtual unknown in Canadian football circles, had taken over the reigns of football at the Dominion's largest university. Surrounding him on the Intercollegiate scene were American faces — John Metras at Western, Frank Tindall at Queen's and Larry Sullivan at McGill. Facing him was the project of building a depleted football squad into a champion contender. Blues had lost a playoff to Queen's in Kingston, 18-0, the previous fall. Dalt, with the assistance of Jack Kennedy and John McManus, plunged heartily into his new position in what was an unusual year for Intercollegiate football. Western's perennially-powerful Mustangs were hapless. Queen's were intent on retaining the title they had won the previous year. In between were Varsity and McGill. Critics eliminated Blues from the picture before the season began. A new coach, they said, wouldn't stand much of a chance in a league that still had Ron Stewart and his Golden Gaels. But Dalt came within 59 seconds and two points of disproving pre-season opinions. He carried his team to the league playoff, and watched his first championship go down the drain in a swish of Jocko Thompson's foot. Those who was that game will never forget the sheer drama and guts that lasted for two solid hours. Varsity played without seven regulars, all injured in the final league game. But they stopped the Gaels, battled them yard for yard, and swung his foot and touched off an atomic explosion. swung his foot and touched off an atomic explosion. A few minutes later, Dalt White stood, stunned, in Blues' dressing room, and said, in a quiet voice: "So near but yet so far; I can't believe it." In 1957, Blues simply lost to a better team, and Western bounced back to regain the title. Varsity ended the season tied with McGill at three wins and three losses. This season, Dalt stands on the threshold of satisfaction. Eager and alert, he has exploited new rule changes to his favor, moulding a team that is rated unbeatable in blocking and in basic football. Shortly before 2 p.m. tomorrow, Dalt will utter final words of encouragement to 28 football players, and send them out to face a formidable foe. Varsity Blues are only 60 minutes away from virtually assuring their coach of his first championship. They want a Yates Cup for Dalt, and they're going to get it.

For Quebec Students: More Trouble

Quebec Association Crumbling

MONTREAL, (CUP) — French Canada's isolated student association appears to be falling apart at the seams.

The Association of French Speaking Canadian University Students (ACULF) received a solid thumping from the University of Montreal student council last week.

A motion to endorse a new ACULF, to make it French Canadian Nfcus, was defeated by an almost unanimous vote.

Until now ACULF has been a purely cultural association of the University of Montreal, University of Ottawa, Sudbury University, three small Maritime universities, a western university, and the University of Sherbrooke — founder of the group.

Last year U of M joined the National Federation of Canadian University Students and since has re-affirmed its faith in the organization of both French and English speaking universities.

With Ottawa, U of M was the only major university in ACULF. Laval University, a strong backer of Nfcus, has never joined ACULF.

With the departure of U of M, and a probable withdrawal of Ottawa in the near future, ACULF appears doomed.

Ottawa, a bilingual university, has never given much more than majority support to the exclusively French language ACULF.

The Association has gained a good deal of disfavor on many campuses because it was believed it was backed by "Ordre de Jacques Cartier" — a rabidly nationalist French speaking and Catholic secret society.

The vote at U of M was taken to be a repudiation of the narrow attitudes and aims of ACULF and a vote of support for the bi-cultural Nfcus.

This year ACULF spokesmen admitted the aim of their group was to push Nfcus out of French Canada and replace it with an exclusive and revamped ACULF.

All but two members of the U of M student council voted against the proposed new form of ACULF.

The Association was formed in the spring of 1957, but as yet has shown no concrete action.

The revamped form of ACULF was to include an educational program. Opponents pointed out that the majority of ACULF's members were spread across the country, and that each university would have to bargain separately with their respective governments.

An attack on ACULF appeared on the front page of the U of M's Quartier Latin last week. Editor Gilles Tessier wrote:

"I cannot, with all the good faith in the world, find any sufficient reason to justify an association such as ACULF."

No unified education program could be carried out by an association spread across several provinces, Tessier said. Regional committees of Nfcus should be used for this, or Quebec universities should turn to the Quebec Association of Universities.

"It is Utopian and impossible to believe that ACULF could be of any use to us without denying the constitutional realities of our country . . .

"We are a part of Nfcus — which is not perfect — but which we can improve by active participation."

Tessier said exchanges between French and English speaking universities would be much more valuable than between solely French speaking universities.

"In all ways we have nothing to gain by isolating ourselves," he wrote.

UWO Students Council Gets Discipline Power

LONDON, (CUP) — Full powers to handle student misdemeanors such as drinking and other acts "detrimental to the university" have been delegated to a special committee of the University of Western Ontario's student council.

The idea was approved last week by council members. It follows unfavorable publicity on drinking at Western football games last year.

The Judicial Committee is empowered to summons offenders to appear before it and to mete out fines of $5 to $50. Dismissal or restriction of privileges may be requested.

Decisions of the five-man committee must be unanimous concerning the guilt of the accused and the size of the penalty to be imposed.

Accused students and committee members may call a maximum of three witnesses to testify on each case.

The new committee may also appoint students to police football games and other university functions. All students may report rule infractions to the Judicial committee.

Purple People Eaten

By JOHN BROOKS
Varsity Sports Editor

LONDON, Nov. 1 — Engineering one of the greatest scoring feats in Intercollegiate history, Varsity Blues battered Western Mustangs into football oblivion, 46-0, before 10,000 stunned onlookers here today.

Victory gave Blues virtual assurance of their 20th Yates Cup and their first college grid title since 1954. The humiliation was Western's worst since they started competition in 1929.

For 60 minutes, Varsity simply out-fought, out-smashed and out-played Mustangs, scoring before the game was 10 minutes old and never looking back. The slaughter became bloodier as it progressed.

As this is written, three Mustangs are in hospital, two with head injuries and one with a damaged leg. Ed Meads was removed by ambulance following the game with a severe concussion, and Wayne Neal (head) and Doug MacKenzie (leg) departed before the final gun.

Western had possession of the ball inside the Varsity 25-yard line only once in the game, and Blues' sharp pass defence thwarted three stabs by quarterback Frank Cosentino to put his team on the score sheet.

The final result silenced critics who had called Varsity "lucky" in the first two games (26-20 and 38-14) and who had pointed to a "porous" defence as a weakness Mustangs would exploit.

That "porous" defence held Western to 71 yards on the ground (including a net total of minus 14 in the second half), and allowed Cosentino only five completions in 20 pass tries for 46 yards.

Varsity, on the other hand, exhibited a diversified attack that was, almost literally, murder. Blues raced for 374 yards on the turf, and completed 12 aeriels in 25 attempts for 182 yards.

Blues' coach Dalt White inserted his second-string in the third quarter when it was 30-0, and the substitutes promptly rubbed it in, moving 36 yards in four plays for another major.

And, to add the final, biting stab, halfback Tim Reid kicked the first convert of his life on the final touchdown. If Reid can score three touchdowns next week against McGill, he'll finish his college career with 100 points.

Reid counted one major to go with his convert, bread-and-butter fullback Pete Joyce had two TD's, Gene Chorostecki and

Snildians Retaliate By Reversing Pantie Raid

About 40 hamsters, a half-dozen pigeons, a couple of shortlived abductions and a pantie-raid in reverse colored St. Hilda's traditional freshie initiations Thursday night.

The pantie-raid, by about 30 St.

Hilda's freshies on the Trinity College men's residence was performed after Trinity men had finished an evening of plaguing the St. Hilda's "dubbing".

The girls were apprehended on the third floor of Trinity's Welsh House by a half-dozen Trinity men.

The girls blocked the stairs with furniture and waved male underwear. But they got trapped and the men let them out one by one and threw each in the showers until Dean A. J. Earp arrived.

The animals had been thrown earlier into a suddenly-darkened room in St. Hilda's full of frosh undergoing traditional "dubbing" rights, by Trinity men. The men were speedily evicted with the help of the Trinity hall porter, imported for such a purpose.

Eight St. Hilda's girls were abducted in two afternoon skirmishes with men.

Four girls escaped or were let loose. The rest were delivered to St. Hilda's during the early evening, covered with various combinations of water, shaving cream, toothpaste and black and yellow paint.

Comparing Literatures Helps Nations — Prof.

A U of T English professor last night said a comparative study of the literatures of the world would lead to a better understanding among nations.

Speaking to a meeting of the International Students' Organization, Dr. Donald Theall said literature is becoming "compartmentalized" into various language groups.

To say one language is superior to another, he said, can only be called "a manifestation of racism."

In future international language may arise to aid this understanding, he said, but no satisfactory answer has yet been given. The common language could only be reached by a careful comparison of languages and cultures, he said.

He denied that there is any true distinction between the social sciences and the humanities in the study of language.

"We owe a great debt to the anthropologist to the scientific study of languages," he said. "It would be foolhardy for the humanist to attempt to study a modern language without regard for these developments."

A letter to University of Ottawa rector, Rev. H. F. Legare, criticized the dismissal of editors Louis Cliche, Pierre Trudel and Roger Roy, as "a direct contravention of the freedom of the press."

The CUP protest came in the face of a public letter 10 days ago which was distributed around the campus announcing the firing of La Rotonde's editorial board.

Urging the rector to reconsider the decision, the CUP protest called the dismissal "a grave blow to university journalism in this country and a denial of one of the bases of a university education."

"The right to publish outspoken views, and to defend those ideas we hold to be right, have always been a vital part of university education."

CUP Officially Condemns Firing Of Ottawa Editors

La Rotonde, a member of Canadian University Press, was scheduled to be published Friday. It did not appear on campus because the paper is now without any Editorial Board.

The Students' Federation refused last week to accept the resignations of Cliche, Trudel, and Roy, but U of O officials have said the firing of the editors will not be reversed.

Dismissal of the three has drawn criticism in the student press across the country.

Stainless Steel

puts a lasting smile on the face of a building

Now under construction, the modern office building of Atlas Steels Limited in Welland, Ontario, will have a bright, shiny stainless steel exterior. The stainless steel used in the curtain walls of this building contains Inco Nickel.

Everyone knows that in time, the face of a city can get pretty grimy. Now it needn't... ever. That's the beauty of this modern method of building... stainless steel curtain wall construction. The bright, smooth surface on the outer wall of a building washes clean with every rainfall. Upkeep expense is negligible.

Curtain wall construction costs less in the long run. The walls go up in panels quickly and easily. They reflect sunlight. They won't crack or buckle. Stainless steel curtain walls are less than half as thick as masonry walls, allowing more useable space. The walls weigh less, too. Builders can use lighter—and less costly—steel columns.

That's the economy of stainless steel curtain wall construction. It explains why a number of new buildings will have these bright, shiny, rust-resistant stainless steel outer walls. And Inco supplies nickel to the Canadian steel company that produces stainless steel.

Nickel helps give stainless steel its rich, silvery lustre and its exceptional strength... makes it easy to fabricate. Small wonder that fine tableware, modern sinks and so many other beautiful and practical items for the home are now made with nickel-containing stainless steel. Another example of the way Inco metals serve the Canadian industries that serve you.

Inco has recently published a colourful and beautifully illustrated 32-page booklet about Canada's important nickel industry, entitled "The Exciting Story of Nickel". It is written primarily for Canadian youth by Alan King, but adults will also find it full of interesting information. Just write to Inco for a free copy of this booklet.

Near-Sighted Dogs Sick de Gaulle a Popular Six Chicks On Engineers Patron In Ontario

Six chickens and a new society made their appearance on campus Thursday night.

The chickens were placed in the Engineering Building last night by the 'Myopic Puppy Fellowship' along with a sign on the Engineering Stores door, which read:

"You are now the proud owners of 10 chickens! courtesy — The Myopic Puppy Fellowship."

Only six chickens were found in the building. These were collected by the cleaning staff from all floors of the building, and were returned to their cage (which had been left in the main downstairs hall).

The chickens were claimed by two unidentified Medsmen who tied them outside the south door of the Medical Building.

One chicken was taken into an engineering lecture, and another to a general science calculus lecture in the Medical Building.

The remaining three were removed by University Staff.

One chicken has not been accounted for.

Mystery still surrounds the question of how the chickens were left in the Engineering building in the first place.

They were there when the cleaning staff came at 7 a.m., but there was no sign of anything suspicious when the building was closed at 10.30 the night before.

KINGSTON (CUP) — Charles de Gaulle probably thinks it's a great honor to be Premier of France — but he is probably wondering why he makes such a hit in Ontario.

Last week it was announced the French Premier had been invited to participate at the annual Queen's Science Formal — Paris au Clair de Lune.

The week before he had been invited to be patron to the University College Follies at the University of Toronto.

A letter to de Gaulle asking him to attend the function said: "We, the Engineering students of Queen's University, would be very pleased and honored to receive you as our guest of honor at the pre-formal banquet and the dance following."

Describing the formal as "the foremost social event of the year," the letter advised the premier he had been the unanimous choice of the Formal Committee.

No reply has been received from de Gaulle about either attendance at the Formal or accepting the position of patron of the Follies.

SPS Elects.....

Results of several Engineering Society by-elections were announced Friday.

Successful candidates were: 6T0 president, R. W. Sydiaha; 6T2 president, S. Klick; Director of professional relations, J. C. Bonham and 6T2 athletic representative, G. J. Van Terson.

"The voting turnout was not very great," Tom Easterbrook, mechanical representative said last night. "However this being a by-election, it can only be expected to take second place to the general spring election."

In addition, these appointments were made by the society: director of publicity and public relations, J. Phillips; external affairs representative, Doug Branion; yearbook editor, Alec Turner.

sacred degraded

Laws are not passed in a vacuum. Government does its work in a context, and when the context changes, the laws change.

In this country the context in which law acts is the basic public conviction that a human being has certain basic rights. This is the foundation on which the superstructure of our laws has been erected. Legislation is nothing more than the adaptation of the general public ideal to deal with certain specific areas of our society. In this way law makes use of the basic convictions of a society. But it cannot create and sustain these convictions. On the contrary, these convictions create and sustain the law.

This is the paradox of the government's recent proposal for a Canadian Bill of Rights. The paradox emerges even in the name of the Bill, "An Act for the Recognition and Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms." The law, that is, protects the idea of human rights; but if so, then what protects the law? Surely the government has got the thing the wrong way around and it is the idea of human rights that is responsible for the recognition and protection of law.

But if the law cannot protect the idea of human rights because that idea protects the law, then how can our human rights be safeguarded?

The only answer that is possible for our society is that human rights can seek protection only in the source from which they spring, the conviction of people of a nation that there are such things, as human rights. They will exist only so long as the private conscience and the public morality are convinced that they must exist.

To codify human rights into an act of Parliament is not simply illogical; it is full of the danger of public complacency and government paternalism. For if a government is allowed to recognize human rights can it not just as well repeal them, when the convictions that inspired that recognition fail?

For the healthy functioning of a nation there can be no substitute for a vigilant public that is willing to take the initiative in preserving its ideals.

The idea that the law is sacred does not exalt the law. It only degrades the sacred. SA triple - speak

In George Orwell's novel, 1984, the party in power invents a distorted language called "Double-speak" to keep its subjects in check.

This week Soviet authors seem to be using "Double-speak" against the party. Moscow radio says they have denounced their colleague Boris Pasternak in 10 languages and have demanded that he be kicked out of the country.

It is hard to analyze the devious literary mind but it is our guess that this was the only way they could find to help Nobel prizewinner Pasternak win his freedom from Soviet authority.

They are doing so, we think, because they recognize the Nobel award as a tribute not simply to Pasternak's "Dr. Zhivago," but also to the books they might have written had they been given the chance.

And if Pasternak does gain his freedom, the thought of their contribution to it will make it slightly easier for them to accept their position as party hacks for a long time to come.

Even a party hack has his moment of glory. SA

The question of:

of parliament, especially if the government of the day feels so inclined.

The order-in-council by the government in 1945 deporting 7,000 Japanese, many of whom were Canadian citizens, is an example. Another was the order-in-council in the same year which deprived of habeas corpus the Canadian citizens accused of espionage, some of which were subsequently found innocent.

Because these abuses were perpetrated by an order-in-council—an act of the cabinet rather than of parliament—Mr. Diefenbaker proposes in his new bill that parliament be the protector of the liberties of Canadians.

However, as opposition leader, Lester Pearson pointed out, parliament can be tyrannical too. Mr. Pearson did not commit the Liberals to a position on the new bill.

The CCF followed their consistent line; namely, that the Bill of Rights be incorporated by constitutional amendment.

There is no easy answer to this complex legal problem with its political overtones.

But one point sticks out. It is no use passing the best legislation in the world if public opinion does not undergird it—witness the southern states.

American Judge Learned Hand's words are valid: "Liberty lies in the hearts of men and women; when it dies there, no constitution, no law, no court, can save it."

Proposed Bill

(Excerpts)

"An Act for the Recognition and Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms."

It is hereby recognized and declared that in Canada there have always existed and shall continue to exist the following human rights and fundamental freedoms, namely,

- (a) the right of the individual to life, liberty, security of the person and enjoyment of property and the right not to be deprived thereof except by due process of law;
- (b) the right of the individual to protection of the law without discrimination by reason of race, national origin, colour, religion or sex;
- (c) freedom of religion;
- (d) freedom of speech;
- (e) freedom of assembly and association; and
- (f) freedom of the press.

No such act, order, rule, regulation or law shall be construed or applied so as to

- (a) impose or authorize the imposition of torture, or cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment;
- (b) deprive a person who has been arrested or detained
 - (i) of the right to be informed promptly of the reason for his arrest or detention
 - (ii) of the right to retain and instruct counsel without delay, or
 - (iii) of the remedy by way of habeas corpus for the determination of the validity of his detention and for his release if the detention is not lawful;

- (c) authorize a court, tribunal, commission, board or other authority to compel a person to give evidence if he is denied counsel or other constitutional safeguards;

- (d) deprive a person of the rights to a fair hearing in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice for the determination of his rights and obligations; or

- (e) deprive a person of the right to a fair and public hearing by an independent and impartial tribunal for the determination of any criminal charge against him.

6 Section 6 of the War Measures Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"6. (1) Sections 3, 4 and 5 shall come into force only upon the issue of a proclamation of the Governor in Council declaring that war, invasion or insurrection, real or apprehended, exists.

(2) A proclamation declaring that war, invasion or insurrection, real or apprehended, exists shall be laid before Parliament forthwith after its issue, or, if Parliament is then not sitting, within the first fifteen days next thereafter.

(3) Where a proclamation has been laid before Parliament pursuant to subsection (2), a notice of motion in either House signed by ten members thereof and made in accordance with the rules of that House within ten days of the day the proclamation was laid before Parliament, praying that the proclamation be revoked, shall be debated in that House at the first convenient opportunity within the four sitting days next after the day the motion in that House was made.

(4) If both Houses of Parliament resolve that the proclamation be revoked, it shall cease to have effect, and sections 3, 4 and 5 shall cease to be in force until those sections are again brought into force by a further proclamation but without prejudice to the previous operation of those sections or anything duly done or suffered thereunder or any offence committed or any penalty or forfeiture or punishment incurred.

The matter of a Bill of Rights for Canada is still up in the air. Canadians have not yet got any constitutional guarantee of the civil liberties—freedom of speech, religion, assembly, etc.—which Americans proclaimed in the first ten amendments to their constitution.

The latest official step in that direction was taken September 5 this year when Prime Minister Diefenbaker introduced in the House of Commons a draft of his proposed Bill of Rights—a subject dear to his heart for many years.

By all-party consent the bill was tabled and held over for debate at the next session of parliament, but the comments made in the process were revealing because they illustrated well the problem of securing a Bill of Rights for Canada.

Three basic questions arise:

1. Do we need a Bill of Rights at all? Are we not sufficiently protected by custom and by the laws of the land?

2. If the answer to 1. is no, then how can we best protect our civil liberties? By amending our written constitution—the British North America Act—to include a declaration of basic rights like the Americans? Or by passing an ordinary act of parliament which sets out a citizen's fundamental liberties?

3. Has the federal parliament the power, under the constitution, to legislate on civil liberties?

Taking the first point first, the question can be argued with some justification either way.

The BNA Act distributes the powers of government between the federal government at Ottawa and the ten provincial administrations.

One clause in the list of powers assigned to the provinces in section 92 of the act declares that "property and civil rights" is a provincial matter. This is the famous—or notorious—subsection 13, well-numbered since it has spelt bad luck for the dominion government since 1867. Under its vague and elastic implications, the provinces have been able to fight a number of legal actions against Ottawa which have been decided in their favor and vastly increased their authority.

At first glance it would appear that civil liberties properly belong to a category labeled "property and civil rights". That is how many provincial authorities feel, particularly in Premier Duplessis' Quebec.

On the other hand section 91 of the act gives the dominion a general power "to make laws for the peace, order and good government of Canada" in all matters except those given to the provinces.

If, therefore, "property and civil rights" is construed in a narrow sense so that it does not include say freedom of the press or freedom of religion, then clearly those matters fall under federal jurisdiction.

It all depends on how the BNA act is interpreted. And that job belongs to the Canadian Supreme Court. The trouble here is that the court has not given enough decisions for it to be clear generally which government has the power.

Initially all the provinces and the dominion could pass similar acts. But there is little hope of that because some of the provinces feel Ottawa has no rights in this field.

For the same reasons there is little hope of securing a constitutional amendment to which the provinces would agree.

Furthermore, any amendment passed by the dominion could be repealed just as readily by the same process and that isn't much protection. This is also the weakness in passing an ordinary act

A Pleasant Peek At Show Biz

Stage Struck (York) is a charming, sensitive, often moving peek backstage at the overtly unreal world that is Broadway.

Into the office of an eminent producer (Henry Fonda) floats a breathy, bit of theatrical fluff (Susan Strasberg), who simply will not stop talking.

"I've played them all" she coos to a seasoned professional (Herbert Marshall). "I reverence the things you've done in the theatre", she coyly informs producer Fonda.

"I simply adored you in 'The Doll's House'", she passes along to a veteran actress (Joan Greenwood), who returns the compliment with "the theatre's gain is Macy's loss".

Later, when a young playwright (Christopher Plummer) takes her on an opening-night party, she gets embarrassingly drunk, plays Juliet from a nearby staircase and winds up in bed with producer Fonda. And so it goes, until the little nobody from Ordway, Vermont draws faves and a valley of curtain-calls as a brilliant young star.

It's all very staggy stuff, but then it's all very well done. At first, the affected sophistication and unreal timbre of theatre people annoys and disturbs the viewer. But the consummate insight of Screenwriters Ruth and Augustus Goetz reveals the hidden hopes, fears, loves and inspirations of these outwardly artificial mannequins. Director Sidney Lumet fortunately knows the theatre as well as he knows his craft and the combination is rich and satisfying. His casting is flawless, and in newcomer Susan Strasberg he finds a young, but amazingly mature performer, who breathes warmth and sincere vitality into every line.

In all, this film is not only a realistic insight; it is also a charming education.

grab me a gondola or Venice Observed

Reds, blacks, greens, blues and whites slip and glide along the canals of sun doused Venezia. Oh, Joy! Ria Schiavoni! Swirling, the paints spin and spiral up the Subriaco slopes and down beneath the Bridge of Sighs. Up and down the soupy sea of candy cane colour the doges dodge and dip in tippy gondolas. Oh, Snomoni! Oh, Ricotoni! Colours running like Rufino. Up and down and in between. No selecting!

"I can't explain why I paint like that," said York Wilson, a voluminous talker. "Something inside comes out. I never know how a painting will turn out and in what particular style I'll work it. You can't explain these things. But there are exceptions:

Cathedral: Romanticized realistic drawing. Overlaid with small shapes of different colours.

"I was so impressed with Chartres Cathedral's stain glass windows that the next day when I drew this church, Chartres stain glass colours kept pouring out of me until they worked their way into the drawing."

Jaunty ship shapes in several shades: "A sailor from the RCYC said these were sailing ships. That's right I gave him the impression. He filled in the details. The non-sailor? Let him work harder. People are lazy. They won't look and let their sense and imagination flow for them.

Painting is not something to make you think but feel. You've got to feel it."

"You're painting in oils again. Some people believe this is a new departure. (Humorously) Couldn't you buy Duco in Italy?"

"But that's exactly it. I didn't know the Italian word for it. I looked and looked. Finally I settled on oils. Getting back to oils gave me a thrilling sense of re-discovery."

"So many of your paintings remind me of other artist's work. Do you deliberately experiment in other painters' styles hoping it will enhance what you are doing? For instance this reminds me of Binning, this Hedrick, this looks like a Shadbolt and this definitely reminds me of a Cahen painting called Black and Red Forms.

"No, no, no, Cahen and I work completely different. I wanted to work in red that day so I began here and then in with the blacks and filling this in with blues etc. as I went along. Cahen used his reds positively letting the other colours counterbalance. I did the reverse. If anyone, it's Rico Lebrun (Hedrick's former teacher) who has influenced me the most. He's the supreme draftsman.

"Have you any painting hanging here that you would consider a failure? ... No, no I leave them in the studio."

old man and the sea and too much narration

In bringing Hemingway's short novel to the screen, producer Leland Haywood and director John Sturges faced problems in their way as insurmountable as those of the old man, and like his, their success can be measured, not by what they have captured and brought back, but by the greatness of the attempt itself.

They had the difficult task of taking a character who before anything else, was a fisherman, completely at one with his environment, and changing it slightly, to someone a little less efficient, a little more human, a little easier for an audience to identify with. Hemingway's old man was hard, thin and strong, and Spencer Tracy cannot be blamed if he gives an impression, with his rounded shoulders and kindly eyes, more of gentleness than of resiliency. He struggles, not as some remote and perfectly attuned being, but rather as you or I would struggle.

In bringing Hemingway's short novel to the screen, producer Leland Haywood and director John Sturges faced problems in their way as insurmountable as those of the old man, and like his, their success can be measured, not by what they have captured and brought back, but by the greatness of the attempt itself.

It is tempting to think what a European producer would have done to The Old Man and the Sea. It is the type of story that one might think called for black and white photography, a musical accompaniment of one instrument, an unknown actor, and a minimum of narration. There is a great deal in this film. But that would be a different film altogether. What we have is a meaningful attempt, within the limits set by a big production, to bring alive a story that, for all its simplicity and grandeur, has an elusive quality. It is a novel whose riches have not been exhausted by one filming.

Something old, Something New, Something hhoa--

"Zip! Walter Lippman wasn't brilliant today; Zip! Will Saroyan ever write a great play?" Apparently the Trinity Dramatic Society thinks he has, because their major production this year will be The Cave Dwellers, to be presented in Hart House Dec. 10-13.

The production is under the direction of Pamela Terry, whose Waiting For Godot won the Central Ontario Drama Festival last year. The Cave Dwellers will star Ruth Ann Scott, Wilson McTavish, Jackie Burroughs, Thomas Drew-Brooke, Eve Hargraft and Jamie Cunningham. Get your tickets early and enjoy the "sloppy bonhomie" of William Saroyan.

Hurroa Foa Hhoa! After Elmo's constant moans, and our constant groans, the Great Hall of Hart House was finally packed to capacity with musical enthusiasts (or snobs?) to witness the return of the Hart House Orchestra, under the direction of Boyd Neel, proudly bearing its Brussels' laurel.

The tragic change of evening seemed to have caused no major disasters—the same mellow atmosphere pervaded the hall, and as usual we were able to sit and digest our dinner, recover from vino's intoxication, and nod to the sweet strains of Mozart. Mozart lovers revelled in two hours of undiluted bliss.

The opening concert of HHOA was undoubtedly a great success. (Was it Brussels that did it, or may we be so smug as to think it may have been us...?)

... Don't forget the Vic Bob Revue at Hart House, tonight, Tuesday and Wednesday.

Then, too, there was the problem of a story taking place almost entirely on the open sea, yet intimately, in a small boat. To surmount this they have filmed most shots of Tracy near Hawaii, superimposed on shots of the Caribbean sea and sky behind. This may destroy some of the "oneness" of fisherman and environment, and is perhaps most noticeable in sequences of the marlin jumping

French-Canadian players superb in Molière

"Le Malade Imaginaire", the most tragic of Molière's comedies, obsessed as it is by the idea of death, and overshadowed for posterity by Molière's own death after his fourth appearance in the title role, simply bubbled over with mirth at the Royal Alex last Saturday.

Success or failure depend almost entirely on the interpretation of the part of the Malade. Guy Hoffmann was able, fully, to demonstrate his talent as a comedian. The key word here is that classical tenet: naturalness. We shall long remember his bag of tricks: the little pill drawer, so cunningly built into the "sick chair", the baggy pants which revealed for a brief peek, the pink roses of his nightshirt. But above all, we shall remember the round, marvelling eyes drawing the whole audience into his own dilemma, as they express now credulity, now shrewdness, and most often a mixture of both—the childish outbursts of rage mingling with intervals of paternal responsibility and affection. In short, what was most striking—and right—was the warm, accessible humanity everywhere visible through the mask of the "type". Not even in the burlesque ending did Argan lose this superb flesh and blood solidity.

Argan was ably coaxed and cheated by a truly feline Beline who used her long neck and slender fingers to great advantage. Toinette, the maid, lacked the broad humanity which the part—the embodiment of common sense—demands. Her teasing was too detached, although in her disguise as the visiting specialist she maintained the tone of hard comedy in this farcical scene of the play. Angelique Denyse Saint-Pierre was a joy to look at whether she dutifully bobbed her fair curls or touchingly defended her right to marry for love.

The only serious weakness, apart from Beralde's unfortunate make-up, was the great Diafoirus scene where farce, by making inaudible Diafoirus' immortal praises of his son, ousted comedy—and comedy of the highest order. In that same scene, however, the long narrative of the music master-lover was skillfully spiced by Thomas, juggling with the Faculty hats and Argan's vain efforts to retrieve his spilled cough-drops. The serious scene of discussion between the believer and the heretic in matters of medicine, was effectively done with Beralde, for one brief moment, dethroning Argan by seating himself in the sick man's chair.

As for the difficult semi-tragic incident when Argan feigns death, the corpse's inability to lie still or to remember its original position in the famous chair, reduced the audience to helpless laughter.

The set with its shades of creams and browns and its cunning revolving panels was excellent. The traditional, rather tedious interludes (not often performed for that reason) were aptly replaced by typical scenes from the Commedia dell'Arte, in which Gabriel Gascon pranced about in the best Barreault tradition.

One more word about the final ballet which sees the 'Malade' becoming his own doctor—the roll of drums, the perfect timing, the red cloaks, with just enough of the "dog latin" audible, made this apotheosis of Argan superb, while never ceasing to hammer the satire home.

BLUE WEEKEND FOR WESTERN

Baby Blues Win Third Edge Out Colts 21-19

By DAVE GRINER
Varsity Staff Reporter

Varsity Baby Blues took another step along the comeback road Friday as they defeated Western Colts to take over undisputed possession of second place.

After a shaky first half in which they had to hold Western on third down no less than five times inside the Varsity 20 yard line, Baby Blues finally pulled together to the second half and rode to victory on John Reimer's toe.

Ahead 7-0 at the half on Mike Muir's 23 yard TD pass from quarterback Ev Rush, Rinkies saw their lead disappear when a third down gamble on their own 16 yard line failed, to open the second half.

Western took over the ball and in three plays Clark Samway went over. Larry Fazakas converted and it was 7-7.

After an exchange of punts following the kickoff, Varsity went ahead 8-7 when Reimer's punt took a good bounce and rolled 80 yards into the Western end zone where the safety man was rouged.

A recovered fumble gave Baby Blues their next chance, and they were quick to take advantage of it. Al Connolly was on the receiving end of a swing pass from Rush and he went 21 yards behind good blocking for the score. The convert attempt was wide.

An interception gave Varsity another chance, but the drive bogged down and Reimer kicked another single. 15-7.

Varsity scored again six plays later when Reimer (again!) spiraled a long punt 60 yards into the end zone. 16-7.

Western out the margin in the fourth quarter as they made desperate efforts to get back in the ball game.

Dick Stewart picked up a short Toronto punt and burst 36 yards for the TD. The convert was no good. Varsity 16 Colts 13.

Varsity marched on receiving the kickoff but the drive died at the Western 30 and Varsity kicked on third down. The safety man just made it to the one yard line, and escaped the rouge, but all to no avail. Tom Watt

Varsity captain, broke through on the next play to throw the Western quarterback for a safety touch. 18-13.

Toronto added to their lead a few minutes later when Reimer kicked an 18 yard field goal. 21-13.

Western got back in the game with 30 seconds left as a series of passes clicked. Bert Taylor scored on a pass from Gary Boug. The convert was blocked, and although Western tried two short kickoffs, they could not get the ball and Varsity ran out the clock to gain a hard earned victory.

The game was a melange of mistakes, and Western made one or two more than Varsity. Baby Blues scored in every way possible, but it nearly wasn't enough as the Western squad never knew when they were beaten.

Baby Blues backfield of Connolly, Muir, and Pete Robertson all ran very well and some of the new plays that coach John Sopinka installed this last week went very well indeed.

Sloppy tackling nearly handed the Colts two touchdowns in the first half but Varsity got out unscathed somehow.

Reimer, despite a poor start, kicked some long punts near the end and the seven points scored from his toe (one field goal, one convert and three singles) proved to be the margin of victory.

Baby Blues meet Ryerson next Friday in a showdown for the title. Ryerson won the first meeting this year 18-0, but Rinkies have improved beyond recognition since then. Still Ryerson are tough and Baby Blues will have to go all out if they want to beat them.

CONGRATULATIONS— Mustang coach John Metras can still manage a smile as he offers congratulations to a victorious Dalt White following Saturday's 46-0 clobbering in London. Metras called Blues "the best team out of Toronto in 25 years" and classed his own squad as "physically battered."

Soccer Teams Both Win Easily Blues Invited To Play Michigan

By NORM SHEPHERD
Varsity Staff Reporter

LONDON, Nov. 1—Varsity continued on their undefeated march towards the Intercollegiate Soccer championship with a resounding 5-0 victory over Western here today.

Out of seven games this season, all but one have been won without conceding a goal. Blues will be going all out to retain their shutout record when they tackle Guelph at home this coming Saturday.

Varsity started off with ten men and immediately launched a continuous assault on the Mustang goal. No goals were scored, however, until midway through the first half when Roger Perezet netted two in quick succession.

The first goal was scored from an acute angle, and Western were sceptical as to whether the ball entered the net in front of, or behind, the post.

The second half was dominated by Varsity, who played exhibition soccer, baffling their opponents with short, crisp ground passing.

Emil Primorac converted a pass from Brian Michcz to make the score 3-0.

The next two goals came from corner kicks taken by Stew Bell. Jim Duncan connected beautifully with the first one to glide the ball into the net.

Billy Webb closed out the scoring with a close in shot following Bell's second corner kick.

Once again the Varsity defence proved impregnable and kept the forwards in copious supply of the ball with good clearing kicks and passes.

It would be impossible to single out any player in this well-balanced Varsity team, as everyone played his part in the victory.

The intermediate game saw Toronto take its second victory as Rinkies defeated Western Colts 5-1.

Despite the fact that Varsity were below strength for the game, they completely outplayed their opponents.

Goal scorers were Mike Mahon, Chris Carr (2), Stan Fraser, and Doug Taylor.

An invitation has been extended to Blues to play an exhibition game against University of Michigan at Ann Arbor, Michigan on November 23.

The trip is eagerly awaited by the members of the team, but the question of financing has not yet been settled.

Slim Hope For Redmen

MONTREAL, Nov. 1 — McGill Redmen edged Queen's Golden Gaels 16-13 to gain third place in the Intercollegiate Senior Football loop here today.

In the first quarter, a hard-hitting Gael line and good running by Bob McAleese and Mike Wicklum, held Redmen tied to their own end. Penalties killed Queen's major scoring chances, Jocko Thompson kicking a single point.

In the second frame, McGill pounced on a Queen's fumble on Gaels' 16-yard line. Wally Bulchak crashed for the major in three tries. Charles McLaughlin kicked the convert.

Another Queen's fumble on their own 25 set up a Dick Carr to Steve O'Farrell pass to the Gaels' five-yard line. Two plays later Carr hit Gord Merritt with a blistering pass to the end zone for the major. McLaughlin's convert was good.

In the third quarter the defensive units of both teams tightened, the score remaining 14-1 for McGill.

Queen's rallied in the fourth quarter but penalties killed the early drive for a major score. McGill kicking their way out of trouble.

Thompson booted a long downwind punt which Redmen fumbled. Ross Arber recovering for Queen's on the McGill 38.

Within four plays Cal Connor galloped around end from the McGill 10 for the first Gael touchdown. The convert failed. Three minutes later, climaxing a brilliant downfield march, Terry Porter raced over for the second Queen's major. The game-tying convert failed.

In the final second of play, McGill roared back, Leo Konyk nailing Connor behind the Gaels' line.

A McGill win over Varsity next Saturday, coupled with a Queen's win over Western, would force a playoff between Varsity and McGill.

Ross Rocks SPS Banquet Praises Russian Standards

U of T vice-president Murray Ross, called in at the last minute to pinch-hit for newspaper columnist Bruce West at Thursday's Engineering banquet, wound up dropping a bombshell, an Engineering Society member said last night.

Gary Baker, first vice-president of the society, said Skulemen at the banquet are still talking about what Dr. Ross said about education in Russia.

Although Dr. Ross said he did not want to draw any comparisons between North America and Soviet education, he said he was impressed by the standards of work demanded, the money spent on education and the adequacy of the facilities in Russia.

Russia, the vice-president said, is spending more money for each student on education than we are.

He believes the Russian schools are turning out very good technicians, although without a particularly broad background.

However, he said, technical students are being turned out with a knowledge of at least two languages besides Russian.

High standards of behavior and concentration are demanded of the Russian child from the beginning of his education, Dr. Ross said. But all education is free on every level.

Facilities, he said, seem to be adequate if not elaborate. He found a complete selection of Canadian technical periodicals, for instance, in the libraries.

The humanities are taught in colleges in Russia, he said, but the various professions such as engineering and medicine are taught in separate technical schools.

Some of these technical schools are of a size comparable of the U of T.

Almost all Russian students, Dr. Ross said, live on-campus and most residences have libraries.

Russian people, the vice-president said, frequently criticized their own educational system but are hurt when foreigners criticize things Russian.

He cited the example of his interpreter, who had formed an unfavorable impression of Nicholas Monserrat's "The Cruel Sea" from a 10-line reference to Russia in the book.

Dr. Ross said the Russian people seem to like Communism.

For them, he said, it has almost everything a religion has, except God. Work, for instance, amounts to something like a religious ritual.

Materially, he said, the Russian does not seem too badly off. However, they feel they are at the stage where they must use trucks where we would use cars.

Housing is still a problem, he said, but apartment blocks are going up.

Although Dr. Ross avoided comparisons himself, he quoted an article saying a Russian pure physicist was as well-trained after five years as his American counterpart after four years undergraduate and a year's graduate studies.

But, the article said, a Russian engineer after five years was not as competent as an American engineer after four.

About 225 Skulemen attended the banquet.

More For UA; Staff Totals Up

The U of T United Appeal fund drive is certain to go well over last year's figure, a Students' Council Administrator said last night.

E. A. Macdonald, general secretary-treasurer of the council, said last night the total had reached $30,349.53 by Friday noon with about 10-15 per cent of the campus still to be heard from.

This is "far more than at this time last year," the treasurer said. Erroneous earlier reports in The Varsity said a lower total than last year was indicated.

Last year's total was about $30,000, Mr. Macdonald said.

This year's sum is "so far ahead" of last year's as to make previous pessimistic reports "ridiculous," Mr. Macdonald said.

Increased staff givings should "more than make up" for a slight drop in student contributions expected.

De Gaulle Very Sorry But Can't Back Follies

University College Follies officials learned yesterday that French Premier Charles de Gaulle regrets he cannot patronize the production, but is "touched" by the UC invitation.

A letter from the premier's personal secretary caught Follies officials off guard yesterday.

"We didn't really expect any reply to our letter," producer Harvey Levenstein said yesterday.

The letter of invitation from the follies two weeks ago asked Premier de Gaulle to accept the position of official patron and said tickets to the Nov. 13-15 production would follow.

A similar letter was sent at the same time to director-actor Gratien Gelinas of the La Comedie Canadienne.

The reply from Premier de Gaulle's secretary read as follows: "Your kind message has duly reached General de Gaulle."

"Unfortunately, he is unable to comply with your request as he does not patronize any theatrical presentations, but he has been touched by your letter and sends his best wishes for the success of your college production.

"Please accept, Mademoiselle, the expression of my own sincere good wishes."

The letter was signed by Premier de Gaulle's personal secretary.

No reply has been received as yet from Mr. Gelinas, Levenstein said.

UofT Delegates Named To McGill Conference

Choice of applicants for the McGill Conference on World Affairs was "a very, very, tough one." Weekends chairman Dave Lee said last night.

The two U of T delegates chosen to attend are Howie Rubinoff (IV Meds) and Steve Clarkson (IV Trinity).

Lee issued an urgent appeal last Tuesday for more applicants when only three had applied. By the deadline Tuesday night, the number jumped to 33.

Delegates from Canadian and American universities will discuss "Canada's Relations with the United States" during the conference, Nov. 13-15.

CCF - CLC May Merge

A proposed CCF-labor merger will be rehearsed at a campus CCF meeting today.

Mr. Morden Lazarus will speak to the CCF club on "Labor and Politics" at 4:15 p.m. in Trinity's Rm. 4.

Mr. Lazarus is political action director for the Ontario Federation of Labor and editor of the Co-operative Press Association.

He will discuss the proposed CCF-Canadian Labor Congress merger and how it would affect the Canadian political scene.

Lazarus is "responsible in Ontario for labor's part in this development" party member Hugh Petrack said yesterday.

Whether a man be "low-brow" or a "high-brow", he finds the greatest and most intense pleasures are those of the mind, Dr. Claude T. Bissell, president of the U of T, said Friday.

Speaking at the annual prize-giving ceremonies of Upper Canada College, held in Convocation Hall, Dr. Bissell said the relationship of education and pleasure is very close and intimate, and not sufficiently emphasized.

Vickers Questions Affects Of West's Industrialization

The West today seems to have no goal in international relations, no conception of synthesis or stability, except the stalemate of nuclear deterrence, a noted British industrialist said yesterday.

Sir Geoffrey Vickers, V.C., told some 150 delegates to U of T's third and final round table on Man and Industry that unparalleled industrialization during the past 50 years has had questionable effects on the West's social values.

Delegates, drawn from business, labor unions, human service professions, government services and social sciences heard the British economic expert address a morning plenary session opening the three-day conference.

Sir Geoffrey pointed out three problems facing the conference.

First, he said, economic abundance and largely equalized distribution might have disturbed social relations on which Western man's well-being depends.

"Industrialization may distort the values by which people live," was the second point, he said.

Thirdly, he suggested, "industrialization makes demands on our adaptation greater than we can make."

The sensitive relations upon which our democratic process depends would disappear if society reacted to industrialization by simplifying itself, he said.

"I have no doubt that the economies of the most highly industrialized societies will become more alike, be they capitalist, communist, socialist or any mixture of these," he said.

Sir Geoffrey said our one-sided idea of knowledge, evolved from the scientific method, could be dangerous.

In scientific method the observer strives to remain aloof from involvement in his observations.

One example of our one-sided idea of knowledge is passionate concern for the conquest of outer space, he said.

Future historians may well ask why, "when our inner space, socially and individually, is so evidently unexplored and unreclaimed, did we spend so vast a share of our human and material resources on exploring the barren void outside our atmosphere?"

The answer is that this is the only remaining field where man can remain aloof from his subject matter and still be a non-participant observer, he said.

UofT Student Pair Record Big Plasma Tunnel Break

A pair of University of Toronto graduate aerophysics students have come up with an idea that may revolutionize the whole field of space physics.

Branchchild of Philip Muniz and Barry French of the Institute of Aerophysics, the development was revealed yesterday with the unveiling of a plasma tunnel — a far-reaching improvement of the conventional wind tunnel.

The tunnel is designed for study of satellites and rockets under space conditions. Research is sponsored by the United States Air Force and the Canadian Defence Research Board.

The plasma tunnel was described by institute director Dr. Gordon N. Patterson as a wedding of the plasma jet and the low-density wind tunnel.

It is capable of simulating speeds up to Mach 24 and temperatures to 25,000 degrees Kelvin.

Dr. Patterson said there are about 50 plasma jets operating in North America, but none are being used as test tunnels.

Expensive equipment required for the system's refrigeration process was provided by the U.S. Air Force.

The plasma jet is created by heating air to a temperature close to that at the surface of the sun and forcing it through a nozzle. This process is used in the United States to test nose cones and other rocket parts, Dr. Patterson said.

A magnetic pinch reduces density to that of outer space and temperature to that of earth normal. Speed of the air flow is roughly that of a satellite circling earth.

Footings for the construction of a full-scale plasma tunnel have been installed at the institute's new quarters at Dufferin St. and Steele's Ave.

Work on the tunnel is expected to begin in about six weeks when the institute moves into the new building.

debate on atoms starts off season

The U of T Debating Union starts its season with a McGill meet on the topic of nuclear disarmament. The debate begins at 8 p.m. Nov. 6, in Hart House. The teams will debate again Nov. 7, at Etobicoke Collegiate before the High School Oratorical Clinic. They hope to further the interest of young students in debating, and help them with debating techniques, a spokesman said.

Some colleges and faculties have caught the debating spirit. The Faculty of Medicine meets Physical and Occupational Therapy on Nov. 6 at 1 p.m. in the P&OT huts, to debate "Resolved that the Family Doctor will become Obsolete."

The Medical Debating Society will feature Senator David Croll Nov. 19 at 8:30 p.m. in Falconer Hall. He will speak on "The Fine Art of Parliamentary Debate."

On Nov. 5 in Brennan Hall, the St. Michaels Oratorical Society will debate with Trinity College on "Resolved that the only Discipline is Self-Discipline."

Russian Official Claims Government Said "No"

Russian Embassy official has been barred from speaking to Sir George Williams' College. He implied the Canadian government was responsible for cancelling a scheduled speech to the Asian Studies Group last week.

R. Krassnikov, third secretary of the Russian Embassy, told the group's chairman of the last-minute cancellation. "You can be assured that there is nothing that I can do. The decision has not come from me."

A member of the group said the Russian "implied but not stated" the Department of External Affairs forced the cancellation of the lecture.

Sir George Williams' student council will investigate reasons for the cancellation. There will be an official protest if the cancellation was forced by the Canadian government, spokesman said.

Krassnikov's travel permit was revoked by the External Affairs department within 48 hours of his appearance here, members of the Asian Studies Group claimed.

Education Equals Pleasure — Bissell

"Nothing can give us quite the same sense of exhilaration, the sense of recreating ourselves and of adding to our statuses that intellectual discovery can."

There is no conflict between pleasure and hard work. Pleasure arises from a sense of mastery, of being able to move easily and effectively in a given subject. It is the joy that results from a hard thing well done," he said.

Dr. Bissell said he believes that in the recognition and exploitation of education as a pleasure, and its extension beyond the classroom, we will find the real answer to the Russian success.

"We should meet Russian regimentation, not with a regimentation of our own, but by ensuring the release of the human spirit and by proclaiming the joy of discovery," he said.

please to remember

Tomorrow is Guy Fawkes day.

Two years ago, when Britain and France risked their political future and demonstrated their convictions about the Middle East in general and the Egyptian dictator in particular, we wrote an editorial about Guy Fawkes.

In the editorial—which was reprinted in TIME, the American views magazine—we told how Mr. Fawkes very nearly blew up the British House of Commons in 1605.

We went on to say that a lot of people wished he had done it last week.

A lot of people did wish he had—and most of them were Americans. The Anglo-French intervention in Suez was considered to be a violation of international law, a return to gunboat diplomacy and a gamble by two self-interested nations with the Third World War as an odds-on chance.

That was the way the Americans saw it then. Considerable pressure, plus some neat diplomatic blackmail was brought to bear on both nations.

TIME printed an exclusive exposé on how the whole attack was planned months in advance in a secret bunker underneath the Thames and External Affairs Minister Lester Pearson made his international reputation by forsaking the land of his fathers and committing Canada to a seat on the Eisenhower bandwagon.

Under the avalanche of criticism, Britain and France pulled their forces out of Suez and Prime Minister Eden bowed out of the limelight and into obscurity.

Since 1956 the United States has had good cause to regret her self-righteousness. TIME, trumpeting to the rescue of a diminishing cause, printed a series of articles designed to prove the American attitude was justified by the sacred codes of law.

But nobody was very convinced.

Today, as Nasser's United Arab Republic threatens the stability of the Middle East, today as the last remnants of the US Marines are pulling reluctantly out of Lebanon, today as Radio "Free" Cairo spits putrid invective against the American way of life, most Americans and even TIME are prepared to admit they made a mistake.

The mistake may have cost us a great deal, but what concerns us on this anniversary of Guy Fawkes day is that no FBI agents have thought of searching the cellars of the White House.

A lot of people think a few well-placed kegs of gun-powder might save the world trouble.

Bob Bounces In

The Victoria College Bob Revue checked into Hart House last night and everyone had fun.

Against a colorful set depicting the portals of Victoria, the cast romped through a story based on the problems of getting money from the clutches of the greedy Board of Regents.

One of the outstanding weaknesses was the general predictability of the plot, considering it was a book show. The slow pacing of the first act unfortunately pointed up this defect. Again, one noticed the resemblance between some of the numbers and songs from current musical hits.

A big disappointment was the static nature of the dance routines.

However, the cast put across their story with contagious verve to their extremely receptive audience. Even Victoria VIP's laughed at caustic references to themselves.

Peggy Atwood as an awkward Freshie stole the show with her acute sense of timing. None the less most of the lead characters were competent in their roles.

While the Bob '58 may not have been a really new and different college show, it is still a highly enjoyable one.

CUP Protests

Copy of a letter sent to the Rector of the University of Ottawa, the Rev. H. F. Legare, by Canadian University Press.

Dear Sir:

The administrative authorities of the University of Ottawa have taken it upon themselves to remove from office the elected editors of the student paper, La Rotonde.

The Canadian University Press protests this arbitrary action as unworthy of any institution of higher learning, and a direct contravention of the freedom of the press.

Suppression of the Editorial Board of Louis Cluche, Roger Roy, and Pierre Trudel in the manner recently exhibited at the University of Ottawa is a grave blow to university journalism in this country and a denial of one of the bases of a university education.

Freedom of expression is of utmost importance in every country of the free world; as Canadians we regard it as one of the foundations upon which our freedom as individuals is based. The right to publish outspoken views, and to defend those ideas we hold to be right, have always been a vital part of university education. As a period of intellectual exploration university life provides an outstanding opportunity for expression of those ideals by which we feel society should exist.

Opposition to the University's actions has already been expressed by the Students' Federation. It would seem only just that there be some re-consideration of your decision.

I would draw your attention to the motto of the University of Toronto's student paper, The Varsity:

"Suffer yourselves to be blamed, imprisoned, condemned; suffer yourselves to be hanged; but publish your opinions; it is not a right, it is a duty."

Yours sincerely,

John Gray, President, C.U.P.

Blues Edge Dukes 4-3 In Exhibition Opener

By GENE GLISKY
Varsity Staff Reporter

SCARBOROUGH, Nov. 3—Varsity Blues, seldom out-skated, never out-played, out-classed Toronto Marlboros, 4-3, here tonight.

Playing their first game of the season, and despite only three practises behind them, Blues displayed some of the form that has carried them to four consecutive Intercollegiate titles.

Dunc Brodie, on skates for the first time this year, opened the scoring at 4:20 of the first period with a blistering 20-foot drive that caught Duke goalie Jimmy Cannon completely off-guard. Neil Munro and Paul Finlay assisted.

With Harry Neale in the sin-bin, for butt-ending, Dukes swarmed into the Varsity end, only to have goalie Bob Giroux come up with sensational puck-blocking. Three labelled shots in a row from the sticks of Jim Poppin and Fred Dart, Giroux calmly turned aside.

Quickly capitalizing on a Marlboro penalty to Roger Cote at the 15-minute mark, Mike Elik slammed the puck home from in front of the Baby Leaf net. John Macdonald and Munro assisted with picture passing.

Despite spectacular defensive play by Neale and Ron Casey, Marlboros broke through for their first goal at the 19:30 mark. Don Curry found the range on a pass from Dick Aldis.

Former Marlbie captain Bill Kennedy opened the second-period scoring at 3:30 with an unassisted goal. Intercepting a Marlbie clearing pass, Big Bill caught the corner on a knee-high shot from the right faceoff circle.

Dukes failed to score with three Blues sitting out penalties. The display of stick-handling by penalty-killers Elik and Macdonald brought the crowd to their feet.

At 14:15, however, Dukes roared back. Curry skated in fast to slap the puck home from a scramble in front of the Varsity net. Walsh and Standing assisted.

Marlies tied it up at 17:45. Poppin broke in on Giroux, slapping the third rebound into the net. The score came with Blues' Casey sitting out a cross-checking penalty.

With seconds remaining in the period, Varsity swarmed over Marlboros' goal. Neale, Kennedy and Don Fleming all missing an open corner of the net by inches.

The third period saw some exciting hockey. Ten penalties were handed out, five to each side. Curry drew a five-minute major for fighting. Popping Kennedy behind the Varsity goal, he threw random punches at the reclining Varsity centre. Kennedy received two minutes for "retaliation".

Elik was credited with the game-winning tally at 7:20 of the period. The puck caromed off Elik's skate into the goal.

Playing a man short, and facing six Duke attackers, Blues held the lead in a hectic final-minute of play.

Will Our Mr. Reid Hit His 100 Points? Saturday Will Tell

Will Tim Reid reach the 100-point level in his college football career?

Will Varsity Blues manage to hold down the first four places in individual scoring?

Those are the pertinent questions, statistic-wise, as Intercollegiate grid action nears the close of another year.

Reid, with a touchdown and convert against Western Saturday, increased his first place total to 49 points. Team-mate Pete Joyce collected two majors to solidify his grip on second.

Twelve points behind Joyce at 30 is Mustangs' Lionel Conacher, who was, of course, held pointless in Western's 46-0 drubbing.

Close on Conacher's heels is Blues' Walt Adams, with 27 points on a touchdown, two field goals and 15 converts. Adams leads the league in converts and field goals.

Varsity's Dave Creswell and Wally Bulchak of McGill have each scored four touchdowns in the five games they have played to remain tied for fifth place with 24 points.

Reid entered the Western game with a career total of 74 points. He now needs three touchdowns against McGill to raise his total for three years to 100 points.

Since some of Reid's majors were scored when the touchdowns was worth only five points, quarterback Brian Aston gave Reid the opportunity of kicking a convert against Mustangs to enable Tim to overcome a possible one-point deficit in his effort to hit triple figures.

Reid presently leads the league in touchdowns with eight. Joyce follows with seven. Of 38 players who have scored points this year, 14 are Blues.

Western has 10 players in the charmed circle. Queen's has eight and McGill six. Top Queen's scorer is halfback Mike Wickham, with two touchdowns in six games.

Vic In Softball Finals

By PAM HILL

Victoria Firsts played into the girls' softball finals last Friday by defeating St. Mike's 9-0. With Wednesday's score of 9-3, the total added up to 18-3 for Victoria.

Yesterday, the first of three games for the championship saw two innings of real "pro-ball". At the bottom of the second (all games are two innings only), PHE had the score tied, three on, two away, and the count was two and two. But on a high pitch, the batter struck out, and the game was forced to end.

The tie score, 6-6, is cancelled, and today at noon, the Stadium sees a replay.

Conditioning lately? So what's a bit of "callisthenics" (!) here and there? It's not much, and besides, it's a real lot of fun. But let it go a little beyond this to the serious level, where it can mean a lot more.

How many co-eds can put the palms of their hands on the floor, no bending the knees? — or, lying down, can do three leg-lifts, not more than 12" above the floor, to a slow count of 20 (that's 60 altogether, for the one or two suffering from an "all-embracing arts course")?

Of course, who wants to be physically fit? — or, why be physically fit?

The masculine view-point gets warranted? first consideration:

Bissell Fears Universities Smothered By Industries

President Claude Bissell said yesterday he feared universities may "dwindle away into some sort of exalted prep schools" for industrial training programs.

Addressing the round table on Man and Industry, organized by U of T's School of Social Work, he cited figures showing that 85 per cent of the 349 largest United States corporations sponsored education programs.

"Is there not," he asked, "a possibility that universities may lose their capacity to provide initiative and leadership," in the face of this competition from industry.

"Patient collaboration between universities and the business world, was needed to find a solution," he said.

Conference chairman W. R. McLachlan, vice-president of A. V. Roe Canada Ltd., opened yesterday's session by saying Canada's aircraft industry should be maintained to preserve Canada's position in world affairs.

He said the Avro Arrow program represented the "best thinking of Canadians in our current situation."

Mr. McLachlan asked what would happen to the nation's youth "if we abdicate our position as a major partner with important contributions to make?"

He added the West was engaged in "economic warfare." Although we have in the past shown remarkable economic vigor to meet immediate dangers, the concept of our present competition is far more difficult to understand.

The first of the conference's three discussion papers was given by Stewart Bates, President of Central Mortgage and Housing Corp.

He called for "new vision" in the planning and laying out of metropolitan areas in Canada. Corporation and the public must co-operate in supporting research and far-sighted action to achieve this vision.

Mr. Bates said cities have more humanism and humanitarianism in them than all the seas and the forests.

But cities have become "depersonalized and dehumanized" by the vast scale of urban development that typifies the modern city.

Cities almost seem to be growing of themselves, he said.

"The local government units have become almost irrelevant."

The city-dwellers are beginning to wonder if the "captains of industry" have not lost sight of the "ultimate human application of their particular little industry," he said.

He also cited "the crisis of traffic, parking, decay that we all can see."

He called for the combined work of government planners, corporate organizations including trade unions and citizens' groups to combat these problems.

"Both the fringe and the centre of our metropolitan areas require a new vision."

The conference lasts until Friday. Papers will be given on "Community Participation" by U of T vice-president Dr. Murray Ross tomorrow and on "Personal Satisfaction" by Dr. Alastair MacLeod, assistant director, Montreal Mental Hygiene Institute, Thursday.

KINGSTON, (CUP) — A special "blitz" of Queen's University students will be held here tomorrow to aid the disaster-stricken town of Springhill, N.S.

Plans are being made for scholarships or a separate fund for relocation of refugees. If the Society approves this idea, money from the drive tomorrow will be channeled towards this special project rather than into the general cross-Canada fund now established.

SMC Shells Out For Quebec Trip

The St. Mike's students' council rolled up its sleeves and dug into its pocket Tuesday night to finance what shows signs of becoming a second Carabin weekend.

A $75 appropriation was granted when the SMC French Club asked for an additional $100 to help pay for a Laval exchange weekend this year. The club promised to try to return the money by charging admission at a square dance during the weekend, but SAC did not request repayment.

The weekend originated last year when the French Club organized an SMC caravan to Quebec City during the Laval Winter Carnival. Laval students officially welcomed the group and played host to them during their stay.

This year Laval students have been invited to Toronto in an exchange program similar to the Carabin weekend.

The exchange was to have been turned over to the university SAC, this year, but at the last minute, the plan was turned down.

The SMC SAC has contributed $175 toward financing entertainment, room and board for Laval students. Participants will pay transportation costs for the weekend.

Vice-president Vince Kelly recalled the Carabin weekend's beginnings at St. Mike's when he asked SAC to be "really generous" in granting the French Club's request for funds.

But when president Mike McCabe said he hoped the university SAC would take over the exchange next year, Kelly said it wasn't likely.

St. Mike's students participating in the return exchange to Laval will be chosen on the basis of qualifications, McCabe said.

Speaker Says

Half Middle Class Addicted To Drug

A representative of the John Howard Society of Ontario last night said 50 per cent of Canada's middle class is addicted to barbiturates.

Addressing the U of T psychology club, A. K. Couse called barbiturates "the middle-class drug".

Illustrating his talk with a Canadian Broadcasting Co. film, he outlined the causes of addiction to narcotics, such as heroin, in Canada and some of the reasons nearly all addicts who are imprisoned resume their habit on release.

"I personally know of no addict who has been able to stay out of prison for any length of time," Couse said.

He stated that prison was no answer for the addict, but it is the only practice possible under the existing criminal code which calls for a mandatory jail sentence of at least six months for possession of narcotics. (Addiction itself is not illegal).

The immediate jail sentence makes a quick withdrawal from narcotics necessary. Mr. Couse feels this should be replaced by a gradual withdrawal.

He suggests there should be a short period of parole made possible at the beginning of a man's sentence, on condition that he enter a clinic for treatment.

Referring to the narcotic problem in the United States, Mr. Couse said "racketeering in the United States is traditionally well-organized."

Where there is active soliciting of American high-school students, this does not exist in Canada. "There are few addicts under 20 in Canada."

Mr. Couse suggested that American films which portray drug addiction are usually too far from the truth. Referring to the Canadian-made film he showed, Mr. Couse said that it "is barred from the States because it is too realistic. It is felt that it might arouse curiosity among young people."

The film contained a particularly intense scene showing the three days of agony spent by an addict during his withdrawals.

U of T Leaders Get City Honors

Four men who have distinguished themselves through service to the U of T were yesterday given the City of Toronto's civic award medal.

Three were given their gold medals by Mayor Nathan Phillips at a special city council meeting.

The fourth, former U of T president Sidney Smith, Canadian external affairs minister, was detained in Ottawa.

The three were Dr. Sigmund Samuel, large-scale financial benefactor of the U of T who endowed the expansion of the U of T library; Dr. Healy Willan, university organizer; and Dr. Charles Best, director of the Banting and Best medical research department and co-discoverer of insulin.

The forms are available in the SAC office, SAC president Vince Kelly said last night.

U of O Students Still Battle Administration

OTTAWA — CUP — University of Ottawa students seem to be winning their battle against administration authorities, sources here say.

The authorities are facing almost unanimous condemnation of their action in dismissing three editors of the students newspaper, La Rotonde, the sources say.

Publicity of the case has been growing steadily since Canadian Press picked up the story Friday.

Tuesday the Ottawa students' council voted 14-0 to request university authorities to lift the prohibition against the editors, Louis Cliche, Pierre Trudel and Roger Roy. The motion was passed in 10 minutes.

A second unanimous motion by the council deplored interference by Bill Boss, U of O public relations officers, in student affairs.

The motion cited a statement by Boss to the press estimating the number of Ottawa students supporting the council's rebellion.

Boss had said "a large majority" of Ottawa students "did not disapprove" of the firing of the editorial board.

Pierre Berton, writing in the Toronto Daily Star Wednesday, said it "is hard to see Bill Boss, one of the best of the Canadian war correspondents, making like a public relations officer and condoning, nay, supporting an act of censorship against five student editors at the University of Ottawa."

Mr. Berton added that in the hard and unrelenting battle between Authority and the Press, Boss now finds himself on the side of Authority.

Tuesday the Carleton, student newspaper of Ottawa's Carleton University, carried a story saying U of O authorities have re-treated and the editorial board may be re-instated.

Last week authorities said in a meeting they had never "dismissed" the editors because they had never "hired" them in the first place.

They had merely "banished" them from taking part in La Rotonde's activities as "individuals", they said.

Discrimination Is Ignorance — Prof

A U of T professor said Tuesday present-day racial discrimination is an indication of "mass ignorance" of race problems.

In the fifth of a weekly series of lectures sponsored by the Student Christian Movement, geography professor George Tatham said race discrimination threatens the very basis of the democratic way of life by creating "second-class citizens."

"This in turn leads to the frustration of the discriminated, and eventually destroys any worthwhile contribution these people could make to society," he said.

Calling racial prejudice a "scapegoat phenomenon", Prof. Tatham said "dictatorships and other various political powers in the past have used the issue as an object to blame their mistakes on."

He said, "With the breakdown of old racial classifications and new combinations of classifications appearing, anthropologists today are in doubt as to whether races really exist at all."

The professor said biologists deny there is any such thing as a pure race. "No one in the world can hold claim to the fact he is pure white, pure black, pure this or pure that."

Claiming racialism threatened world peace, the professor added it may figure as one of the predominant factors in setting off a third World War.

"There is no evidence to point to the fact, all peoples given equal educational opportunities, one race will prove lower than another in intellectual capacity," he said.

First De Gaulle, Now...

French-speaking Canadian actor Grafen Gellinas has written University College Folies producer Harvey Levenstein that he can't make the Folies' premiere but will try to see the show if he's in Toronto at a convenient time.

Folies officials had asked the actor and French Premier Charles de Gaulle to patronize the performance.

A letter from the French premier which arrived Monday said he could not attend "as he does not patronize theatrical presentations," but sent his best wishes.

Mr. Gellinas' letter, received Tuesday, read in part:

"Unfortunately, your premiere falls but two days before the opening of Comedie Canadienne of 'Le Gilet', a comedy by Jacques Languirand, a production which I have agreed to supervise. I am returning herewith the complimentary tickets which you were kind enough to offer me.

"I want you to rest assured, however, that if I find myself in Toronto during the run of your Revue, I will make every effort possible to attend one of your performances."

Our Readers Write: Sounding Box

Dear Sir:

Today we live in a complex civilization. Every day we are faced with problems to be solved. Some problems are of a general nature and deserve general concern, while other problems are private, to be worked out by the group or individual affected.

A problem consisting of facts and figures is more easily solved than a problem of attitude and feeling. Perhaps apathy and indifference best define this attitude. Indifference by the majority of the men of Trinity towards Trinity's personality and organizations, now is considered to have reached an intensity worth serious reconsideration.

The sounding box of opinion in Trinity is the Literary Institute's debates. It was in this forum that the problem was seriously debated. The debaters recognized that the students themselves were very much to blame for the prevailing apathetic attitude. It was also directly stated that the tightening disciplinary regulations, introduced in the last two years, were the fault of this indifference.

Following the principle of expressing in public one's opinion, within the bounds described by law and common decency, a cleverly staged demonstration explained, by symbolization, the problem of indifference, and suggested where responsibility lay for this condition. For the first time Dean Eap was aware there was a problem.

It is at this point that I take exception to the editor's opinions as they were expressed on October 31st. The procession at dinner was not "ridiculous embarrassing... or ill-mannered" in the eyes of the men of Trinity. Where are the editor's facts that support the opinion, "the attitude... is sponsored by a clique of self-interested Divines"? Who are the Divines,

"who have graduated from other colleges in other universities... brimming with an ersatz spirit for an institution more complex than many of them can conceive"? (In what dictionary do you find the word 'ersatz'?) Where is the editor's factual basis for such bold accusations? What are the "implications which affect every student in every faculty on this campus", that the editor claims as his justification for publishing this, "family affair"? Where is the editor's factual basis for accusing Trinity of "stately stupidity" and "supercilious self-righteousness"?

Sir, the editor seems to have made many degrading and insulting statements affecting personalities on this campus, without founding his opinions in stated and proven facts. The editor has, in so doing, I believe, used the editorial column as a sounding box emitting enmity and despise. Sir, this is most unbecoming to an editor! Sir, this attitude and feeling at Trinity College is not a news story; it is Trinity's problem, to be worked out by her as best she can. John Swinden, III Trinity.

Adding comment to critical letters is a practice which is as unfair as it is annoying. The editor has a stern policy to avoid such comments whenever possible. It is with regret, therefore, that he is forced to reply to the only question in the above letter worthy of notice. "Ersatz", a noun and adjective derived from the German and used frequently during the Second World War, is found on page 404 of the Fourth Edition of the Concise Oxford Dictionary edited by H. W. Fowler and F. G. Fowler and means "substitute". —Ed.

the tragic results

Dear Sir:

In your editorial, "Please to Remember," commemorating the Anglo-French invasion of Suez, which was opposed by the United States (and the great majority of U.N. members), you remark, "Since 1956 the United States has had good cause to regret her self-righteousness."

As an American studying in Canada, I can readily assent to this. The United States never had any justification for a self-righteous attitude in the affair, for it was chiefly as a result of wrong-headed American policies in the Middle East that matters reached such a state that the leaders of the United Kingdom, France, and Israel came to the conclusion that drastic measures were called for.

From the time that the British departed the scene, the United States pursued a policy which all but ignored the nationalist aspirations of the peoples of the Middle East. In shoring up unpopular regimes which granted generous oil concessions to the West and in arming Arab countries against the Communists, when they displayed more hostility toward each other and Israel than toward the Soviet Union, American policies only succeeded in polarising the situation.

The United States sought to discourage neutralism in the Cold War by demanding a firm commitment to the West as a condition for American aid. Instead, the Arab nations turned to Russia, which offered aid with no strings attached. When Mr. Dulles pulled the rug out from under Nasser by withdrawing his pledge of American assistance in building the Aswan Dam, and Nasser retaliated by seizing the Suez Canal, the die was cast.

One can sympathise with Messrs. Eden, Mollet, and Ben-Gurion in their view that military intervention was required. Nor is it hard to see why they did not care to take the American government into their confidence. Yet the Suez invasion was as much a mistake in the one direction as the previous (and subsequent) American policies were in the opposite direction. Not even the full support of the Eisenhower administration could have prevented its overwhelming and deserved condemnation in the United Nations.

As to the American opposition to the Anglo-French attack, I am not "prepared to admit that (the Americans) made a mistake." Far from being a mistake, this was one of the few instances in the last ten years that American policy has appealed to the hopes of mankind instead of to its fears.

The pity is that, having done this one right thing, the American leaders did not look to their own responsibility for the events that had occurred, nor seek to alter their basic approach to the problems of the Middle East. The tragic results are only too evident.

Norman W. Johnson, SGS.

Eternal Vigilance....

To the Editors of the Student Newspapers of the Universities of Ontario: Sirs:

It is with great concern that I read the accounts of the dismissal of the three editors of the University of Ottawa paper. This is especially distasteful since it has occurred only 4 or five weeks after the previous two editors were discharged in the same manner. It is in view of that that I would like to add my voice to those of Gabriel Gagnon, Jean Commoy and Jean Dionne, (holding the offices of University of Montreal student council president, Laval student external affairs director and NFCUS Quebec Regional President respectively). Their views are expressed in Wednesday, October 22nd issue of The Varsity, and I refer you to them. In regards to this specific incident I wish to withhold my comments until I am able to survey the complete situation, this will be done by listening to both side thoroughly, there are always two sides to each and every story. However, it is with the general aspect of student faculty relationships, particularly in regards to student rights that I wish to make comment at this time.

We as student do have rights, let us not forget this for one instant, the form these rights take are up to us as reasonable intelligent men and women. I do not advocate overthrow of the administrations; this is not acting as reasonable, intelligent humans, the course of action open to us, as students, is not clear at this moment to me, but I do ask each and every student to consider this problem as it stands. Yea, even more each and every student would do well to consider his or her position as a student and the rights and duties involved as such.

We have a National Federation which is only too happy to serve you the students, to uphold your rights and to further your aims. If you wish nothing done then so be it. If on the other hand you wish some action taken then just say so and I for one will see to it that your suggestions are brought to the attention of the executive of this federation.

Please note that the views expressed in this letter are my own and in no way reflect the views of the Federation as it stands.

Yours for a better Student Community.

35 Volunteer To Act In Experiment

More than 35 first-year pre-medical students at the U of T have volunteered to undergo a six-year series of body-radiation counts in a project aimed at measuring the amount of radioactivity caused by nuclear fallout.

The project, sponsored jointly by the Department of Physics and the Faculty of Medicine, will use a "100-channel pulse analyzer" to make the counts.

The machine was bought by the university last January, but has been ready for use only since this summer.

While students recline under a large sodium iodide crystal, the pulse analyzer will indicate the activity due to potassium 40, normally present in body tissues, and cesium 137, a fission product.

The volunteers will be surrounded by eight-inch steel walls while they are undergoing the tests which will take place every six months over the six-year period.

The federal government is already examining radiation levels, but the university feels that in such an important matter it should have its own source of figures, a spokesman said.

Dr. K. G. McNeil of the university's physics department, intends to use data obtained to plot changes in radioactivity levels over the next decade, and also to evaluate the effects of nuclear explosions.

The machine will be used by the medical staff to diagnose the level of severe radiation - exposure cases. The analyzer was used in such a manner in a radiation accident earlier this year.

Concurrent examinations of dust found in the Toronto area will be made to detect other fission products such as zirconium 95 and ruthenium 103.

meds get new course

A revised and expanded program of post-graduate instruction for industrial physicians at U of T has been announced by President Claude T. Bissell.

The new course, instituted earlier this fall, is designed to meet the greater need for physicians with special training in the supervision of the health of industrial workers.

Only four men are presently taking the one-year course, but Dr. A. J. Rhodes, Director of the School of Hygiene, has expressed hope that the enrolment will increase.

All health problems of the industrial employee are covered in the course, which will prepare physicians for the University's Diploma in Industrial Health.

Instructors are members of the University's Faculty of Medicine and School of Hygiene.

Catholic Student Body Backs Press Freedom

HALIFAX, N.S. (CUP) - An international Roman Catholic student movement has emphasized that students should enjoy freedom of expression in the student press.

A resolution adopted by this summer's congress of Pax Romana on "Truth and the Bases of Liberty in the University" was released this week.

The resolution was released following presentation at a later national convention of the Canadian Federation of Catholic University Students in Halifax.

CFCUS is a member of Pax Romana. The University of Ottawa, where three campus editors were recently banished by the administration, belongs to CFCUS.

The resolution said students, among other things, should enjoy "the possibility of freely expressing their opinions in the student press."

They should also enjoy "the possibility of expressing their point of view to government and academic authorities on the problems of university life."

In addition, students should be able to discuss freely problems of "scientific, philosophical, political or other nature," defend points of view other than the professor's, consult all books necessary for research and form cultural, political or religious organizations in the university.

However, maintaining "no freedom is absolute" the resolution warned "to every right corresponds a duty."

Students should have "the courage of their convictions," the report added, and make "frank use of the freedoms accorded to them without fear of being seen in a bad light by certain authorities" or of eventually drawing down upon themselves various troubles.

Students and student governments, should "avoid falling into excesses or deplorable exaggerations."

"Above all, they will abstain from acts contrary to good morals or public order," the report said.

They should "seek truth in all spheres" with an open mind and "genuine objectivity."

A CCFer Speaks...

Say Press Opposes Labor

Campus CCFers Tuesday heard the political action director of the Ontario Federation of Labor say Canadian trade unionism influences almost 1½ million Canadians but has not yet really participated actively in politics.

Morden Lazarus told about 30 students labor participation in politics has been opposed by almost every major newspaper in the United States and Canada.

"The Wall Street Journal's attack on Reuther is really an attack on trade union politics," he said. Walter Reuther is a major American labor leader.

Also responsible for labor's defensive role in politics are the time being spent on trade union organization itself and the differences of political belief among members, Mr. Lazarus said.

The Ontario labor leader said union members in the U.S. are generally non-partisan while Canadian unions have no reservations about entering politics.

Lazarus outlined the "progressive legislative policies" made by the labor movement since the beginning of the century.

The machinery to implement these policies has been weak, he said, but unions are now uniting for political action.

At the 1957 CLC convention, unions decided to attempt the formation of a new political alignment with a broad base including CCFers, workers, farmers and liberally-minded intellectuals, he said.

"Among working people there is a new concept of the importance of politics," he said. "Although they now vote CCF, PC and Liberal, there is unanimity on the need of the new party."

The U of T graduate criticized the present government's lack of a definite unemployment policy.

However, government is playing an increasingly important role in trade union management, he said.

"The Steel Company, strike in Hamilton might have been prevented," he said, "if Diefenbaker had not advised labor to exercise restraint in wage demands."

He suggested a full employment plan, low interest rates and building of hospitals and schools to prevent unemployment.

To curb the inevitable inflationary pressures of his plan, he added, "control of profits, prices and even wages would be necessary."

"The CCF will be only a part of the new merger," he emphasized. "They do not want a labor party but a broader party."

In 1934, Lazarus organized the Ontario Commonwealth, the first CCF paper in the country. He is now editor of the Co-operative Press Association.

At the meeting, campus CCFers also elected a four-man committee to select from suggestions of CCF members a tentative eight-point platform for the coming Model Parliament elections.

The final platform will be thrashed out near the end of November at the annual campus CCF convention.

Chosen were: Jay Waterman, Gerry Sperling, Bill Blakely and Harvey Schwartz.

Tonight at 7:30 p.m. in Wymilwood's Copper Room there will be a meeting of CCFers to submit the resolutions from which the committee will later select eight.

Say Canadian Control Of North Very Shaky

A Conservative Member of Parliament told students last night Canada's control over her northern territories now is "extremely shaky."

Dr. J. Kuchera, speaking at a meeting of the campus Progressive Conservative Club, said "there is no international guarantee which grants Canada sovereign right over these lands."

Stressing that the country's future lies in the north, Dr. Kuchera said the Conservative government has pledged itself to the "full development" of this region.

He said the present budget includes grants of money which will be directed toward construction of roads and of the Great Slave Railroad. "Such roads will not only allow access to the great northern mineral and oil resources but will greatly encourage the population of the Northland," he said.

The MP said the government's knowledge of Canada's northern geography is far from complete. "A great deal of the information about the north comes from Russian and U.S. publications," he said.

Commenting on foreign affairs he said "the effective use of Communist propaganda has belittled Canadian and U.S. economic policies in the eyes of the world."

"Although the Russians make many promises, facts and figures show American and Canadian economic aid to undeveloped nations greatly outweighs and coming from Communist countries," Kuchera said.

He maintained Canada's position in NORAD was that of a partner and not a puppet of the United States. He said Canada entered into NORAD because it was in no position to maintain a force the size of the Strategic Air Command.

Dr. Kuchera predicted "it is probable the government would introduce a crop insurance plan during the next session for greater protection of the farmer."

Later in the meeting Jeremy Johnson was elected parliamentary leader in this year's model-parliament. He defeated club president Gord Ross.

we are such stuff

Sir Geoffrey Vickers introduced a speculative argument Monday in his opening address to the round table conference on Man and Industry.

He accused the West of having a one-sided idea of knowledge developed from our active interest in the scientific method.

In most applications of the scientific method, he said, the observer strives to remain aloof from involvement in the observations he is making.

Sir Geoffrey went on to suggest, as an example of this attitude, man's preoccupation with outer space.

Won't some future historian, he asked, puzzle why we waste so much of our human and material resources exploring outer space, when our inner space, socially and individually, is so evidently unexplored and unreclaimed?

Sir Geoffrey is raising a very old problem, but we feel his argument here is only half valid.

Humanity has always weighed heavy upon us, and man has generally shown a reluctance to look inward upon himself and explore—and perhaps solve—the problems he creates.

But on the other hand, the scientific method and the idea of knowledge connected with it can in no way be called a reaction against this reluctance.

Man is now striving for new worlds for precisely the same motives he explored America and climbed Everest: for profit, for adventure and to satisfy his own curiosity.

The impetus behind all scientific achievement is curiosity above all. And once man loses that compelling urge which has carried him so far already, he loses his thirst for knowledge of any sort.

Future historians may well be discouraged at our inability to understand ourselves and to communicate with each other, just as we, basking in the weak rays of moral progress we have generated to date are discouraged with the so-called ignorance of the Middle Ages.

But they will understand clearly our desire to see what's on the other side of the Moon as much as we understand—and applaud—a young Italian's desire to leave a corrupt Europe and see what was on the other side of the Atlantic.

From such one-sided ideas of knowledge are better worlds made.

a change

The Democratic sweep in the United States mid-term elections has been widely interpreted as a repudiation of Eisenhower policies.

Perhaps it is.

Perhaps the American public has grown tired of vicuna coats and stubborn refusals to recognize the reality of Communist China.

Perhaps it has wearied of hearing about Little Rock, Arkansas, and the failure of an administration to carry out the dictates of its conscience.

Perhaps it is sick of Lebanese gambols and Florida golf courses and the strained, ailing face of a very exhausted man.

But probably it is just tired, and merely wants—as we sometimes want in Canada—a change.

It happens everywhere.

Education — II

The Primary Stages

By LIZ BINKS

In the first article of this series an analogy was drawn between knowledge and a book. It continued by saying that primary education becomes a training in the basic skills that allow us to read the book; secondary education a cursory survey of the contents and higher education the final focusing on one chapter.

Working within this framework, we shall attempt to examine the problems and suggest some solutions to the state of primary education as it exists in Ontario.

It seems ludicrous to speak of academic freedom with regard to educating a seven-year-old child, but once he leaves the world of plasticine and fat red crayons, it is not only possible, it is necessary.

It is also extremely difficult. These primary years, as with no other phase of education, are years of drilling, of memorizing, of constant repetition and fact-learning. They must be this way, for if the learning process at this stage revolves around familiarity with words, with facts, with figures, it can count for a lot later on.

But combined with the stringent requirements of the primary grades there should be more opportunity for the child to apply his facts. At the grade school level he cannot be expected to have opinions or even clearly formulated ideas, but he will very definitely have ideas.

Take for example, the Grade Six youngster in a Toronto school who was constantly demanding books that were considered too old for her. The answer from her teachers was to go back to the books on her own "age shelf".

This same child was allowed to take grades four and five in one year. However, at the beginning of the following year, the local inspector decided skipping was not a good idea and the child was forced to take grade five over again.

Granted, this is a specific example and we are not making it applicable to every case of this kind in Ontario. But it does, unfortunately, happen too often. The gifted child should not be forced to read books he or she does not want to read or be pushed into grades he is not ready for.

He should be encouraged and above all, he should not be held back. Nothing discourages or bores a child more than to be given work that is too easy or to be held back from pursuing natural interests.

On the other hand, we are not advocating a complete swing to the self-expression method, the so-called progressive education that has made its influence felt so heavily in the United States. Self-expression is surely something which should be taken for granted, controlled as it is encouraged.

What chance a child has for freedom in primary school depends not on an unrestrained curriculum but on a creative presentation of facts by a sensitive teacher who is continually looking for a way to make them stimulating. It is always on the teacher that the burden rests for inspiring even his youngest and dullest pupil with a love of exploration while administering the limitations of discipline that come with his entrance into society.

Ours is indeed an era of education for the masses—no longer is it only a chosen class who is treated as future leaders and given the benefits of learning. The only thing wrong with this new and commendable approach is that the standard is changing from the best for a few to the mediocre for all. And trodden under the footsteps of the change is the exceptional student.

Now the elementary school is not the place to advocate strict segregation into A, B and C students. For one thing it is often too early to tell the really gifted student from the merely precocious. For another, these few precious years of compulsory education are not the time to deprive the lower mentality of pupils of the benefits of the best possible teaching.

What is needed are smaller classes and teachers who will take time to combine the rules and facts they must adhere to with a careful eye to the individual capacities of their pupils. At the same time every possible facility should be exploited to aid the teacher.

Here we cannot emphasize enough the importance of libraries. As soon as children have learned to read they should be introduced to the book shelf, taught to use it and encouraged to browse at random without the limitations of an "age shelf".

So far we have stressed the role of the teacher almost to the exclusion of curriculum which we feel to be secondary in importance in primary schools. There is, however, one glaring lack in curricula throughout most of Canada which we consider to be deplorable—the absence of a French course.

With the exception of Quebec and a few separate schools in other provinces, French is not taught at all until the secondary level.

And yet these elementary years are the ones when a child is most susceptible to new sounds, when his ear is most sensitive and his speech habits most malleable. Indeed, some experts say the only time to learn a foreign tongue is simultaneously with the native language.

In grades one and two, for instance, children could be given picture cards of objects and learn the corresponding French word. At later stages they could be shown the written word and simple sentence and learn to recognize it and above all, pronounce it properly by constant repetition.

In high school French would then not loom suddenly as a totally foreign language but rather as a familiar sound. Familiarity and an ability to twist his tongue around the words can make all the difference in the child's battle with grammar.

It is ridiculous to say this is too difficult or too much for young children. Teachers do not expect enough from our youngsters—indeed they do not demand enough. And it is an old adage which says the more there is to do the more there is done.

The soldier's pole is falling. — Shakespeare.

A Seesaw That Went Off Its Rocker

When three comedies come to town in quick succession and all seem to have more or less the same thing wrong with them it begins to look like not just an accident but an occupational hazard of that kind of play. The first two were "Cock-a-Doodle Dandy" and "Time of the Lilacs." The third, running this week at the Royal Alex, is "Two for the Seesaw."

The seesaw rises the same in all three plays. It has comedy on one end and pathos on the other. Not that these are the first plays that have both comic and pathetic elements, and not that it has never come off. But in these plays the seesaw is more than just a metaphor, for in them these two elements are in a real sense working against each other. In "Cock-a-Doodle Dandy" it just works, in "Time of the Lilacs" it fails completely.

"Two for the Seesaw" is neither as big a success as the first or as big a failure as the second. Although playwright William Gibson has not quite managed to integrate the two elements he has at least found a way out; the pathos is never, except perhaps at the very end, allowed to get too pathetic, and so in the seesaw battle it is always the comedy that is allowed to ride high. And "Seesaw" is a very funny play. As long as not too much is expected from it, it is good for a highly satisfying night at the theatre.

The two of the title are Gittel Mosca and Jerry Ryan. Gittel is a compassionate girl who suffers from ulcers and jumps into bed with needy boys. Jerry is a needy boy, although all he seems capable of giving her in return is brotherly advice on the care and feeding of the stomach. Their brief encounter leaves him with the knowledge that he loves his divorced wife after all and her with some bittersweet memories.

All of which sounds rather sordid. But what saves it is the character of Gittel. She is the classic Jewess; on the surface crassly extroverted and stridently independent, but way down deep, sensitive and ready to be dependent on the right man. As Gittel, Ruth Roman possibly tends to over-emphasize the stridency, but somehow her performance manages to dig down into quite a bit that is deep in Gittel. On the other hand, Jeffrey Lynn acts Jerry as if he were the one suffering from ulcers. He is perhaps more responsible than any thing else for the lack of integration between the comedy and pathos.

When he should be unhappy he is just peevish; when he should be gay he is only hearty and patronizing. The play is briskly and satisfactorily directed by Arthur Penn. The two sets are attractive although it might have been better to leave them both on stage throughout instead of pushing them back and forth to centre stage.

The mixture of pathos and comedy in which each heightens the other can be one of the greatest things in the theatre. But if it is to work both elements have to be fully present in everything. Both the characters and what happens to them must display both these aspects simultaneously as they do in the work of Chaplin, the greatest practitioner of this art. What leaves a slight dissatisfaction with "Two for the Seesaw" is simply that, except for an unsuccessful attempt to make Jerry a figure of pathos, all the comedy is in the characterization and all the pathos is in what happens to them. When this happens it is almost inevitable that one of the elements will far outweigh the other and throw the delicate seesaw off balance, with the consequence that a lot of possible richness is lost and the weaker element instead of shoring in the final effect casts a disturbing sense of malaise over the stronger element.

In "Two for the Seesaw" the stronger element, the comedy, is usually good enough to make the play worth seeing. At times it does become a bit coy and forced as when Lynn prescribes for Miss Roman's acidic stomach on the basis of what he calls "a ha ha acid diagnosis" but on the whole it is breezy and sharp and natural.

Somewhere in the play Jerry tells Gittel that next to loving the best verb in the English language is to help. Next to a great experience, the best thing in the theatre is an enjoyable evening, and "Two for the Seesaw" more than provides it.

F. S. Revisited

A CERTAIN SMILE (Hollywood) soon becomes a wry grin after ten minutes of this meticulously hobbled adaptation of Francois Sagan's second bed-time story.

SMILE recounts the summertime adventures of a teenage Existentialist bed-bunny, Dominique (Christine Carere) and her simultaneous affairs with Bertrand (Bradford Dillman), a sad-faced Sorbonne mama's-boy and his rakish Uncle Luc (Rossano Brazzi), a lecherous father-figure as smooth as his Mercedes and twice as fast. Occasionally, they all fall down to a 'rock and roll' cave where the music is loud and the sets are from Hollywood. The rest of the time they just talk.

"Oh how delightful!", replies Dominique to Luc's invitation for a week of carnal delight on the Riviera.

"What can happen in a week?" queries Bertrand, who obviously has not read the book.

"A lot," returns Dominique, panting at the thought of Uncle Luc.

So it's off to the Riviera, but all the wee mamselle sees is the ceiling. The viewer, however, is treated to some sparkling, well-photographed Cote D'Azur scenery to pad out the sadly truncated storyline.

When Auntie Francois (Joan Fontaine) finally sees the light, she does the old double-take and promptly bundles the cute kid off to bed, this time with some hot broth. And so on and so on.

Director Jean Negulesco slavishly adheres to Hollywood's straight-laced Code in an adolescent screenplay that overworks the imagination and presupposes a reading knowledge of F.S.

Johnny Mathis, the soulful new Hit-Parader, happens to by croon the theme song, which, thereafter, is overplayed and soon becomes cloying. The acting on all parts is competent, but nothing can save the story which even in the racy original French was soporific.

As an object-lesson in Miss Sagan's "ennui", this film is successful. Most viewers, however, prefer entertainment. Ted Schafer.

Ed, note: The AM&D staff extend their hearty congratulations to Ted Schafer, who has just been made campus correspondent for TIME magazine. Keep up the good work! Now who's wearing the wry grin?

Love That Musset!

For more than a quarter century, the Cercle Francais of University College has presented an annual dramatic production. This year, they are presenting "On ne badine pas avec l'amour", by Alfred de Musset whose "Lorenzaccio" is currently being presented in New York by the Theatre National Populaire.

The leads are Ross Curtis, a member of the UC staff, and Erika Hersch, a recent arrival from Peru. Both have had considerable experience — Mr. Curtis has appeared in several French productions, notably "Le Malade Imaginaire" and the Three Farces, presented in 1957. Miss Hersch acted with the "Good Companions" — a British group in Peru — and appeared in such productions as "Pygmalion" (Eliza Doolittle), "Cinderella", and "Aladdin".

"On ne badine pas avec l'amour" depicts the consequences arising from treating love too lightly. It is, however, not completely a tragedy, but possesses many comic scenes and characters — especially Dame Plucke who is being played by Milada Treshnak. And there are the two rival priests, Mathias Budaine and Blasius, who are continually striving to outtalk and outthink each other.

All in all, it promises to be a highly entertaining evening — at least, Le Cercle Francais hopes you will find it such. Tickets are now on sale at Hart House Theatre for the single performance, Thursday, November 11, at $30. Seating capacity is limited, so make your reservations early.

Les Infants Terribles

The other day I was sitting in the KCR with some of my infantile friends, when a star-eyed female with a fox-skin hat wandered in, staring at the floor as if she had lost something. Obviously she was something that the Storm had blown over Asia. I thought, a last despairing remnant of the Golden Horde; perhaps she had even been in on the Killing with Stanley Kubrick Kahn himself.

Suddenly, she pounced upon my infantile girl friend, Peter. (She's a lot more fun than Pat or Mike, to say nothing of Sam), and began to question her on why she wore leotards.

Naturally, poor old Peter threw several appealing glances in our direction, but the descendant of Genghis Khan refused to let her call us into the discussion. "Don't talk to your friends — they're so infantile." Of course, she was right, but you've got to take the nit-witter with the sweet.

Turns out she was doing a feature for the Women's Section of the Globe and Mail; Well, Princess Koochin (how, or whatever your name is, I suggest you look up the infantile Oct. 31 copy of The Varsity. Perhaps there's something there you can steal. Thirteen thousand infantile students might be right.

Warren Peace.

Venice Obscured

A-To-Be-Continued-Afterthought

So Mr. York Wilson you are the rosy romantic painter of carnivals and sailing ships and little castles on the hill. The rosy romantic. Not the tired boiled romantic idealist like Pirandello or Shelley. The tough disguised idealists. With deep insight, the sentimental rosy romantic. Oh, cloying, cloying the joyous colour of Italia. Let's skim the surface as we flutter by minding not to touch that dirty dirt with our white wings. The rosy romantic flying. Let's fly swiftly by and never raise an eyelid. Let the colour pour through our eyelids as we glide by. Just the colour mind you please. I only want to see the colour. That will do nicely.

How dare you place those human beings there. Can't you see I'm concentrating on my colours. They'll destroy my design. My little colour design.

Rosy romantic glow.

It is?

Do the colours really swirl, gyrate along and through and up and down their canvases. Wild impulses? Romantic impulsive fool. Emotional. Madness. Pleasant emotions. Rosy romantic. All very pleasant. Isn't it delightful, Venice. Oh, I've always wanted to go to Venice. Isn't it simply marvellous. These frightful Venetians. How they do smell. Death in Venice. Dirt and dung clogging up the canals. Sludge. Stench. Narrow dirty alleys with sewers. The rosy romantic glow. Emotion. Pleasant emotion. How delightful everything is.

Please, Mr. Wilson take off the rosy romantic glow blinkers. And look. Stare. Peer at the people passing by. The dirty people. The poor underfed, thin people. With leers, smells, dullness, stupidity, cupidity, nobility, courage and guts. Stare. And Vitality. Feel. Feel it deeply.

Rosy romantic emotions.

Are you just a pleasant clever colourist? Is that all? Is that really all you are? Through the rosy looking glass I see this pleasant world. The ships without men, the building without people, without any sign of people. Not even through rosy glasses.

You have the strength and flexibility of design. The feeling and use of colour. The tinge of a personal style. Oh, Wilson Tourismo Colourismo I've enjoyed colour domestic. But how about a little drama, eh? With real live people. That will make me feel deeply, make me cry, make me laugh and even think. Real people and the rosy romantic view.

How about some drama. Some depth of view. Sound and alarm. Close all rosy hatches. Prepare to dive. Deep into humanity.

Rosy romantic view of Venice. Depth 300... Prepare to crash dive. Time for a change. Time for people.

down old McGill way...

Team Hale, Donors Pale

MONTREAL, (CUP) — McGill University's two roving international debaters returned home this week after a string of triumphs in the United Kingdom.

Marvin Gomeroff and Bryce Weir arrived here with 11 wins and one "squeaky" loss under their belts after a two week debating tour which included most of the large U.K. universities.

Their only loss was to Cambridge, where they were defeated 151-147. They were opposed in the Cambridge debate by a professor noted as an expert on Commonwealth affairs, and an ex-Labor Under-Secretary.

Topic for the debates was "The Commonwealth is a thing of great promise but paltry achievement". The two McGill debaters alternated for and against the topic in succeeding debates.

"The two round 'Canada's popularity in the United Kingdom has never been better.'"

The general attitude was that the recent election of Prime Minister John Diefenbaker and his pro-Commonwealth Conservatives bolstered Canada's prestige in the U.K.

The Canadian P.M. was hailed as "a great Prime Minister of a great Commonwealth country," the two debaters reported.

The pale people with the happy grins here are probably students at the University of Montreal.

For the fifth year in a row U of M students have won the Birks Trophy for highest percentage of blood donations to the Red Cross.

The U of M contributed 2,786 pints of blood against McGill's 2,376 — only 81 per cent of the McGill objective.

McGill blamed lack of facilities at the clinic and distance from the campus for their failure to take the trophy.

Triumphant U of M spokesmen said: "We wish McGill the best of luck next year."

chess star sweeps 22

A U of T medical student Friday won 22 of 23 simultaneous chess games at the Hart House Chess Club.

George Berner, a Yugoslavian chess master, performed the feat after giving a lecture on "The Cultural Aspects of Chess".

The meeting also featured a discussion of chess strategy.

Another open meeting is planned by the club in the near future. Women are invited.

Campus Building May Resume

Immediate future of several U of T building construction projects on campus remained in doubt yesterday in the face of Friday's end to a 42-day work stoppage by the Toronto Builders' Exchange and a continuing strike by city cement masons.

Major construction projects at the U of T are not sufficiently advanced to require cement-pouring, university construction supervisor G. D. Maxwell said yesterday, so there is a possibility construction workers will not picket these sites.

If the construction sites are not picketed, work could be carried on until the strike is settled, he said. "Although we have lost five good weeks, we can still be ready for the fall term of 1959," Mr. Maxwell said.

Among the buildings now under construction are the Women's Athletic Building, and a new Dental building.

By LIZ BINKS

I'm really a pretty callous person. I don't usually mind when I'm left out of things—when people ignore me, when they have parties and things without inviting me.

I just go along my happy, trivial little way, and convince myself I don't care.

For instance, I didn't mind that my best friend got an offer for a $100 reduction on a typewriter. I probably could have afforded the remaining $150—but this way I was able to save the money and pretty soon I'll be able to buy an IBM machine.

I didn't mind when everyone else but me received their Syd Silver handkerchief. After all, girls don't have much use for them. I can always hide my disappointment by pulling other people's out of their pockets and embarrassing them.

Then there was the time somebody was offered a $200 reduction on a life subscription to Reader's Digest. I guess I did feel a bit of a pang about that—it would have been really nice but I pulled myself together and bought a copy of Sick, Sick, Sick instead.

There have been countless other times like these. And I've always managed not to be bitter and to feel warm inside about the way these companies care about university students.

They think of everything. Friends of mine have received offers of desk appliances, washing machines, reduced memberships in record and book clubs and weekend trips for two to New York.

It made me feel good to know that other people's creative talents were being encouraged and that they would be able to get their year's supply of soap flakes for filling in a missing line of doggerel.

I felt only pride when I heard of some outstanding students who had been included on Time Magazine's mailing list as our leaders of tomorrow.

None of this mattered to me at all, because these mailing lists had obviously been prepared after very careful selection and there was no reason at all why they should have chosen me.

But I must confess to being upset about being excluded from the latest free offer to university students. For the past two weeks I've been afraid to offer my own brand of cigarettes to anyone.

Giving people cigarettes has always been one of the things I took great pleasure in doing. Now I can't any more. You see, everyone else is smoking Bevedere's and I'm still back with du Maurier's.

BLUES AIM FOR GRID RECORD

No Varsity Team In The Past Has Recorded "Perfect" Season

Varsity football Blues, rated by many observers as the finest Toronto representative in Intercollegiate history, has the opportunity to set a record never before attained by a Varsity team.

And that is to complete the season by winning every game. The 1951 Blues won five and tied one, and that's the closest Varsity has ever come to a "perfect" season.

Barring yellow fever, a mass murder, or apathy on the team, there appears to be little standing in Blues' path to that record.

What there is, however, must be hurdled, and Varsity gets that opportunity Saturday afternoon when McGill Redmen pay their first, last and only visit to Toronto soil this season.

Rinkies Lose Soccer Title

Varsity Baby Blues were forced to relinquish the Intercollegiate intermediate soccer championship yesterday after being held to a 2-2 tie by Ryerson Rams.

Ryerson opened the scoring, but Mike Mahon netted the equalizer through the first half. Chris Carr gave Baby Blues the lead before the half.

Rams came back to tie the score in the final period, taking advantage of a momentary lapse by the Varsity defence.

Best for Varsity were halfbacks Doug Grant, Oscar Reimann and Doug Taylor, while Lloyd McKenzie and Mahon were the pick of the forward line.

Ironically, Baby Blues lost the title without suffering a defeat. They were forced, however, to forfeit their first two games—both wins—due to use of an ineligible player.

Some of those may go on to Ontario College of Education or post-graduate studies, but many are already completing OCE or post-grad, and definitely depart.

Reid, who now owns 82 points in his three-year Varsity career, needs three touchdowns to hit the 100-point mark. He aided his cause by kicking a convert against Western last week.

Tim corrected the Varsity reporter who noted that Reid "kicked the first convert of his life."

"Why, I'd been practising converts for two months, kicking them back to Walt (Adams) during practise," he grinned.

That combination—17 graduating students playing their final game, and Tiger Tim heading for 100—should be enough to make the McGill game worthy of attention by each and every student.

And, of course, there is always the possibility Redman coach Bruce (Bones) Coultier will encourage his crew to greater heights and an upset victory.

If Frank Tindall could do the same, there would be a playoff. That would be on November 15.

But... possibilities, not probabilities. —JOHN BROOKS.

In intramural football games on this campus, there are 27 men on the field at one time. Two dozen are players, and the remaining trio are officials.

To be a player requires good wind, hard muscles, and strong love for the game. To be an official requires a level of courage no less than a convicted criminal walking the "last mile."

It is not pleasant to be a target of verbal (and, on occasion, physical) abuse, but that is the role undertaken by football officials. They expect it, and they bear it.

Unfortunately, our intramural officials come in for more than their share of criticism. This is mostly oral, but of late, in some campus publications, it has been written.

The latest condemnation came yesterday, when one journal, commenting on the officiating, said, in effect: "To call it inept would be a compliment."

(It is interesting to note, in jassing, that the above phrase appeared in the publication of a college whose football team had almost been beaten by a definite under-dog.

Referees are human. They make mistakes once, rarely twice. And in view of the trips some professional officials have made on the carpet this year, it appears our intramural referees should be congratulated rather than condemned.

Ours have a painstaking chore, made more difficult by the fact that many are wearing a striped jersey for the first time in their lives.

Co-operation is an integral organ of our intramural system. These officials have volunteered their services to enable inter-faculty football to exist.

Why condemn them? Let's save our complaints for the day when the officials have been pestered and prodded into non-existence, and our athletic fee skyrockets so we can pay for outside officials.

Let's take an example.

Dunc Brodie has not played football for a long time. In the McGill game in Montreal, Brodie was in the clear and dropped a pass that was right in his hands. He was not condemned.

A couple of games later, Brodie caught two touchdown passes and redeemed himself. And he did so because his coach understood, and tried to help him.

Intramural athletic director John McCutcheon has faith in his officials. And he has faith in players and fans to give the referees their co-operation and encouragement, not their curses.

It is very simple to stand on the sideline and yell unkind comments at the officials. It's even simpler if you're a player parked two feet away.

It may be fun, too. And although yelling fire and brimstone is not to be condoned, it is something the officials expect. But neither do they expect, nor deserve, written criticism.

If an official makes a bad call, he realizes it, and won't make it again. A fan or player who is momentarily incensed should have the common decency to realize this.

We've said it before, and we'll say it again—our intramural system ranks with the finest on the continent. With our co-operation, it will continue to be so.

The more the referees are condemned, the sooner they'll quit. If we bear with them, errors will diminish. If we don't, the prestige of our intramural system will plunge.

Let's help rather than hinder.

Irish Nearly Pull Season Upset Holding Victoria To 7-7 Draw

By DAVE GRINER
Varsity Staff Reporter

St. Michaels came within an ace of pulling the upset of the year when they tied Victoria 7-7 in Group I football play Tuesday on the back campus.

Ahead 1-0 at half-time on Ed Merkle's single, St. Mike's saw their lead disappear when John Hunter took a pass from Paul Sapuntjis for a touchdown. Mike Smith converted, 7-1.

Then, in the fourth quarter, Henderson of St. Mike's took a Vic punt and ran 85 yards for the tying score. Vic blocked the convert attempt and saved themselves the indignity of a defeat at the hands of the surprising Irish crew.

Vic, as in other games, could not mount any sort of an offense and poor tackling nearly cost them the game.

Group II saw Dentistry move into second place as they handed Pharmacy a 12-0 setback. Sy Talsky and Gary West scored unconverted touchdowns for the Dentists.

Wednesday, UC Redmen extended their lead in Group II football with a 19-1 win over Medicine.

Ray Kerr scored UC's first major, intercepting a pass on Med's three-yard line, and running over unmolested.

Bob Goode scored the second tally in the second quarter on a 20-yard run after intercepting another Med's pass.

Meds only score came late in the second quarter when Dick Charron kicked a single point.

Mike Bliss gathered in a screen pass from quarterback Ray Gauvette and bulled his way over from the Meds fifteen for the final UC major. Andy Higgins pass to Gauvette completed the scoring.

Interfaculty Summary

While Senior Meds and Victoria, battled to a 0-0 tie in soccer play, Junior Skule whipped Pre-Meds B 6-0. Lindsay led the winners with three, Parato added two, and Caero netted a singleton.

Wycliffe registered its fourth consecutive shutout with a 1-0 win over Emmanuel. Rix scored the game's only tally in the first half. Knox edged Law, 1-0, on a late score by Barker.

University College topped Skule Thirds in volleyball play, but needed three games to do it. Scores were 18-16, 6-15, 15-3.

In lacrosse action, St. Mike's B screened First Pre-Meds 10-0. Bourke led the winners with three goals.

There is no football play today, but all four Group One teams get into action Friday, Trinity against Vic in the crucial match, and St. Mike's meeting Senior Skule in the other.

big dig at Bradford

Nine Skeletons Unearthed

Student finds last weekend at an Indian site near Bradford, Ontario, will force a re-evaluation of conclusions drawn from previous discoveries, a U of T professor says.

Dr. Norman Emerson, associate professor of anthropology and director of U of T excavations at the site, said the nine skeletons students found last weekend brings to 30 the total number found at the site.

During past weeks, the majority of finds have been remnants of adult males in a mutilated condition. Their state indicated they had been thrown indiscriminately into graves after a battle, Dr. Emerson said.

But six of the nine skeletons found last weekend were infants, and one an adolescent. Their condition indicates they died from natural causes, he said.

Although the annual dig was previously cancelled, volunteers were allowed to dig at the site this weekend.

The volunteer basis "produced a group of exceptionally interested students", Dr. Emerson said. The work went very smoothly, he said.

Evidence acquired at the site indicates it dates from the fourteenth century. More detailed conclusions concerning the site will not be available until new material has been cleaned and skeletons reconstructed, he said.

No analysis of the bone has yet been made, but preliminary investigation indicates most of the skeletons are male. Some of them were afflicted with arthritis or diseases of the teeth and gums. One had a bone tumor on the foot.

The adjoining village site is definitely Iroquois, of the Huron tribe. The Lalonde high-collar pottery found there was first identified with Huron culture in excavations at Midland, Ont.

"What we may have here is a part of this Lalonde culture in the process of migrating north to Midland", Dr. Emerson said.

Carbonized beans, but no corn was found, indicating the culture was in an incipient state, agriculturally, he said.

Scholarship

A third-year Bachelor of Music student at the U of T has been awarded the $1,000 annual music scholarship of the Beta Sigma Phi international sorority.

Bruce Mather, who also studies at the Royal Conservatory of Music with majors in piano and composition, has appeared as a soloist at the Canadian National Exhibition and with the Canadian Broadcasting Corp.

Several of Mather's original compositions have been performed at public concerts.

Say US Planes Surpass NATO

A Toronto politician Tuesday told students the United States' Strategic Air Command was a more powerful deterrent against Russian aggression "than all the NATO armies put together."

Marvin Gelber, defeated Liberal candidate for Eglinton in the last federal election, said "if it hadn't been for the SAC the whole of the British Isles and Western Europe would have perished under the yoke of communism during the days before NATO."

Mr. Gelber made the statements during an address to the United Nations Club on "The North Atlantic Treaty Organization".

"The SAC is the strongest weapon the western world has to discourage the territorial ambitions of the Russian giant," he said.

"One of the most important roles the NATO armies are performing was the boosting of morale in weaker European countries," he added.

Commenting on the United Nations, Mr. Gelber said "people should not become disillusioned if the U.N. fails to solve its problems immediately."

"After all, it took parliament centuries before it developed into the well organized institution of authority and power it now is," he continued.

Mr. Gelber listed "moral influences and world opinion" as the two most important factors supporting the U.N.

CHAOS of bodies marks Trinity's first dry cake fight in many a year. Worms failed to force their way through ranks of sophmores into the quad as second year men stood firm against freshmen for the minute-long competition. The dry fight, marking end of initiations, was followed by a wet soph-frosh smoker last night. Unscheduled ceremony came at dinner when Worms showered the dining hall with confetti and released two chickens.

McGillmen Arrive Late To Beat Debaters Here

The McGill Debating Union, fresh from a successful debating tour of the British Isles, last night added another feather to its cap as it downed the official U of T team in a skimpily attended Hart House debate.

Twenty-six students followed Speaker Robin Beamish's command "the house will divide" and by a vote of 14-12 upheld the affirmative of the topic "Resolved the further development of nuclear weapons should be prohibited by international agreement."

McGill Debating Union president Morris Fish, IV Arts, opened the case for the affirmative by making a short speech in French.

As his team-mate Norman May (I Law) explained, "My colleague is forced to beg the indulgence of the house but he has only been speaking English for a few weeks — ever since he was ejected from the University of Montreal."

Fish continued his remarks in broken English, gradually lapsing into more normal diction, by commenting on the respective state of political affairs in Quebec and Ontario.

"Things are different in Ontario — you have a democracy."

"The Duplessis regime has just passed a new statute whereby no man may be executed twice ... for the same offence."

"Quebec is evolving a type of collective democracy similar to that of the United States. The U.S. has Huey Long and we don't, the U.S. has Orville Faubus and we don't, the U.S. has Joe McCarthy and we don't. But put them all together and we've got him."

With reference to his French-Canadian ancestry, Fish said "Former Liberal immigration minister Pickersgill would have described me as a 'clean Canadian'."

"It's a pity Mr. Pickersgill couldn't be with us tonight," he went on but he's at a special meeting. The leaders of the Liberal party have gotten together to elect the rank and file."

"If I may digress, I'd like to discuss the topic", Fish continued.

"We have a moral obligation to present and future generations to stop nuclear testing," he said.

"It has been proven conclusively that nuclear testing is harmful to mankind. The number of deaths at Hiroshima and Nagasaki attributable to leukemia and bone cancer is four times that in areas which have not been bombed by nuclear weapons," he said.

Fish quoted the controversial American Nobel prize-winning scientist Linus Pauling as saying "for each atomic bomb dropped, 15,000 children will be born mutated".

Sid Peck (II Law) first speaker for the Noes, conceded a moral obligation to halt nuclear testing but said that this could not be done by international agreement.

He cited the complete freedom with which the Germans broke the 1939 German-Russian non-aggression pact as evidence of the freedom with which nations break international agreements.

"This solemn and binding pact was broken without any qualms, and the Russia of today has much the same attitude towards

U of O's Rector Legare Defends Dean's Stand; Paper "Trouble-sheet"

Rights of student newspapers to publish and defend their views came under fire yesterday from Rev. Henri Legare, Rector of the University of Ottawa.

In reply to a protest letter sent last week by Canadian University Press, the Rector said facts surrounding dismissals of former La Rotonde editors Louis Cliche, Roger Roy, and Pierre Trudel have been misrepresented in the Student press.

The administrative authorities of the University of Ottawa have not yet taken part in this matter, he said.

The controversy so far "has been one between the Dean of Students and the Federation. The Dean has not removed the three members of the editorial board from office — that is the prerogative of the Federation, which appointed them."

"The Dean has, however, prohibited them from participation of any kind in the affairs of La Rotonde", he added.

The CUP letter said freedom of expression is a basic right and a vital part of university education.

The Rector claimed that La Rotonde did not differentiate between "news" and "views".

"La Rotonde was less concerned with putting out a newspaper than with publishing a trouble sheet", he said.

Father Legare accused the Canadian University Press of making no attempt to ascertain the University's position.

"Your news service, in reporting developments relating to La Rotonde, has not sought to obtain the University's position," he said.

Varsity editor Doug Marshall contacted U of O's Public Relations Officer Bill Boss at the Nficus conference last month, but Boss refused to enlarge on the University's stand in the matter.

Christen "Jargon" As Editors Meet

About 15 campus editors met yesterday afternoon to give official birth to the University of Toronto's own literary magazine and to christen it — "Jargon".

Robert Columbo, (IV Vic), newly-appointed editor-in-chief of the magazine, told the editors of college and faculty publications the magazine, introduced for the first time last year, would be "literary first, representational second, and an all-round magazine third."

He announced the deadline for submitting material would be late January and publication date early in March. Both dates will be set more precisely in the future, he said.

Specifications for the magazine, he said, call for 48 pages including five of advertisements, one full-page illustration and several smaller ones.

Columbo explained the magazine would be paid for by a $400 grant from the university Students' Administrative Council, and others from colleges and faculties.

Expected total cost of the magazine is $875. Payments described as "nominal" will be made for material accepted, he announced.

Copies of "Jargon" will be sent to reviewers across Canada, Columbo said. The plan is part of a long-range problem to eventually make the yearly publication commercially independent.

Material for the magazine be chosen by Columbo and the editorial board of faculty representatives who will be assisted in their decisions by grades of submissions by a board of faculty members.

Final decision, however, will rest with the student editorial board, Columbo said.

He announced also that the magazine would reprint, if necessary, from college and faculty publications.

Faculty contributions will be accepted, he said, from members engaged in studies at the university.

"But the main purpose of this magazine," he said, "is to give those with no audience a chance of having one."

"For that reason, I think, the decision of the board would be weighted against contributions from professional writers," he said.

The meeting of campus editors arrived at the title of the magazine after rejecting proposed names including "Kaleidoscope", "Image", "Scribe", "Triad", "Rapport", and "Oblong".

Rev. Allen At UC Defines "Christian"

By KAY McCOOK
Varsity Staff Reporter

He was born in the Ayrshire town of Newlins, the son of a butcher, the youngest of a family of nine.

At school he was bright but not brilliant.

At an American church service after the war he heard a negro sing "Were You There When They Crucified My Lord?" and realized for the first time what Christianity was all about.

Yesterday this man, who went on to turn his mid-town Glasgow parish into a dynamo of Christian activity took time out from his city mission to make a simple statement of his faith to a gathering of students in U.C. "I believe," he said, "that Jesus Christ is Lord."

"Why? Because only through Christ can I ascend into the hill of the Lord."

"I know that I have failed to be the man God would have me be. I have sinned and I sin, and only the Cross opens the way to God for sinful men."

Then this man, Rev. Tom Allan, was asked to define a Christian.

He smiled.
"Whenever I speak to students, I feel a kind of paralysis. I feel that I am speaking to experts, to really brilliant people". The students laughed.

"But more and more I realize that intellectuals want definitions of the Faith presented in plain terms.

"Too many people are afraid to claim they are Christians because they consider only the ethical definition."

"But a Christian is not a perfect man. Neither can he be explained as merely a good man, for Socrates was a good man but he was not a Christian.

A Christian is a person who knows that he is a forgiven sinner."

"We are not born Christians. We must cross the line that divides the Dominion of the World from the Dominion of Christ to receive forgiveness and reconciliation. There is no pattern — we may be young or old, good or bad, but we must cross the line to discover peace of mind, the power to live by and the hope to die by."

Then he said: "Sorry to have spoken so long, I always do that."

He picked up his travel-sticker-laden briefcase and hurried out to his next lecture.

Three Talk On Russia At Astronomical Meet

Toronto's division of the Royal Astronomical Society of Canada got a starry-eyed view of Russia Tuesday night.

Three Canadian delegates to the International Astronomical Union convention in Moscow gave the group an illustrated lecture on their experiences in Russia.

RASC president Dr. Helen Sawyer, Prof. Ruth J. Northcott of the David Dunlop Observatory, and

Dr. Donald A. MacRae, head of the Observatory's radio-astronomy department discussed Russian astronomy and architecture at the meeting.

The Russian observatory in Pulkova is the largest in the world, with a staff of 150 scientists, Dr. MacRae said.

But the three found most good Russian architecture was of pre-Soviet vintage, with "legendary Samarkand" ranking first in Prof. Northcott's opinion.

Best example of Soviet architecture is the University of Moscow, they said.

Hell envisioned Senators Lose To Vic On Armament Question

Despite a vivid description of the hell which would follow a nuclear war, the government went down to defeat last night at Brennan Hall.

In a debate between the St. Michael's Senate Club and Victoria College the government was defeated 19-16 on its resolution "that the further development of nuclear weapons be prohibited by international agreement."

First speaker for the Senate Club, the "ayes", was Jordan Sullivan. He said our world is like a western movie, in which the good guys, the Western bloc, and the bad guys, the Soviet bloc, cannot back down.

"One day the sheriff must pick up his guns and walk down the sunny centre of the street to meet the bad guys."

Gail Youngberg, Vic, first opposition speaker, asked the house to imagine the Soviet releasing the power of thermonuclear weapons by beginning a war in this age.

"Knowing the full power of these weapons is enough to deter the Soviet bloc, without the limitations of international agreement," she said.

University students cloister themselves in a world between reality and pure fantasy, and thereby avoid world issues, government speaker Lloyd Gray said.

"It is our duty as university students to take a stand on the question before us. We are the 'Adam' which will remake this world in the event of a third world war," he warned.

Asking the house to adopt the resolution before it, Gray said, "In the next war there will be no victors, only victims."

Jim McCartney, final speaker for the opposition, said, "In the development of nuclear weapons, we have reached the highest point in our evolution to destroy each other."

A speaker from the floor suggested the money intended for nuclear weapons be used to develop bacteriological weapons to "poison the water supply, and dust the crops with a big black bacillus."

On the merits of their speakers, the government won by a vote of 14-8.

Tuesday night the SMC Oratorical Society battled with Trinity over the motion "Resolved that the only discipline is self-discipline."

Debaters used a unique split system in the match, with one representative from each college on each team.

The nose suffered a resounding defeat on the motion. Oratorical Society president Peter Dembski said he hopes more debates will be organized on the split system.

The idea breaks up block college voting, and "forces contact between the colleges", Dembski said.

Miss MacPherson Finds Male Audience Delightful

By HARVEY SHEPHERD
Varsity News Editor

Jay MacPherson, Victoria College teacher, Canadian poet, lady, looked up from her seat, wrinkled her brow and smiled.

"I think male audiences are delightful."

About 20 men, from whose number women — including a Varsity staffer — had been excluded, laughed as they put down their coffee cups and stood up to leave.

Miss MacPherson addressed the students in the Hart House library last night on "Canadian Poetry".

"I think I did once write something approaching a Canadian poem and it was about the Abominable Snowman."

Canadian poetry is faced with "the problem of finding itself a mythology," she said.

The European landscape has a mythology, a conventional way of being looked at, the result of centuries of work by painters and writers, she said.

In Europe, "man and nature have learned to get along together".

Miss MacPherson saw the houses and cities of Europe as seeming to grow out of the land. When one returns to Canada, the houses seem to have been set down on the landscape.

Canada has very few myths, perhaps a few new ones, based on "the qualities of a Churchill and the quantities of a Marilyn Monroe."

She stood, slim and a little angular in a quiet blue round-necked chemise. Occasionally she took her glasses off and let them hang in her hand for a while before she put them on again.

When Milton wished to write an elegy on the death of his friend by water he had a great background of myth, classical and religious, to draw on, she said.

A young poet drowns in Lake Ontario. No one writes an elegy.

When Dylan Thomas died, it was not by water, but it was "almost as easy to write an elegy on his death as not to," for Thomas' own work provided a sort of mythological background to draw on.

It seemed as if Miss MacPherson always had a joke on her mind — just hidden behind the delicacy of her speech and a sort of sympathy she had with her audience.

Her hair is parted in the middle and drawn back, close to her head, into a pigtail-wrapped bun. Her face was decorated only with a pair of semi-translucent blue-green pendant earrings.

"A dull people, but the rivers of this country run wide and beautiful."—Irving Layton.

The Indians, Jay MacPherson said, made almost no physical impression on the landscape at all. They were more like dry leaves blowing across it.

Another Canadian poet wrote about death by water. "He owed me twenty dollars, by the way."

What the poet didn't say but Miss MacPherson did is that a mind which can contemplate lasting grief and the loss of $20 at the same time is "much larger than most of us can afford."

She read Canadian poetry eerily, slowly.

"We're just past Hallowe'en," she said. Maybe its should be a national holiday.

Not that we have very many ghosts. Ghosts like nooks and crannies and corners. Only a few Indian ghosts such as the Wendigo are large enough to fill these spaces.

"I know not what it is I hear."—Archibald Lampman.

The "ghost" here is "something larger and stronger than a lost human personality."

She spoke of the mythology provided by Charles G. D. Roberts and Grey Owl. "Involving, I remember from my childhood, mostly dying bears."

She furrowed her brow, pursed her lips a little and looked down. She noticed, a little later, that she had mixed a metaphor. "But I couldn't stop to do anything about it."

A test of a poet is the comprehensiveness of his digestion, she said. For this, James Reaney "beats all."

She felt excerpts from a recent poem of his would be a "proper conclusion to these rather unconcerted remarks." The excerpts were about the education of young Stratford geese.

Miss MacPherson answered questions, for a short time in the library, then upstairs over coffee.

American literature, she said, has a tradition of words such as "Life, Liberty and the Pursuit of Happiness." "The only word we ever had was 'Dominion' and I understand the Liberals got rid of that."

James Reaney used geese in his poetry "I had a sea-monster once."

Somewhere in the middle of a young man's dissertation on the world-view as found in a number of poets she managed to say that a poet's business is to write poems.

The male audience seemed to think Miss MacPherson is more than delightful.

Psychosomatic - Schizophrenic Seeks Personal Satisfaction

A McGill psychiatrist said yesterday all men have a split personality.

Dr. Alastair W. MacLeod, Assistant Director of the Montreal Mental Hygiene Institute and Professor of the Psychiatry Department at McGill University, was speaking at the U of T Round Table on Man and Industry.

Dr. MacLeod's paper on "Personal Satisfaction" was presented at the third and concluding round table.

This year's session started Nov. 2 and will end this afternoon.

Dr. MacLeod said he thought it fit that he begin "by discussing certain aspects of man — man as an unique individual identity and as a component part of a larger group."

Dr. MacLeod went on to talk about health, "about what it is and how it is linked to personal satisfactions."

Finally, he spoke of the skills required to maintain health, how to acquire them, to reinforce them and to multiply them.

Dr. MacLeod began his discussion of man as an identity by asking, "Can man, that is man in his true essence, ever exist as an entirely autonomous individual?"

After analysing the question, Dr. MacLeod concluded, "Man is recognized as being at one and the same time the cause and effect of the society in which he lives, the society from which he derives his satisfactions and upon which he vents his spites."

"Two levels of consciousness or even two separate consciousnesses exist, in each of us, one pertaining to our private experience, the other to all portions of experience attributable to association with others."

"So it seems that as yet there has emerged no scientifically valid theory which denies our right to regard ourselves as separate individuals with separate identities, rights, duties and responsibilities to ourselves and others, at least for the living of our everyday lives."

"As we have seen, man is an entity but a fascinatingly complex entity. He is aeons old at the time of his birth, yet he manages to retain something of the child in his makeup even into his old age. Nothing he has ever experienced is ever permanently lost to him. He is at one and the same time infant, child, youngster, adult and oldster, male and female, individual and group, devil, rational being, and god!"

Each level needs individual satisfaction, he said.

"Possessing the ability of reflective self-awareness, man is in a position where he can not only perceive directly what he is feeling or doing or wanting to do, but he can also stand back from himself as it were and ask himself should I be feeling the way I am under the circumstances, should I be doing what I am doing or wanting to do what I am wanting to do?"

"At the physical and sensual levels man appears to be governed by much the same set of biological values as that which governs the behavior of the lower animals. At this level, his personal satisfactions are related to his animal needs and comfort . . .

"He is driven by his imperative instincts and if he does not possess sufficient courage and will power to oppose them he can become their servant rather than their master."

Dr. MacLeod said achievements constitute building blocks of character. "The qualities of the human character so determined are an aspect of health," he said.

Dr. MacLeod next dealt with three "schools" to which the developing individual goes, the familial, the academic, and the industrial.

If the first of these has been successful, he said, "he (the individual) learns the skill of projecting his love outwards, first on to the person of his mother who has been loving him and later on to the persons of others who form his world."

Dealing briefly with the academic period of "schooling," Dr. MacLeod said, "There is considerable evidence that despite so much good in the schooling which our society provides, there is no denying the fact that all children born into it receive adequate mothering and love. All the children and adults passing through our schools and universities should be excited, stimulated and strengthened in their resolve to seek out challenging human problems, broader in scope than those of immediate concern to themselves."

Dealing at length with the "school" of industry, Dr. MacLeod suggested that industry can corrupt and destroy man's health, causing "psycho-social and psycho-somatic illnesses."

In essence, the previous "schooling" must have been adequate and completely thorough if man is to survive the problems industry creates.

"The child at birth has the potentiality of being educated," Dr. MacLeod concluded. "How this potentiality is realized depends not only on lessons he receives in each of society's schools but on how compatible what he is taught in any one school is with what he learns in the others. The purpose of man's education is to prepare him for his role as a maturing human being. He is born with Nature's skills and it is these culture must reinforce. It is not enough that his inborn ability to be adaptable is developed; his inborn ability to be creative must also be developed."

And divided we stand...

international agreements as did the Nazis of 1941," he said.

Peck suggested "some sort of world government organization" as the only effective method of prohibiting nuclear development.

Norman May (I Law), speaking in the clean-up slot for McGill, extended the McGill team's sincere thanks for the welcome they had received.

"Toronto is a real pearl of a city," he said.

"It's so pearly it builds oysters for City Halls."

May claimed Russia would not break an international agreement to prohibit testing if they had something to gain from keeping it.

"The argument that we can't trust Russia is out-dated," he said.

"Russia would not break any agreement which was to her benefit. Look at the Indo-China settlement."

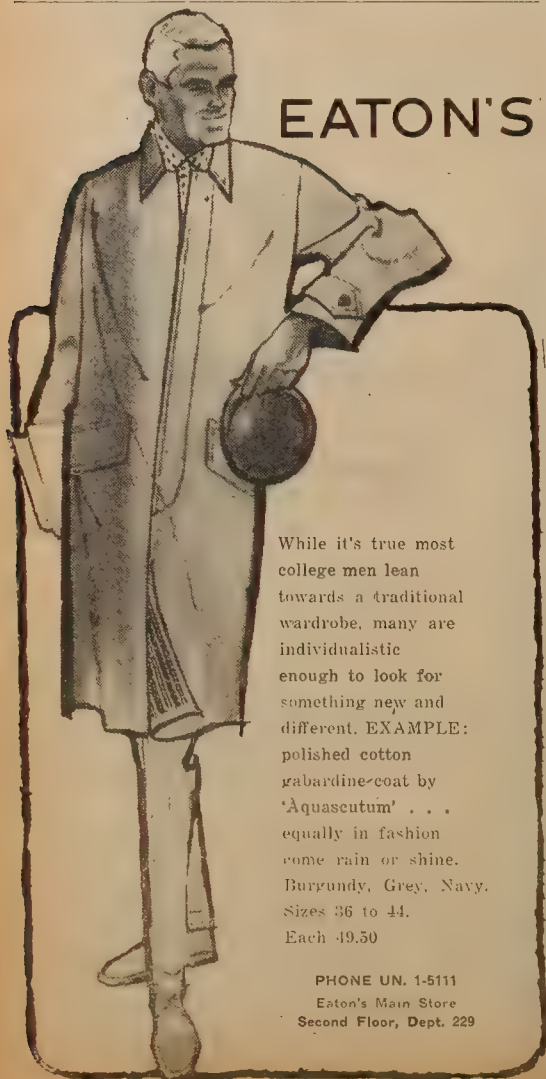

The second speaker for the opposition, Lloyd Cassidy, (I Law), said "nuclear prohibition by international agreement would be exactly like another Volstead Act, and just as impossible to enforce".

"The Free World will be conquered if it relinquishes its one equalizer — atomic weapons," he said.

The Clerk of the House rose four times during the debate to call attention to the fact that speakers were overstaying their time limits. Each time he was dismissed with remarks such as "I'll sit down when I've finished."

Speaker Robin Beamish was forced to rebuke the speakers for speaking longer than the rule allowed.

McGill's team very nearly missed the debate altogether as the TCA plane which brought them from Montreal was delayed for over an hour by bad weather conditions.

An Architect Returns

By IJZ BINKS
Varsity Features Reporter

Various architectural aspects of this campus have come in for more than their fair share of lambasting. "Hodge-podge", "atrocious", "badly designed" are only a few of the adjectives that have been hurled at buildings and planning programs at U of T in the past.

In answer, the few supporters will point in pride to Hart House, the Soldiers' Tower, Trinity College chapel, Vic's Wymilwood and stately Convocation Hall.

But a noted professor of architecture took a whirlwind stroll here yesterday, turned thumbs down on the sacred cows and gave top rating to University College, often referred to as the odd-ball of the campus.

Dr. Alan Gowans, professor of architecture at the University of Delaware, Maryland, was taking time out from a publicity tour for his new book, Looking at Architecture in Canada to revisit the home of his undergraduate and MA studies.

There was no doubt in his mind as to which buildings deserve praise.

"UC is the only university building of any architectural significance whatever," he said. "It is the only one that could be included in a general architectural history of Canada."

The dapper architect-author gave a disdainful nod in the direction of Hart House.

"I can't understand it," he said. "That's the picture that appears on every university Christmas card. Yet buildings like Hart House are a dime a dozen."

"The exterior is innocuous and the interior is probably the ugliest and dirtiest of any in Canada."

"I suppose it's competent enough," he said. "But it's badly proportioned. Towers are supposed to soar. This one squats and the buttresses have no relation to the vaulting."

"It's just run of the mill collegiate Gothic. And it's 20 years behind the times."

But he waxed enthusiastic again as he turned back to UC. Calling it advanced high Victorian, he pointed out some of the eye-catching features which characterize its style.

"Look at that single turret on the south side," he said. "There's a definite reason for that. The purpose of this so-called picturesque architecture was to attract attention—by color, detail and eccentric features."

"That's why all the windows are different—nothing is supposed to match."

"It's a great piece of architecture," he said. "Why even the color and the original iron work are preserved—you can look at it for hours and still find things to talk about."

Professor Gowans had little praise to offer the new book store huddling ignominiously between Knox College and the UC men's residence. He just shuddered.

"Bastard Georgian," was the verdict.

"That kind of thing is what is going to spoil the whole spirit of the campus," he said. "They've tried to make it blend with two totally different types of architecture on either side and they've got a mess."

"The beauty of this campus is that it is not architecturally unified and its buildings show growth patterns of 100 years. If the bookstore had been a contemporary design it would have stood for something."

"It'll be a real shame if they do the same thing with other buildings in their expansion program," he said.

Buildings like Whitney Hall and the UC men's residence are "timid," Dr. Gowans said. "Why in the world did they make them American colonial?" he asked. "That has no significance here. The trouble is that people are so afraid of having ugly buildings that they design them with no character at all."

But not all campus buildings came in for the expert's blast. He showered approval on SPS' "little red skule house", on the mechanical building next to it, on the new wing of the library, on Wymilwood and even on the old bookstore building.

"They all represent a certain type of architecture," he said. "And as such they contribute something. A good building is one of the best advertisements a university can have."

"The good thing about this campus is that it does not lean to conformity and the buildings can be judged in terms of the standards for which they were built."

A walk to the north end of the campus brought more off-beat comments. Dr. Gowans praised Trinity College, but showed disappointment after his first look at its comparatively new chapel.

"This is another example of what people consider authentic Gothic," he said. "There are dozens of chapels like this all over the States. Princeton's and West Point's are very much the same. And like Hart House, they're 20 years out of date."

"Just look at those bare walls," he explained. "Why don't they paint murals on them or something?"

Dr. Gowans revealed more than critical comment during his brief stroll. Croft Chapter House, he said, still houses one of the most elaborately designed men's lavatories in Canada; University College is a twice-removed model for the Ottawa Parliament buildings.

And contrary to popular opinion, Toronto is not dull and conservative.

"Most people are unaware that Toronto is architecturally ahead of most of Canada," he said. "Canada on the whole lacks outstanding buildings, but Toronto—and the University of Toronto—is fortunate enough to possess some of them."

"This is a good attractive campus on the whole. I just hope it's kept that way."

The Well-Fed 50's; A Nothing Time

By MARK NICHOLS
Varsity Managing Editor

When faith is lost, when honor dies, the man is dead, they say. If so, we are a civilization of corpses and our present existence hell.

The collective larynx of our age emits one persistent statement: "I don't believe in anything."

In the smoke-dark rooms, huddled over chianti-bottle lamps, the thousands with beer-taste, whisky-taste, fogged, befuddled minds whisper the realizations they had the night before following the driven scraps of life through empty streets: "there is nothing left to believe."

We believe we are alone, without credos, without a central point for our existences, without values, without fellowship, love or hope.

We believe God died finally the day Wilbur and Orville Wright scooted a rickety collection of wire and canvas into the sky over Kitty-hawk and ended an historical process of death that started with Copernicus.

We believe Henry Ford and Rockefeller abolished dreams and put the tangible material of happiness in their place and we hate this even though we have learned to live with it.

James Dean is our prophet of the misunderstood, a modern-day Christ who chose a crumpled Porche instead of a cross for death. Francoise Sagan piled up her Jaguar. Jack Kerouac dreamed up another latter-day saint in Dean Moriarty who wildly drove his '48 Hudson across the land to Denver and recreated in old age the pious quixotic love of Dostoyevsky's Idiot.

We eat it up. We devour Dean and Sagan, live in the memory of the Lost Generation, study the metaphysical progress of T. S. Eliot from Prufrock to Anglo-Catholicism, dig existentialism even if we don't know or care what it is. We get lost, go wild, wander.

It all rings a bell. Down deep we all feel the same way, the message seems to say. But life is a tricky thing, it takes courage to take chances. You can't fool around too much.

So we invest a dollar and get it second-hand.

Down the country road the hayseed handsome boy is shambling. Loose-walk, tow-head, faded shirt. Across the sunrise a car door slams. In the fresh morning air you can see New York, San Francisco, New Orleans, Montreal in the distance. Sounds are very clear.

The movie-houses nightly debauch their cargoes of despair into the empty bright-lit streets.

The motorcycle boys bust up the night: leather jackets, silver studs and speed. Rock and roll fills the air and travels up the intellectual plane through jazz to folk songs recreating the levy sadness, all creating one thing: a world of sound to drown in.

We have imported philosophies to fill the vacuum. We have brought philosophies of beaten Europe to prosperous America where they have no place.

We have turned to Zen, turned to Greenwich Village, to the left bank, bohemian cellars, and live in the memory of times years gone: the Twenties when rebellion had a reason, the Thirties when suffering was real, the Forties when disillusion seemed to be real.

But we live in the well-fed Fifties, the worst of all.

Others have made a compromise: the "we" is not all-inclusive. But the suffering of the "we" finds a space in the time of the climbers into economic heights and they are as empty of belief as the rest.

Still predominant is the literary tradition of the past, the myth spawned by writers who found in it pragmatic truth: suffer and you will discover the meaning of life.

But the electronic media are skillful adapters. Transformed now, the message is whispered and howled by the many tongues of the hammer-headed media, this beatitude: blessed the dissolute, for they shall inherit the kingdom of sex—of forgetfulness, of sleep.

If you could slice with a giant blade the technicolor dream-substitutes of our age that has cheapened the haven of imagination and penetrate the core of the emptiness, you would find a simple truth.

We are bored, very, very bored. Hands in pockets, cigarette smoke stinging weary eyes, the 18- year-old shifts from hour to hour through the boring day, looking for a struggle.

Grown a man, the same one now can grow a beard. Because there is nothing left to fight, he dredges up the past, re-fights lost causes under the growing pressure of the new, invisible ones: the blood-baths of revolution stir him, the fights for equal rights appeal, because he does not believe in himself, he unwittingly fills the pigeon-holes of Eric Hoffer and dreams of universal transformation.

But he is still bored. Very, very bored.

Of tangible threats, there is only one and it is the threat of total war, of total annihilation and no one really worries about that: for some it is a hope.

In truth, we are coming dangerously close to Utopia. Suffering here is minimized, there is great plenty, perhaps too much. There is no struggle any more to eat, no struggle to believe what we want to and so the result: we believe in nothing.

If there is any struggle left it is the hardest of all: to find faith in a world where all faiths are free where no martyrdoms occur, where Sacco and Venzetti are forgotten, where the no IWW boys swarming Seattle are beaten for believing, where there is no persecution, no struggle.

It will be the struggle of finding new values to suit a better world and the struggle had better begin before the better world crumbles away.

nor' north west

A university is society's citadel to the mind. In that citadel are shaped the spiritual truths and intellectual creeds which will govern and guide society in the years ahead.

But the university is more than a citadel, a static and ornate monument wherein one finds the highest and the most advanced powers of knowledge slumbering into inactivity.

It is also a womb where man experiences his last metamorphosis. When he graduates, he is born for the final time. The long period of physical and mental development which has taken place since his conception is finished.

The constant stream of nourishment which has dripped into his system since the day he first opened eyes on the world is withdrawn, and man is left alone to make the most—or least—of his development.

From that time on until his death man feeds himself.

In these terms it becomes clear that the environment of the university, the final and most important stage in man's development, must be a healthy one.

It must be free, certainly. It must be broad and universal, by definition. But above all it must be spiritually balanced and mentally healthy.

If the citadel of the mind, the womb of learning ever becomes warped by repressed fears and emotional disorders, if it ever loses the clear, smooth and enjoyable aspects of its influence, then it will discharge into society a band of mental mongoloids disguised as intellectual leaders.

A recent survey conducted throughout Canadian universities this summer by the Canadian Association of Medical Students and Interns indicates the womb is not as healthy as many of us would like to think.

The statistics included in the report are startling. One student in every ten has a mental illness serious enough to interfere with his university studies.

In other words 1,300 students at the University of Toronto are mentally ill.

The report goes on to say that one out of every twenty students is ill enough to require psychiatric treatment.

Some 650 students at the U of T should be undergoing treatment with a psychiatrist.

The three most important factors which produce this state are examinations, sex and absence from home.

The report also says that most universities have little or no facilities to deal with this problem.

The University of Toronto is fortunate in this respect. Connected with the health service and the Toronto Psychiatric Hospital are boards of advisors and consultants who treat students with emotional disorders and problems.

More important, the residence system, despite its many defects in other respects, offers through its Dons and Deans a counseling service by means of which many students can solve their problems before they require psychiatric treatment.

But even with these services and facilities in mind, the figures in the CAMSI report are disquieting.

Horace taught that all men were mad and philosophers down through the twisted ages have agreed with him. Certainly no one is perfectly sane and whenever we talk of mental illness and mental instability we are faced with the problem of how one is to define the term "mentally ill".

Today society has become a great deal more tolerant of "mental diseases". But the term still carries that stigma with which we adorn everything abnormal or distorted.

The dangers of mental disorders in a university have been pointed out. In a world afflicted with a pressure and strain never before imagined, it is vital that its leaders should develop in a calm and healthy environment.

The fault lies not so much with the university, which must reflect and answer the pressure of society, but with the undergraduates themselves.

They should have the courage to consult others when possible and take treatment when necessary.

But before this, and more important, they should have the good sense to take themselves a lot less seriously—and laugh a little while they still have time.

Education — III

The Second

A good many of the problems in secondary education arises out of the fact that secondary school students are beginning to show definite differentiation in terms of abilities, interests, and general personality development. In this article those problems which relate to the developing personalities of the students will be discussed, problems of the student population and the curriculum. In a later article the perennial problem of the secondary school teacher will be dealt with.

The Student. Who Should Go.

It is at the secondary level that the problem of who should go to school becomes important. The problem is more critical in high schools than in universities for two reasons:

(a) High school education of some sort is more obviously desired for the great mass of citizens than is university education.

(b) In Ontario, education is compulsory up to the age of 16.

A number of factors complicate this situation. With the birth rate rising since the war, there will soon be between three and four times as many students in secondary schools as there were in 1939. In addition it was recently reported that of the students who fit into the compulsory education age levels, one quarter are incapable of meeting present high school standards, and three quarters are incapable of going on to university. In other words, those students who are capable of taking the most that education can offer them are not even numerous enough to form a significant fraction of the total number.

This is the depressing context in which educators must consider who should go, for how long and what should be taught them.

Two developments, one of fairly long standing and the other relatively new, represent a reasonably adequate attempt to deal with this problem; they are:

(a) the vocational-commercial-academic division in high schools and

(b) the junior high school system.

The junior high school is an attempt to provide enough of a pre-high school background so that the student will find his way into the right one of the three secondary school divisions.

The vocational-commercial-academic split has been in existence long enough so that some of its weaknesses are becoming evident. These are mainly concerned with curriculum.

Both these developments make it possible to suggest that the compulsory education age should be raised, perhaps even as far as twenty years old.

It has been assumed that the only answer to some of our educational problems is to hustle as many people as possible into universities. But the present financial problems and those of maintaining standards that universities are facing, together with the fact that three quarters of our high school students are not capable of making the grade, suggest that a better answer might lie in making the high school education much more independent of the universities than it is at present. The high schools must be prepared in the future to provide a course of study broad and deep enough to make secondary education, at least for the great mass of the population, complete in itself. In order to carry this program out in terms of curriculum the present high school period should be raised from the present five years to seven.

The curriculum.

Such an extension of the time spent, apart from the time in junior high school, would allow certain basic curriculum adjustments in each of the three divisions of secondary education.

(a) the vocational and commercial schools could institute two years of pre-vocational and pre-commercial education on the pattern of the present pre-medical years in universities. This addition would allow sufficient emphasis to be placed on the humanities so that the vocational and commercial schools could produce pupils capable of functioning in a larger society than that of their own particular skills.

(b) the academic schools could switch their emphasis from those who are going on to university to those who are not. Not only would this transition provide a much firmer basis in liberal arts for those whose education will end at the end of high school, but it would remove much of the onus of providing a liberal arts education from the shoulders of the universities, who would be receiving students who were ready, unlike the present freshman classes, to begin specialized work.

This proposal — dealing with the general question of the curriculum — would have far-reaching results. Apart from this broad suggestion a few could be made as to what specifically should be taught.

A commission on education in Alberta recently learned that a brief was to be presented to it by an organization called the L.L.L. These letters turned out to stand for "Let's Learn a Little" and represented a group of grade 10 and 11 honor students. Their complaint was that the secondary schools neither gave them as much as they wanted in basic facts, nor demanded as much from them as they could give. Undeniably such students do not represent a terribly large proportion of the secondary school population but they do draw attention to a fairly common demand on the part of a great many, those that the whole system ultimately depends on.

However, the felt and unmet needs of the students cannot be met simply by throwing them a bunch of facts. What secondary schools have never quite realized is that they occupy a place in the educational system that demands of them the laying down of a broad foundation; in the old book analogy they must provide a list of contents. They do not have to forsake detail and fact; these are essential. But their greatest job is to lay down a context in which all details, no matter how disparate their subjects, take their place in an integrated whole out of which the non-university student can find a basis for existence as a complete and worth-

The week's news was dominated by two natural disasters. The first was a mine cave-in whose results have almost run their course; the second was a landslide whose implications may stretch far into the future.

In Springhill on Monday, 28 bodies were yet to be accounted for. Two miracles had already happened and Springhill was praying for a third, but as the week progressed a mine official's opinion that "there are no more men alive underground" seemed to be borne out as more and more bodies were recovered.

As more and more returns came in from the American congressional election on Wednesday, there seemed to be no more Republicans left alive in the U.S. Out of the general carnage in which the Democrats gained control of the House of Representatives for another two years and the Senate for four, one lone Republican emerged unscathed. Nelson Rockefeller took the New York governorship away from Averell Harriman and may provide Richard Nixon with some competition.

On Tuesday the steel strike ended in its 83rd day with a union victory. Steelco agreed to increase wages by an average of 26 cents an hour.

A new chapter in the tale of two cities was written Thursday, when the Canadian Bank of Commerce betrayed Toronto by announcing plans to build the Commonwealth's highest skyscraper in Montreal. The bank's Toronto branch previously occupied that position of honour.

Also on Thursday, Ottawa officials announced that John Diefenbaker, off on a world tour and visibly bent under the weight of the world, "may try to work in an audience with Pope John."

Catholics all over the world are waiting in breathless expectation.

ertain specific proposals relating to the liberal arts

(a) that the list of compulsory subjects in upper school be increased to include: "Physics and one other science, possibly Biology, Algebra and one other math, possibly Analytic Geometry; English; French; History and Political Science; Philosophy.

(b) the provision for larger scope in the choosing of optional subjects. High schools should, for instance, provide courses in Russian, German, Latin, and Greek, as well as those sciences and maths not compulsory.

(c) Some subjects that are now taught only in the universities should be made available in secondary schools. Russian and Philosophy have already been mentioned. Added to this could be Calculus, Higher Physics, Art History, and Musical Theory.

(d) To facilitate this extension of curriculum, Senior Matricula-tion should be taken in two years rather than the present one.

These proposals are made on the assumption that
(a) a higher level of intellectual excitement is achieved in the primary schools
(b) that academic high school standards be raised so that those students who belong in vocational or commercial schools, where the emphasis would be more on technical skills, should have no difficulty getting there. If all this is taken into consideration, the proposals listed are not in the least impractical in terms of what the average academic school student can and wishes to do. Whether they are impractical from the point of view of what the teachers are equipped to provide must be left to another article.

A Presbyterian Profession

The central place in the worship and life of the Presbyterian church is given to Jesus Christ, the one who "by his perfect obedience and sacrifice of himself . . . hath fully satisfied the justice of His Father." Indeed, is not all true Christianity centred in this person? Christianity is more than an acceptance of a creed or theology. It is a trust in Christ as Saviour, a meeting of God through Jesus Christ, a grasping of the very purpose of life. The Rev. Tom Allan (who is visiting our campus this week) puts it this way in his book "To Be a Christian":

"The answer of the Bible is this; you and I were made to live in fellowship with God, and we can only find peace and fulfilment when we are 'at one' with the God who made us for himself. It was for this reason that God sent His Son into the world."

It is my belief that through Jesus Christ I have been reconciled to God and that in Christ lies the supreme purpose, the very meaning of life.
This is the heart of my faith.

Presbyterians hold that Scripture is the supreme judge in all matters of religion; and in all matters of doctrine and church order they try to meet Scriptural standards. A statement of belief called "The Westminster Confession of Faith" is accepted as a standard, subordinate to the Bible. Indeed, this confession is a synthesis of what the Reformed church considered to be Biblical doctrines and for this reason the work constantly is found to refer to Scripture for authority. However, it is important to realize that in order to be a Presbyterian one need not be in full agreement with this confession if one feels that in any regard it does not accord with Scripture. Having a standard of this sort gives Presbyterians an objective tradition against which they may judge their interpretation of the Bible. In this way a radical individualism is avoided, yet the individual's right to interpret the Bible for himself under the guidance of God the Holy Spirit is retained. In this way God uses Holy Scripture to speak to men and to order His church.

Two sacraments alone are celebrated in the Presbyterian church: Baptism and Communion.
Since the church feels Scripture enjoins infant

Baptism when it declares "the promise is unto you and your children", it practises infant as well as adult Baptism. In Holy Communion it does not believe there is any corporal change in the elements, although it does believe in the real presence. The Confession of Faith states:

"Worthy receivers, outwardly partaking of the visible elements in the sacraments do tho' also inwardly by faith, really and indeed, yet not carnally and corporally, but spiritually receive and feed upon Christ crucified . . ."

The Presbyterian church is so-called because of its church government through presbyteries.
The word 'presbyterian' comes from a Greek word meaning elder. Church government through elders as well as ordination at the hands of the presbytery is found in the New Testament. The presbyterian system allows for a larger measure of lay representation on church councils than most systems, and this means that the church member can more fully participate in the wider ministry of the church. This latter I hold to be especially important, for God guides the layman as well as the minister.

It is commonly held that Presbyterians have a special interest in predestination, and indeed this is the case. Presbyterians like all Christian communions have learned to live with paradox, especially as it is supremely seen where the love of God and the sin of man meet in the Cross.
That is, in the Cross the initiative of God is seen. It is not the case that we first sought Him, but that He first sought us. The grace of God when it comes to man is irresistible. One cannot fully explain, nor even understand this, for ultimately predestination is a mystery.

The Presbyterian church has a noble heritage of fearlessly proclaiming the truths of God. Part of this heritage is its emphasis on having both an educated laity and an educated clergy. Along with other Christian communions God has produced through it men of deep devotion and firm faith, examples of Christ-like lives.
The main thing however, is that it is a church of Jesus Christ; it exists as part of his body both to worship and work for Him who is "King and Head of the church".

When The Devil Came To Hillsboro

For its first dramatic offering of the current season, the Crest Theatre presented a powerful and moving production of Inherit The Wind, by Jerome Lawrence and Robert E. Lee, co-authors of the successful Broadway production, Auntie Mame.

The plays deals with the famous Scopes Monkey Trial of 1925, in which a school teacher was jailed for reading selections from "The Origin of the Species" to his class, in violation of an existing ordinance. The resulting trial brought into opposition William Jennings Bryan (here Matthew Harrison Brady), three times a loser in presidential campaigns, and Clarence Darrow (Henry Drummond), who was later to attain international repute in the Leopold-Loeb murder case.

Both men start off fighting for their ideals (Brady for the American Way of Life, fundamentally speaking, and Drummond for the right of all men to think for themselves); they end up engaging in a battle far more personal and bitter. In fact, the defendant (and Justice) merely becomes the excuse for both men to try to destroy each other once and for all.

In the end, Drummond emerges victorious (at the expense of his client), not so much because he is the better man, but because he has nothing to lose. He has not Brady's almost godlike reputation to live up to, nor does he have a fear of ridicule, since he has been constantly exposed to it.

And finally, he has not the high moral sense of his adversary, despite all his high-sounding phrases about truth and justice. He sets out to destroy Brady absolutely and remorselessly, and succeeds admirably—perhaps better than even he could wish, for his destruction of Brady's reputation brings about Brady's death immediately thereafter.

Darrow the champion of Darwinian Evolution is never so convincing as Darrow the Flail of the Lord. His ridicule of the Bible has little weight; it is when he suddenly gets Bryan to admit that God has spoken to him, that Darrow really comes into his own. He tears into the Prophet Brady with irresistible invective; in sure, telling strokes, he breaks the proud spirit of the man, and when he is confronted with the consequence of his action, he can only utter mawkish platitudes.

"He that troubleth his own house shall inherit the wind; and fools shall be the servants of the wise in heart," he declaims sententiously, as if to say that God was on his side.

Instead of relinquishing the sword, Drummond is waving it about his head, the knight without stain. The Prophet Brady was being replaced by the Jesuit Drummond.

A superlative cast has been brilliantly directed by George McCowan, to do the play full honors. One might have feared that John Drainie would give an imitation of Paul Muni, as he delightfully mimicked Eddie Mayehoff in Visitor From A Small Planet. Such doubts were quickly resolved, however. Drainie's performance was straightforward, unmannered, and very powerful throughout.

Louis Zorich was an excellent foil to Drainie's homespun philosopher, a man of impressive bearing and marvelous eloquence. True, he is a fool, but as Drummond says, man should not be condemned for exercising the right of holding a wrong opinion.

Joe Austin is perfect as the cynical reporter, Igor Gavon, as the defendant, does what he can with a part that is too easily forgotten, and so awkwardly reintroduced in the last act, while Judith MacLeod is excellent in what is surely the most unwarding ingenuit part ever written. William Needles as the priest is magnificent in a part which could all too readily degenerate into caricature.

An excellent set by Murray Laufer, mood music by John Fenwick, and colorful costumes by Clare Jeffery, also contributed to the success of the evening.

And in this disquieting play it is lucky that Drummond was only given a temporary colonelship in the militia; if he had been made a major, the play might have had even more insidious connotations than the ones I have already observed.

Warren Wilson.

The Painters Eleven

The best of Toronto, and the best of Montreal have contributed to the exhibition at the Park Gallery.

Invited last spring to exhibit in Montreal, Toronto's radical group of artists, the Painters Eleven, returned the courtesy this fall by asking ten well-known Quebec artists to send canvases to Toronto.

But, with the exception of two or three paintings, neither Toronto's Eleven, or Montreal's Ten have submitted their best works.

The Painters Eleven is actually nine. The ranks have been diminished by death and desertion in the two years the group has been exhibiting. Of the nine remaining, seven usually command public attention. These are Town, Yarwood, Mead, Hodgson, Bush, Macdonald and Nakamura.

The Montreal delegation includes Borduas, Riopelle, de Tonnancour, Picher and Pellán.

The over-all characteristic of the exhibition is the return to representation. Most of these artists were two years ago painting in a completely abstract idiom. They were in fact, the champions of the various abstract and automatist movements in both cities. But the colors and shapes on their canvases are now taking up a shadowy resemblance to the natural world.

The balanced compositions of Yarwood, the careful color of Town, the strange sea shapes of Macdonald, the explosive fragments of Riopelle, are still present in the recent works of these artists, but the paintings are enriched by some suggestion of reality, usually landscape.

The exceptions in the Park exhibition are paintings by Picher and Borduas. Picher's landscape is less in touch with objective facts than anything of his I've seen before, and is less satisfactory. Borduas' entry in the show is another of his recent severe abstractions that are still puzzling most spectators, but are evoking admiration in others.

One of the prizewinners in this display is a landscape by Yarwood. As late as last year it was difficult to see much resemblance to landscape in Yarwood's large canvases of luminous orange and purple paint. This example, however, is a subtle variation on a sturdy classical landscape composition, complete with tree on the left and recession into depth in the centre of the picture—the kind of composition that has been in vogue for about four centuries.

Many of the idiosyncracies of the Painters Eleven have become familiar since they first began to command attention. Bush is painting in ever larger, ever simpler areas of thinly applied color. Nakamura's canvases are now the understatement of any exhibition. Mead has developed his sweeping movement. Hodgson's color is even more incoherent, but even more exciting. Town is handling still bigger masses of soft-visceral barbwire.

The landscape, Yellow Garden, by Pellán is an innovation. The second of his series of multi-colored gardens to be seen in Toronto, (the other is at Robert's Gallery) this painting with its thick impasto flowers erupting sporadically on a yellow ground would do justice to any confectioner.

A resident critic at the Park Gallery has predicted two final events after examining the exhibition. The painting by de Tonnancour in this display, he says, may very well be the last in the artist's popular series of hilly wooded landscapes. And this may also be the last time the Painters Eleven, with or without the aid of their friends from Quebec, will exhibit together.

Siepi at Sinai

World-renowned singer, Cesare Siepi will appear at the Temple Sinai, 210 Wilson Ave., on Nov. 26.

Siepi, has won great acclaim for his performances in opera as King Philip in "Don Carlo", Mephistopheles in "Faust", Boris in "Boris Godunov", and as the amorous Don in "Don Giovanni".

His performance of the last-named role at Salzburg, under the late Wilhelm Furtwaengler, was faithfully recorded on film by Dr. Paul Czinner, whose more recent "Bolshoi Ballet" has met with great critical approval on both sides of the Atlantic.

Siepi is one of the many Toscanini proteges to achieve an enviable reputation in this country; his concert debut was in the Verdi Requiem in the famous Verdi Memorial Concert at Carnegie Hall.

This season, after several tours of European music festivals, Mr. Siepi has returned to the Met to star in the current season's production of "Boris Godunov".

Tickets for this outstanding concert of $5, $3.75, and $2.75 may be obtained from the Temple Sinai, HU. 5-0475. All seats reserved.

Cesare Siepi, leading basso of the Metropolitan Opera, will be appearing at the Temple Sinai on November 26.

Crazy Fingers And Dreadful All Had Fun

Massey Hall was filled with an audience expecting great things, and certainly nobody went away dissatisfied. There was funky jazz provided by Sonny Rollins, cute competent jazz by Dave Brubeck, modern big band by Maynard Ferguson and commercial sweets by the Four Freshmen. Variety in any case.

The Sonny Rollins trio, which has been rightfully hailed by the clued-in hipsters as the real voice of today's jazz, gave the stand-out performance. Melodic poetry of blues-steeped cries, a rough but well-disciplined flow of quick-blow-derived phrases characterized the great tenorman. Sonny, unhampered by the mere accompaniment of drums and bass entered every melody on his set with confidence and beauty. His interplay with his horn, with himself, the saxophone playing a dual role now and then, comping and solo, a master at work, a jazz-man who is contributing in particular the varied moods and intricate texture of Grand Street deserves mention.

Dave Brubeck, "the Dreadful", was quite unbrubeckian on his first number in a stomping series of chords, massive, great structure of notes on St. Louis Blues. It was romping good clean fun, even "Crazy-fingers" Morello had fun.

The overall music by Brubeck was as always clean, crisp, clearly defined and interestingly developed through a series of fugues, bop-chords, narrow escapes, beautiful passages, nice clichés and pure Brubeck. Paul Desmond was standing like a sick bird by the Heinzman, attentive to general theme and habit, but melodious to a very high degree, especially on his Disney-number.

Two moments stood out especially; a fanciful and phantastic Bachian "Brandenburg Gate" in the best Brubeck manner, and a cheap dismal series of unmusical, un-rhythmic sound-effects by Joe Morello on "Sound of the Loop".

The big fresh band of ex-Toronto-boy Maynard Ferguson roared into a set of roading numbers. The sound was definitely Kenton, but the spirit unhampered by ambitious over-writing. An exciting half-hour roaring at full volume; not even "Tenderly" was spared the exciting and forceful treatment of loud brass in up-tempo passages.

Outstanding soloists having the same drive individually, stood out on a humorous plagiarism of Chopin; "My man Chopin", Jimmy Ford, Parker-like on alto, quick and inventive; an undercurrent slide Hampton on trombone; and of course jumpy Maynard Ferguson on an impossibly brilliant and high trumpet. The whole a sensual, beating greatness of sound.

The Four Freshmen were the "ring-members of the concert. On their singing they are a hip barber-shop group, wishing to entertain musically, and doing it successfully. It can be said that they are the jazz-fans' favorite commercial group. Laughs were provided by "Sweet Lorraine", nostalgia by "Day by Day", but whether they really should have been included on a jazz concert program because of laughs and nostalgia is questionable.

As musicians (trombone, bass, guitar and baby drums) they are much closer to jazz.

Concert tours certainly are not the best possible conditions for creative sounds. The musicians, herded together for a series of one-night stands are often tired and bored by a repetitive routine; bus, cats, pad, juice, blow and bus may have them empty and hollow, the chances for catching spontaneous creation is minimized, and the half hour provided for individual groups barely lets them warm up. Perhaps next year's jazz concert will have only two groups.

Trinity-St. Mike's Debate

Imposed discipline is perverted self-discipline. It may be a question of cake throwing or beating in at 11:00 at night.

This opinion was expressed by Patrick Wooten speaking to the government in the debate at St. Mike's last night. The resolution that the only real discipline is self-discipline was accepted almost unanimously.

The debate was unique in that for the first time there was a speaker from the Trinity College Literary Society and from St. Mike's Oratorical Society on each team.

Government speakers were Pat Wooten, Trinity, and Pat Bartlett, St. Mike's, and opposition speakers were Frank Roberts, Trinity, and Barbara Errington, St. Mike's.

Roberts, who was debating for the first time on the team, tried to prove from the Spartan empire and the French Revolution that things fall apart without self-discipline but Wooten managed to find two historical errors in his speech.

Roberts said that in France self-discipline has gone so far that now people sit down and think up their own discipline and start their own party.

Pat Bartlett pointed out that from the life of Socrates and St. Augustine we can see that self-discipline is the only discipline needed.

Barbara Errington in defining the word "real" as "existing objectively and not ideally" said that this self-discipline sounded lovely in theory but does not exist in real life.

Peter Dempsey, president of the Oratorical Society, spoke for the government in spite of Pat Wooten's claim that "we cannot tolerate this creeping socialism."

The debate was one of the last off-campus debates to be held by the Oratorical Society.

re: Playhouse

Recent rumors to the effect that the Playhouse of Toronto, which recently held the world Premiere of O'Casey's COCK-A-DOODLE DANDY, was about to fold are completely unfounded, producer Glen Frankfurter said in a letter to the Varsity.

"It is true that lack of box-office response to its own opening production has exhausted its working capital and has made it impossible to meet bills on their due dates," he said. "For this reason we are asking our creditors to give us 60 more days in which to meet our obligations and discharge our responsibilities."

To get revenue, they are planning to rent the theatre out to other organizations; are asking shareholders to subscribe additional capital; and are seeking out additional shareholders.

"We believe that a favourable picture will emerge by the middle of December and that we will be able to fulfill our obligations absolutely by that time."

It is to be hoped that the Playhouse will be successful in its endeavours and that another enterprising theatrical venture will not be forced out of existence because of what seems to be an all-too apparent example of public apathy.

I see a vision, drawn by a paw....

It seldom occurs to my mind which is itself somewhat of a rare occurrence and none too welcome even then, that it is being possible for my own Blossers to lose even a single match as the nefarious ones from those other places are so often claiming. It is in my heart that I am being surely of the 'succession which my boys achieve and I bank on this to the fullest extent which is somewhat typical. Which is why there is being inside of old Benny such a laughing when I hear that young Bruce Coldhim pronounces in his own and inimitable Southern drool that he feels his injuns are having a chance against the boychiks in Blue, inasmuch as old Bruce is absolutely right since his boys to not have a hope and Benny lets them have a chance only by the goodness of his heart which is itself as much an illusion as the chance which he, who am I, allows them.

On the wall in my study there is suddenly appearing a clear picture of what is to be in this battle of the Titans. I see there a vision, which is being drawn by a pudgy and putrescent paw, of twelve largish type Gullivers who wear blue shirts as they trot out upon the sun-bathed sward while against them there are mincing many insignificant-seeming and being Little-putters who wear only red faces and green thumbs which are after all only fitting inasmuch as they are being rather apoplexical after the game is over and they turn all chloroformly because of the many years they spend vegetating in the Intercollegiate cellar where there is nothing growing but little beets and pieces of a once proud McGill tradition. These huge and masterful Blue-shirts recognize the rightful places of their opposition and proceed to plant the Little-putters in little-pots deep in the field of Varsity Stadium where they are able to start being wild-flowers 'instead of wall-flowers and where they do not any longer pick daisies but become same and so prove that in spite of all they, the Redmen of McGill are really and truly belonging upon the griddle-iron of Intercollegiate football. The Bluesers are planting fifty-one of these little-potty plants come Saturday while a lucky six escape as they are being blown to the winds and so are able to cross the goal line and keep the injuns from being obliterated without so much as trace. It is very sad.

Five Regulars Missing For League Grid Final

Five regular members of the 1958 Varsity Blues will be watching from the sidelines tomorrow when McGill Redmen take to the Stadium turf for a last-ditch effort to stop Dalt White's high-flying crew.

Ian Knowles, Santo Martini, Lorry Stacey, Steve Chisholm and Sandy Bell are still on the injury list, and have probably played their last game of the season.

Knowles suffered a knee injury in the Queen's game here October 18, and has been out ever since. He had hoped to get back for the league finale, but the knee failed to respond to treatment.

WALLY BULCHAK

1954 Champion

Wally Bulchak

Plays Odd Role

Wally Bulchak, McGill Redmen's top point-getter this season, should feel right at home in the Intercollegiate football finale in Varsity Stadium tomorrow.

Hailing from Toronto, the speedy halfback toiled for the Blues when they last won the Intercollegiate title in 1954. Bulchak played with Varsity in 1955, and then departed for McGill.

Enrolling in Dentistry, he was ineligible under the transfer rule for play in 1956, but joined Larry Sullivan's Redmen in 1957.

This year, he has become McGill's highest scorer, picking up four touchdowns in five games. He sat out one tilt, with a leg injury.

One of his majors came in Varsity's 35-13 win over Redmen in Montreal October 4.

Yankees Top Blue Runners In Harrier

In a cross-country exhibition run Toronto went down to defeat at the hands of two more experienced teams from the United States.

The game Toronto squad lost to Buffalo State Teachers College by a 33-22 score, and were edged out 28-27 by Oswego Teachers College.

Individual Toronto results were: Don Bell, fourth; Dick Hamilton, seventh; Mike Berger, eighth; Hugh Gordon, thirteenth; Peter Bing, fourteenth; and Dennis Warwick, eighteenth.

Fred Foote, the harrier coach, has announced that the senior and intermediate teams will run in the finals at OAC on Nov. 8.

Senior team: Jan Roos, Donald Bell, Dick Hamilton, Mike Berger, Roy Price.

Intermediate team: Peter Bing, Hugh Gordon, Raymo Repo, Gary McEachern, Dennis Warwick.

Notes: The Toronto team must have appeared very competent to the customs officials. The border patrol suspected the boys were members of a "professional" squad, and temporarily barred the crossing.

Rinkies Meet Ryerson With Title At Stake

Almost lost in the welter of excitement over the Yates Cup is the fact that another football title is on the line today in Varsity Stadium.

The Shaw Trophy, emblematic of Intermediate football championship, goes to the winner of the game today between Ryerson Rams and Varsity Intermediates.

Actually, Varsity has to win to get a share of the title. Two points behind Ryerson, they must win to tie for top spot.

Still, as Rinkies are the defending champions, they could then claim the lion's share of the cup since no one topped them in league standings.

Should Varsity win, it would be their third title in the last four years, and would top off a great comeback.

All but counted out after they lost their first two games by healthy margins, they have since won three in a row to put them back into contention.

Ryerson handed them one of those defeats in the season opener five weeks ago when they whopped them to the tune of 18-0. The score is not too one-sided, but the play certainly was.

Baby Blues only gained 8 first downs in the game, and their defence was foxed time and again by the odd plays that Ryerson coach Ted Toogood has installed as his regular offence.

Win or lose, it has been a banner year for Ryerson. Since their entry into the league some years ago, they have never won many games, much less a title.

This year Toogood has finally found the club that he thinks can go all the way. A hard running backfield has been the chief reason for his club's big success this year.

Foremost among these is Hal Short. Baby Blues cannot afford to let Ryerson get as close as Western did five times last week and then count on holding the opposition off the score sheet. Short is poison on field goals on any distance up to 30 yards, and Baby Blues might find themselves on the short end of the scoreboard mainly because of his toe.

On the credit side, Rinkies have improved immensely over the club that stumbled through two opening losses to Ryerson and Western Colts.

The switch of Mike Muir from end to halfback has been a great improvement in the backfield, and since then Muir has scored four touchdowns in three games.

Another bright spot has been the play of Ev Rush at quarterback. Although he never hits for a high average on passes, he has been throwing at least one TD pass per game.

Coaches John Sopinka and Bill Stevenson deserve credit for the way in which they have pulled their team together and turned them into a cohesive unit, and the ideal way to reward them would be to present them with a championship.

Rugger Blues Whip Avro 16-0

Varsity Rugger Blues trounced Toronto Avro 16-0 for their fourth consecutive win in the Ontario Intermediate A rugger league. Blues have lost only one league game, their season opener.

The score against Avro was made up of two goals (converted tries) and two penalty goals.

Lock forward Bill Nelems and hooker Paul Chapman each scored a try in the second half. Front row prop Neville Nankivell converted both of them.

Blues had taken a 6-0 half-time lead on penalty goals by Nankivell and winger Warren Walker, who drop-kicked his goal from about 40 yards on a difficult angle.

Blues were in command throughout the contest, mainly through the work of their forward pack which, although playing a little too loosely, still managed to win a good share of set scrums, lineouts and loose rucks.

The wing three-quarter line did not fare as well. Blues' backs have only managed to get going once this season—against Barbarians, a game they won 31-6.

But in other games there has been a lack of cohesion in the centre positions and players have not been able to take the ball at full pace. The Varsity wingers are probably two of the fastest in Toronto, yet they hardly ever get the ball or the chance to use their speed in classical backline scoring movements.

John Ward, the scrum-half, has a good delivery from scrums and lineouts, and fly-half Jim Keating is an intelligent and experienced rugby player. But still the three-quarter line has not seemed to click.

Coach Dr. David Penman has promised some lineup changes. Players on Baby Blues will get their chance in a trial game tonight on the Back Campus, starting at 5.30 p.m.

Dr. Penman said he wants to experiment with players and positions in the intra-club contest.

Other notes: Skipper Roger Hurst, who suffered a leg injury in the Intercollegiate game against McGill, is recovering rapidly and may be back in the lineup this weekend.

The seniors travel to Guelph Saturday to play Ontario Agricultural College. The intermediates meet Toronto Ajax on the Back Campus Saturday and Irish Thirds at Eglinton Park Sunday.

Soccer Blues Host OAC-VC In Final Tilt

Both Varsity soccer teams close out their Intercollegiate League schedules with games against the OAC Aggie teams here tomorrow. Game times are both eleven o'clock with Blues on the Back Campus and Baby Blues on the Field.

In a previous tilt this season, Blues had to come from two goals behind in the last ten minutes of play to gain a tie. Aggies play a real blood-and-guts type of soccer, which always seems to upset Blues' close passing game.

All players are back in the pink of health after last Saturday's 5-0 blank of the Western team and went through a light practice Wednesday night, with the accent on nothing special. Blues' forwards are getting a fair amount of goals, while the defence is on the way to setting a record for a Varsity soccer team.

So far this season, in seven games the Varsity back wall has conceded two goals, both to the Guelph team, and registered six shut-outs. In the last ten years the least goals against that Blues allowed in one season was five in '55.

This Saturday's game will be the clincher for the Blackwood Trophy, the Senior Championship. A Blues' victory or a tie will give Varsity the silverware for the sixth consecutive year while an Aggie win gives the cup to Guelph.

Baby Blues will end the season with an anti-climax. They have only a very outside chance of taking the title after their loss to Ryerson last Wednesday.

A combination of a Varsity win and a Rams' loss is their only hope, but the chance of the Ryerson team losing to the UWO Intermediate team is somewhat less than slim.

Ryerson came up with a good game to defeat the gallant but out-gunned Baby Blues and seem assured of taking the Charles E. Oster trophy downtown for one year. If the Varsity Intermediates had not lost two games through using an ineligible player, they would have been home-free.

McGill's Enrollment Drops Blames Provincial Govt

MONTREAL (CUP) — McGill student president Roy Heenan has called his university's financial situation "grave," and has placed the blame on the provincial government.

In an open letter to the McGill student body Heenan called for a reduction of McGill's record fees as soon as financial relief comes for the university.

McGill's fees, he said, are about $250 higher than other Canadian universities. Recent fee increases have forced many students to give up university or seek part-time work.

Heenan noted in his letter that enrolment at McGill dropped this year for the first time since the '50's.

Professors' salaries are lower; students have to pay "exceptionally high" fees; the university anticipates a deficit — "In brief, the implications for McGill generally are grave."

The higher fees have meant that McGill cannot serve many of the Quebec community who are academically competent but financially limited.

Heenan blamed the financial crisis squarely on the provincial government.

"The difficulties of the universities in Quebec must be laid at the door of the provincial government,"

Higher education is not a political matter and should not be allowed to become one," he said.

Refusal to accept federal grants was called "political stubbornness" by the student president. He accused the provincial government of a "destructive attitude" towards federal grants.

He urged a petition be sent to the Legislative Assembly protesting against arbitrary grants now given by the provincial government. He recommended a system of statutory grants instead.

There were great possibilities of misuse of the present system of arbitrary grants — "those who are in favor with the government are liable to get much higher grants than those who are not."

"This is certainly not a system which lends itself to Academic Freedom."

Premier Duplessis was "embarrassed" by student action in the education field last year. Such action must be continued until a just solution is achieved for Quebec universities.

Pointing to the expected increase of $500,000 revenue from the fee increases, Heenan noted this represents "about one tenth" of the amount in federal grants now being held in trust by the National Conference of Canadian Universities.

There will be a special meeting of the Students' Society Tuesday to discuss the open letter from Heenan.

Sermons, Bullsessions Father Terry Returns For Busy Two Weeks

Conducted for its second year by an American Episcopal monk, the Trinity Mission is scheduled to start Monday.

GP is necessary say Meds, POTs

POT parliament last night cut across faculty loyalties to support Medical Society debaters and defeat the motion "Resolved that the family doctor will become obsolete" by an overwhelming 22-8 vote.

Roe (POT), leading off for the affirmative, said "doctors no longer devote themselves to their patients as they once did."

"The whole field of medicine is expanding at an alarming rate, and the GP just can't keep up with all the technical data," she added.

First speaker for the Noes, Dave Appert (II Pre-Meds) said "the doctor is the hub of all diagnosis and he prevents the patient being shuffled from specialist to specialist."

Appert cited the Ontario Hospital Act, effective this January, which demands that a patient see his family doctor before he can qualify for hospital care.

"The family doctor is the foundation of this whole system," Appert said.

Pat Ferguson (III POT), second speaker for the Ayes, questioned reasons for seeing a specialist.

"Why should a patient see a family doctor first, if he will be sent to a specialist in most cases anyway," she asked.

"In this age of increasing mechanization the family doctor will not become obsolete. He is obsolete," she said.

Second speaker for the opposition Les Ash (II Pre-Meds), said "the honourable members of the Faculty of Physical and Occupational Therapy should stick to their osteopathic manipulation and basket weaving."

Ash concluded his speech by saying, "as long as there are people, there will be sickness, and as long as there is sickness there will be a need for a family doctor."

...communion at hart house

A packed and hushed congregation yesterday heard the tinkles of a Sanctus bell, and chanted centuries-old Gregorian music as puffs of incense smoke rose against the backdrop of the large, star-paned window at the end of the Hart House Great Hall.

The occasion was a Roman Catholic Solemn High Mass, the second of this year's religious services in the house.

The Latin chant, which almost continually filled the hall, poured in white vestment, trimmed with golden bands performed the ancient ritual of the Catholic Church at the front of the hall as incense, silver candelabra and four candles flared in the air.

The sermon was given by Father J. M. Kelly, president of St. Michael's College, who, speaking in a formal, traditional style followed Catholic liturgy in saying the church is the home of God and the gift of heaven.

By HARVEY SHEPHERD
Varsity News Editor

About two-thirds of the Hall were gathered and filed slowly to the front to take communion which was celebrated by Rev. Joseph Dorsey with Rev. William Gibbons acting as deacon and Rev. Joseph Trevalto as subdeacon. All are of St. Michael's College.

One steeped in the Protestant tradition might have felt what seemed to be a comparative separation between the people of the congregation and the timeless mysteries in process at the front of the hall.

Even when you were chanting in unison, the music seemed not so much an act of worship as a ritualized context in which the act of worship might be expected to take place.

But the service which an uninitiated person could almost imagine taking place, not only at the time of Christ but even at the time of the Eleusinian mysteries, gave to religion a sense of adoration and formality and perhaps, if one seeks it, mysticism.

A sense which perhaps we are beginning to forget.

...a miniature pilgrimage

Chatting, reciting the rosary and singing litanies, 22 Catholic U of T students walked 24 miles Sunday seeking reparation for students' sins.

They formed a student pilgrimage to the Augustinian Shrine of Our Lady at King, 28 miles north of Toronto.

The pilgrimage was organized by the League of Christ the King, an international Roman Catholic group.

The pilgrim's day began with mass and a special blessing. Taking a bus to eliminate walking four miles through the city, they followed Jane St. up to King.

Chaplain of the expedition was Rev. John Madden.

Leaving at 9 a.m. the students arrived at 5 p.m. and went to Benediction.

The pilgrimage, which included nine girls, was an abbreviated version of the annual LOCK pilgrimage to the Shrine of the Jesuit martyrs at Midland, Ont.

Officials Here Barred Red From College Date

MONTREAL (UPI)—A Canadian government official has advised U.S. officials that restrictions on travel by Soviet officials to the U.S. will be maintained.

The official said that the U.S. government will not allow Soviet officials to travel to the U.S. for a date in the U.S. which would be held in the U.S.

An official of the External Affairs Department told reporters that the restrictions had been imposed on the embassy official.

We must do this, a long western diplomats in Moscow are restricted from travelling the Soviet Union," he said.

"We have found out that in the past imposition of restrictions on travel by Soviet officials in Canada leads to an easing up of travel restrictions on our officials in the Soviet Union," the unidentified official explained.

Krasnitsky officials in Ottawa said that Krasnitsky had applied for a passport 48 hours in advance, according to regulations, Canadian officials told the diplomat they had been withdrawn.

Krasnitsky explained to members of the Asian Studies group: "You can be assured there is nothing to do."

UofO Dean Waits THE VARSITY Laval Council Condemns

OTTAWA, (CUP) — University of Ottawa's Dean of Men, Rev. Leonard Ducharme, is playing for time as the uproar over his firing of the editorial board of La Rotonde grows daily louder, sources here say.

Saturday Father Ducharme answered the students' council request to lift the ban on Louis Cliche, Roger Roy and Pierre Trudeau by saying the council had given no "whereas clauses" with its motion.

Meanwhile support for La Rotonde has come from its companion English-language newspaper at U of O, The Fulcrum.

In its first comment on the affair The Fulcrum, which publishes alternatively with La Rotonde, has editorially described the Dean's firing of the three editors as "imprudent and unjustified".

The Fulcrum states: "The action taken by the administrative authorities, from a purely technical aspect, was lawful, for they possess restricting authority. But they were imprudent and unjustified since in overruling one authority they destroyed the essence of authority."

Ottawa student president Marcelle Prud'homme was blasted Friday by the McGill daily for his part in the dispute.

The third article of a series headed "The True La Rotonde Story", written by Daily Feature Writer Sidney Margles, said Prud'homme was taking advantage of the affair "to aid his personal gain."

Prud'homme has declared he is seeking nomination as Liberal candidate for the Montreal-Laurier riding, the article said. To run, he must live in Quebec one year, and thus will have to transfer to the University of Montreal.

The article said Prud'homme was "using" the Ottawa dispute to prove his leadership qualities.

Rumors on the Ottawa campus say the three editors are considering suing Public Relations Officer Bill Boss for $10,000 for defamation of character.

Boss has said the editors were "irresponsible people".

QUEBEC CITY (CUP) — An almost unanimous vote of the Laval University student council officially condemned the University Action League last week for meeting Premier Maurice Duplessis to discuss Quebec education problems.

The council recognized the right of anyone to meet the premier, but condemned the UAL for usurping the power of the council.

Only the General Association of Laval Students is empowered to act on behalf of Laval students, the motion said. The League had taken it upon itself to act for all university students in the province.

The motion also condemned any Laval students who had any part in the meeting with Duplessis.

Of the 23 council members, only one abstained from condemnation of the League. The executive of the council had censured the League last August when it was found League members were going to try to see the Premier.

Laval, acting through the Quebec Association of Universities, has been trying to see the Premier since January to discuss a special brief outlining problems of the province's universities.

The Premier has refused to recognize the students or to act on their brief.

Suggest Commonwealth Meeting

A suggestion for a Commonwealth Conference to study industrial problems highlighted the final luncheon of the U of T Round Table on Man and Industry.

The luncheon at the Park Plaza, Friday wound up a get-together of businessmen and social scientists that ranged from Scarborough to Don Mills in its five days of observation and discussion.

Bell Telephone Company Vice-President Dr. W. H. Cruickshank said most of the businessmen present would take their conference experiences back to their industries.

He said efforts were being made to hold a similar round table on a commonwealth level.

"Canada, with its various industrial developments, industrial communities and human assets, would provide a suitable study ground for other countries, and Canada could learn a lot from countries whose problems are much closer to simple survival than ours are," he said.

Dr. Cruickshank said he had encountered some pessimism in the sessions.

"The extension of our control over nature," he said, should be a good thing making for a richer fuller life. But there is concern that the machine age may be putting a premium on our independence."

"But interdependence does not necessarily destroy independence," he said.

A problem that would have to be faced increasingly now is the low skill content of many of our modern industry.

"But we are looking to automation to reduce the number of jobs that require no skill and no creative satisfaction," he said.

The second speaker, Prof. C. E. Hendry, director of the U of T School of Social Work and head of the Round Table task force of the "Accomplishments of the third session

The discussions had been in a series of at least he said, the fact of change, at present vast and un-directioned, and the fact that the machine age is creating problems of continuity and the fact of contact with its problems of change, it is essential to create the necessary ties and factors between man and industry.

"What we are looking for is not static but dynamic equilibrium between man and industry," he said.

We think of the Round Table not as a tradition but as a catalytic agent," Prof. Hendry said.

Gag Issue Runs Early To Brighten Weekend

An attempt to "brighten up the football weekend" fizzled out Saturday when editions of the McGill University student newspaper — The Daily — reporting firing of the staff of The Varsity failed to materialize on the U of T campus Saturday.

Running on the front page of the Daily was a story about the firing of the Varsity staff, which was intended to brighten up the football weekend.

The bogus story described a meeting between the Varsity staff and the U of T administration, which was supposed to be a discussion about the firing of the staff.

Another source, who is not a Varsity member, explained that "the time wasted on the paper was out of proportion to the time spent by Varsity staffers in studying."

Other alleged accusations against The Varsity included those who collected "poisonous" information and the "unworthy" comments of the Varsity staff, which was intended to brighten up the football weekend.

Caged, Hungry

Three Laval University students are going on a hunger strike and they don't know when they'll be free.

The Folies performers Jerry Spelling, Harvey Foxenstein and Dick Lee plan to refuse any entertainment except water until all remaining Folies tickets are sold.

They built a chicken cage this weekend and plan to set it up in the middle of the U of T Rotunda this morning. They will wear white sheets and read books on Yoga and Zen Buddhism during the voluntary confinement.

Only 250 tickets are left out of 1,500 available for the three-night Folies run. They cost $1.50 each.

We drew inspiration from Kafka's "The Hunger Artist," Levenstein said.

The three will keep blocks of tickets in their cage and sell them to interested students. Tickets will also be on sale in Hart House.

"We feel that by making a sacrifice of this sort we are expressing our faith in the show," Lee said.

The Folies will run Nov. 13-15 in the Hart House theatre.

if... 80 years later

If you can lose your head while no men doubt you, but merely think that its the thing to do; if you can talk to those about you, and leave them thinking they have talked to you:

If you can speak of books you know you've never read, and tell good tales of men you've never met; and make your intellect seem over-fed, with quips that others haven't heard of yet:

If you can win and make a point of winning, and then still talk of "playing for the game"; if you can sin, and justify your-sinning, by giving poor "experience" one more name:

If you can flatter well and make it seem an art, for lesser men to copy if they can; if you can beg when the time is ripe for begging, and hold your head as high as you began:

If you take what men have given their lives to, and adopt it as a product of yourself; and take the praises that are coming and then replace it back upon the shelf:

If you can mock the truth you finally meet, and twist it into ridicule and jest, and be amused at every honest challenge, and make damn sure you still emerge the best:

If you can make one heap of all your knowledge, and exit via one fast well-aimed line; and still give others the impression, you've merely skimmed the surface of your mind.

If you can prostitute your basic principles, to salvage what remains of all your pride; and learn to twist your good opinion, so it will follow on the current tide.

If you can fill the unforgiving minute with sixty seconds worth of masquerade; and keep the mask on even when alone, and never doubt or ever be afraid:

If you can live so all men know you, but none are really quite sure why; and have true faith in your pretensions, and still believe it when you die:

Then yours is the Earth, and all the shallowness that's in it;

And—which is worse—you'll think yourself a man; you fool.

death of a theatre

Early in October, a new theatre, the Playhouse, presenting the world premier of Sean O'Casey's "Cock-A-Doodle Dandy", opened with high hopes in Toronto, generally considered the cultural metropolis of Canada by all who do not know our fair city.

Within three weeks of the opening, the Playhouse was forced to close down because of the appalling lack of public response with which they were greeted.

Such interesting and varied fare as "The Summer of the Seventeenth Doll" and "The Threepenny Opera" have thus been denied Toronto audiences for years to come. But perhaps Toronto audiences don't really care.

Reaction to the new theatre's failure ranged from the merely apathetic to Tely Critic Nathan ("The Things Cohen Says") Cohen's I-told-you-so polemic against the faulty management of the Playhouse.

The only thing Cohen did not blast in his inimitable style was the opening production itself, which was a sorely needed lesson in how to present a play before an audience.

And it is because the production was on such a high level that the Playhouse's demise is so great a loss to us.

Those who claimed to be theatre lovers demanded an art theatre to balance the more commercial Crest and Royal Alexandra. The Playhouse was just that kind of theatre, and because of this, it suffered.

Suffered because the theatre lovers who talked the loudest showed by their support that it was nothing more than talk.

Yugoslavia — IV

For Marxist Students: Confusion

By TIM REID

Tim Reid, IV Trinity, was one of three U. of T. delegates at the World University Service's (W.U.S.) summer seminar in Yugoslavia. Here is the fourth of a series of articles written by the delegates on what they saw and what they learned there.

Yugoslav students like to talk. Above all, they like to talk to strangers. If they have enough money they like to drink and dance all night. If they are on holiday they love to swim in their Adriatic and soak up the sun.

The language barrier is not great since many of them speak excellent English and French.

Communist students are just as friendly as non-Communist students. It doesn't make much difference really—just depends what you want to talk about.

Materially, Yugoslav students are a very privileged lot. For example, in Zagreb we stayed at the most modern student residence I have seen anywhere. This costs a Yugoslav student $2.30 a month.

Moreover, there are special restaurants where the food is ample and good. This costs a student $11 a month. Fees of course don't exist by definition. Thus, total cost of fees, room and meals is $13.30 a month.

Parents receive $11 a month for each child to finance his or her education. Almost every student picks up a scholarship of some sort varying from $7 to $25 a month depending on the student's financial need. In short, every young person is able to go to university or technical school if he or she qualifies academically. It is not like Hungary where if your father was a capitalist you simply didn't bother trying to get into university.

Students are so well looked after under socialism that the vast majority of them do not bother getting summer jobs. Instead they go to student resorts along the Adriatic Coasts. A good student can live off the state until he is 27.

The quality of education, it is claimed, is better in Yugoslavia than in North America. Certainly the standard in the technical fields is exceptionally good. Further, in research it is not necessary to come up with a Marxist analysis.

One reason for this high standard is simply that the teaching profession is well paid in terms of alternate professions. It is also good in absolute terms, for in a comparison of salaries of Canadian and Yugoslav professors to their respective costs of living, the Yugoslavs come out on top.

University examinations follow the German pattern of oral examinations.

A Yugoslav friend of mine, whom we shall call Petar, and who is not a Communist, knows that when he is examined for his degree he must know the Marxist interpretation of history, Marxian economics, and the current party line on politics.

However, during his examination Petar is free to say, "That was the Marxist interpretation but here is what I really think."

From this point on many doors are automatically closed to him. He has been branded.

The University Library in Zagreb has a complete collection of the writings of the capitalist (Bourgeois) philosophers, historians, and economists. Keynes, for example, is translated into Serbo-Croat. Further, the essential secondary sources are also listed under the author index.

The Library did not have "The New Class" by Djilas.

These are the facts paraded coldly and simply. I shall now explain why I believe the Yugoslav Communist system of education, with regard to the humanities, is nothing but a memory course in Marxist concepts.

New professors are elected by the old. Only Marxist materialists are elected. This is an admitted fact. My Yugoslav friend Petar would not under and circumstances be elected. He pays dearly for his freedom of expression.

If new professors are Marxists then they logically teach Marxist economic determinism and so forth. A student like Petar would not have much of a chance to learn anything except Marxist philosophy from his professors.

I remember asking another student if she ever questioned Marxian concepts in tutorial groups. She replied, "Certainly... if we (students) can't understand what Marx was driving at, say, in his analysis of the internal contradictions in capitalism, we get the professor to explain it again."

Monologue replaces dialogue. Thus it appears that in education, as in politics, the arrows point down.

Certainly a student like Petar is free to study other doctrines and theories on his own. The books are available but with whom can he discuss these tabooed ideas? Education above all is heated discussion.

Petar's professors talk only of Marx or give Marxian interpretations to bourgeois authors. Petar, the non-Marxist student is isolated unto himself. Student-professor personal contact becomes futile as do student discussion groups. No one will give any other organized interpretation.

Is this teaching students to think or does it make them dull dogmatists or confused and frustrated undisciplined deviationists?

What I am saying here applies only to the humanities and not to music, art, engineering, physics or related subjects. In these fields freedom is complete for the forms of thought are not dictated from above.

My Yugoslav friend Petar has freedom of thought in the sense that he is free to think what he wants, but there is no disciplined training outside of Marxist dialectics. Is this education or is it indoctrination pure and simple?

We met some very confused young men in Yugoslavia...

The Quarterly Defended

Dear Sir:

I would like to answer Dr. Anchevich's letter which appeared in The Varsity, for it is surprising to say the least (quote, unquote).

It is dismaying to see that people on this campus should be so narrow-minded as to regard anything that is Russian as bad and inferior. The very word "Russian" itself seems to be an anchorage point for all out prejudices, and if anyone dares to publish a look at their achievements he is said to be a propagandist. And the people who engage in such activity are, by our "logic", Communists. (As no doubt I will be rated, although through my personal experience I cannot support their practices).

But how unbiased are the people who make the charge? Since 1946 people on this continent have been so swamped with unfavorable statements about the U.S.S.R. that it seems impossible to us that anything good can be said about that country. The terminology of the letter gives the impression that the writer, himself has become so engulfed by our own propaganda machine that he is no longer able to accept any report on Russia. (Russia is regarded as inferior. Or should I say, was regarded? For we are not so sure about it any more. Our ethnocentrism received a severe blow; it was not the Occident, but that inferior country in the East which had the first man-made satellite.

All of a sudden it was conceived that our school system might not be the best after all, as we had so naively believed. Our isolation policy can never be adopted again. The American continent is part of the world, and has to compete.

Dr. Anchevich writes that he looks in vain (maybe it was a misprint and should read "in pain") to find any "shortcomings, soul-searching problems, failures or similar difficulties". Do we have to be told constantly about things which as a result of our "education" are to be taken to granted? Why do people want to know so much about a people's agony rather than its achievements? Do we relish that agony?

Although I must plead ignorance to the publication in question, I think that the rapid rise of Russian economic standards (unachieved by any other nation in the history of the world, not even the U.S.) and her scientific achievements are support enough for a positive report on that country. Granted that her achievements have been obtained by a flood of innocent blood, which is still flowing; how much blood was shed on this continent before the "superior race" could inhabit it? Are we to sit in a glass house and cast the first stone?

If Dr. Anchevich really wants to know about "soul-searching problems or similar difficulties", he does not have to go as far as Russia; there are plenty here. Because, despite our pride I think everybody would honestly admit that our society is not what it could be. In the letter the statement is made that the only state-creed in Russia is Marxist-Leninist philosophy. Are we so very different? Have you tried to speak out against the iron grip of our society's philosophy — money? How popular would you be, Dr. Anchevich? The appalling story of the Nobel Prize winner Boris Pasternak was chosen as an illustration. May I say it was ill-chosen? What happened to Ezra Pound?

It is hard to imagine that the cold war should ever come to an end under normal conditions without war. But somehow I feel it is still harder to imagine that our prejudices will ever... Clifford Leeb, (ii) Viet.

200 For Kombrink

What makes the students of this university jam the Great Hall of Hart House one week and trickle in the next week? This is the question that the Music Committee is asking after little over two hundred people speckled the hall for the two hundred and ninth Sunday Evening Concert which featured prima donna Ilona Kombrink.

The leading diva of the Toronto Opera Festival is not used to half-empty houses but is quite used to very warm receptions as the one she received last night. The enraptured audience got two loving encores with very little difficulty; but her full-voiced dramatic cry cried for a blanket of people to warm it unto even greater perfection.

Her programme, chosen for the intelligent audience for which Hart House is reputed began with Francesco Santoliquido's Poesie Persiane. The late romantic mood of these songs was expertly conveyed by Mme. Kombrink's delicate, effortless singing. Her middle range was particularly secure, her high notes loud, clear and thrilling, despite the slight vibrato.

Her real artistry came with the meat of the programme, Wagner and Puccini. The five numbers of Wagner's Wesendonck Lieder were the vehicle for conveying the brilliance of the entire gamut of her vocal art. The intense musical and dramatic requirements of this work did not tax her voice.

Mme. Kombrink was in her element in Mimi's Addio from Bohème and 'Sola Perduta Abbandonata' from Manon Lescaut. Here, the wealth of her experience on the operatic stage was translated into a supremely satisfying concert rendition; a mature polished singing actress throughout.

Samuel Barber's nostalgic setting of three James Joyce poems closed the programme. In these songs she displayed the more jovial side of her voice, with Mario Bernadi accompanying expertly throughout.

Elmo Ciprietti

The Superb English Guitarist

Sometimes the concert-goer is lucky enough to hear a rare musical performance which is both memorable and delightful at the same time. John Bream, the 25-year-old English lutenist and zitherist gave such a performance at the Eaton Auditorium last Thursday evening.

His programme was divided into two parts, the first being devoted to lute music of the Elizabethan period. Before beginning to play he explained that his instrument was less than a year old being a copy of a 16th century Italian lute. The lute has twelve strings, unlike the guitar which has only six, thus making possible a great range of harmonic effects.

Among the five Elizabethan composers whose works were represented Mr. Bream evidently favored John Dowland, for he played six of Dowland's songs. In his brief introduction to the final group Mr. Bream observed that although Dowland had written a number of gay songs, he was often afflicted with melancholy and was always "under a cloud of melancholy". In spite of Lachrimae Pavan's lutesweet refrain Elizabethan probably wept at the front corners and the Dowland, enjoyed their melancholy.

There are those who think that the lute like the harpsichord is a somewhat limited scope but John Bream's playing gave such a variety of sounds that the possibilities of the instrument seemed infinite. In Carmen's Whistle, by Robert Johnson, Mr. Bream handled his machine with a typical gentleness. By contrast, in Lantasia, again by Dowland, he shifted from deep resonant tones to notes which were intentionally almost brittle in quality. It seemed as if even to get carried a tune of its own, so intricate was the fusion of melodic line. Mr. Bream is a master of the lute with a sensitiveness and a sympathy for his instrument which is rarely found.

The second half of his programme was devoted to work written for the guitar mainly by Spanish and South American composers among them S. Gnanados, Albeniz and the Brazilian composer, Villa Lobos. He also included one work by S. Bach, the Prelude and Fugue in A Minor.

Mr. Bream managed to cover nearly all the traps and give the guitar a peculiarly contrary statement, which often makes a combination of technique and balance with a sympathetic interpretation extremely difficult. Among the information, John Bream, who was a pupil of Segovia, came very close to the master's perfection. In the Prelude and Fugue, each note ended with a bell-like clarity. Mr. Bream seems to have captured the secret of Segovia's sound, a singular tonal quality, a depth and beauty of sound which is never lost for an instant, and a virtuosity which is almost unbelievable.

Cowardly Nude

Noel Coward's latest comedy, "Nude with a Violin," a lucid parody on modern art, will have its Canadian Premiere at the off-of-the-way York Community Theatre, Friday Nov. 14 to 22 (no performances Nov. 17 and 18.) Curtain is at 8:30 p.m.

The cast will be headed by Charles Isaacs, Karol McDougall, Lionel Levy, Elizabeth Chambers and Shiela Giles. Donald H. Ford will direct and design the settings.

Incidentally, the production unit is calling for an original painting to illustrate the title for use on stage during the run of the play. In addition, they hope to hold an exhibition of canvasses on the subject at the theatre. Campus artists are invited to submit paintings. For details, telephone Michael Tabbitt (EM. 8-0911 at 7:00 p.m.) Canvasses should arrive at the theatre (49 La Plante Ave.) by Nov. 12.

Ryerson Wins Title Rinkies Defeated 8-7

By DAVE GRINER
Varsity Staff Reporter

Ryerson Rams ended the Baby Blues win streak by defeating them 8-7 at Varsity Stadium on Friday, thus winning the Shaw Trophy and the Intermediate football championship.

In a loose but interesting game, Ryerson dominated play in the second half and although they fumbled away three scoring opportunities, they held Varsity off the scoresheet until the last second in the game.

Ryerson mounted the first threat of the game late in the first quarter when they marched 61 yards to the Varsity 11-yard line, but Rinkies held on three downs and took over the ball.

Varsity struck right back with their most potent threat of the game. Quarterback Ev Rush hit Mike Muir with a pass good for 20 yards, Muir hit the ends for 15 and 15 yards, Rush to Pete Robertson netted another 15 and then Muir burst 25 yards right up the middle to the Ryerson five-yard line only to fumble the ball when he was tackled.

Ryerson threatened as Tom Olynik went 35 yards on a pass from Ron Potter, but Peter Warren intercepted a pass to kill the opportunity.

The seesawing continued as Rush completed three straight passes with the minute flag up, but Muir fumbled to snuff out the threat.

Ryerson opened the second half with a bang. A pass completion off an end-around play gave Ryerson a first down on the Varsity 28, and five plays later Dave Bleue drove over from the one for the score. Hal Short converted to make the score 7-0.

Varsity started to march, chiefly on the ball-toting of Al Connolly, but Rush was smeared for a 17-yard loss on a pass attempt and Varsity had to kick.

Now it was Ryerson's turn and Bleue intercepted a Rush aerial to give Ryerson first down at mid-field. Potter passed to Ron Villani who lateraled to Short and the total gain was 51 yards to the Varsity 10.

Warren again snuffed out the fire when he picked up an errant lateral.

Rinkies could not move the ball and were forced to kick. Potter, Jim Hilsinger, and Short ripped off successive fifteen yard gains to put Ryerson on Baby Blues' three, but the line held.

Bleue wrapped up the game with four minutes left when he kicked a single from the Varsity 39 to up his team's lead to 8-0.

Baby Blues did not give up and Rush moved them from the 25 to the Ryerson 20 with his passing and then hit Connolly on the goal-line for the TD. John Reimer converted, 8-7.

Ryerson were full value for the win despite the closeness of the score. Only a stubborn Varsity defence, highlighted by the play of Bob Lackey and Tom Watt, held Rams to their one touchdown.

Connolly was a great source of inspiration for Baby Blues at all times, and Muir ran and caught well, even though he did fumble away two solid-gold scoring opportunities.

For the jubilant Ryerson squad, who won their first championship since their entry into the league, coach Ted Toogood singled out Art

Ward as the top defensive ball player.

As in the first game of the year, the hard running Ram backfield of Hilsinger, Bleue and Short gained almost 200 yards rushing to lead the Ryerson attack.

BENNY

One-eyed Benny, The Varsity's mysterious prognosticator, left the campus late yesterday en route to his winter habitat deep in Florida's bayou, and you should have seen his chest?

Commenting after Saturday's Intercollegiate finale, Benny pointed out that his total predictions for the season had only overestimated Blues' scoring punch by two points, and had showed the opposing teams one less than they had gained.

Benny left us this list before his departure:

Soccer Blues Downed Share Championship

By NORM SHEPHERD
Varsity Staff Reporter

The Varsity defence buckled under a four goal blitz in the second half of their soccer game against OAC Aggies on the back campus on Saturday.

The result was the first loss in five years for the perennially champion Blues.

With a two goal lead in the first half, the Varsity team were caught resting on their laurels by a determined Guelph team, which deserved the 4-3 victory they scored on merit of their second half performance against an inept Varsity eleven.

The Varsity defeat results in the two teams tying for the Blackwood Trophy, but the Blues have a superior goal average and should retain the silverware.

The Blues started off in great style, sweeping all opposition before them, and incessantly attacking the Guelph goal. Bruno Bertolin opened the scoring with a 25-yard shot after good leading up work by Brian McNeiz. McNeiz again crossed the ball for the second goal scored by Stew Bell.

Several scoring opportunities were squandered by the Varsity forwards during the remainder of the first half, but at the time this did not seem too distressing.

In the second half, control of the game swung over to the enthusiastic Guelph crew, who converted their superiority into goals. They tied the score at 2-2, but Varsity retaliated when Roger Peretz scored on a beautiful breakaway.

With a 3-2 lead, the Aggies continued their onslaught and again opened when the Varsity defence had a slight numerical standing.

To crown the Varsity misfortune, Guelph scored the winner in the last minute, when the determined Guelph forward, kick. The Aggie's captain in a determined move scored a goal with a goal post and suffered a broken leg.

Varsity will want to forget this game, especially the defence who gave a lackadaisical display in the second half. Even the forwards showed a lack of fight towards the victors of the game.

The other game saw Varsity Baby Blues continue their unbeaten string with a 4-1 victory over the Guelph seconds.

Stan Fraser, Bev Walker, Chris Carr and Lloyd MacKenzie scored for Varsity goals.

INJURIES

Saturday's victory celebrations carried a sad note. In Toronto General Hospital with serious injuries are McGill's Wally Bulchak and Varsity's Dick Risk.

Al Braekvelt, Bill Holmes, and John McKenzie, all of McGill, also entered hospital for observation, but were released.

Bulchak suffered severe head injuries and remains in emergency ward.

Risks' shoulder was operated on Saturday night. He expects to leave hospital within a few days, but his shoulder will remain in splints up to four weeks. Speaking to a Varsity reporter, Dick was cheerful although he said the shoulder was painful.

Mike Coke of Trinity suffered a badly broken leg in the game on Friday. His conditions have been described as satisfactory.

Gaels Tie For Third Edge Western 14-12

KINGSTON, Nov. 8 — Queen's Golden Gaels finished the season on a winning note by defeating the hapless Western Mustangs 14-12 here today.

Jackie Thompson hoofed Queen's into the lead in the first quarter with an 87-yard boot.

Mustangs took the lead in the second frame on a touchdown by Doug McKenzie. The convert attempt was blocked.

Roger Stewart scored the second Western major early in the third quarter. The Gaels fought back to within striking distance on Cal Connor's touchdown. Connor plunged over on a quarterback sneak to culminate the Queen's downfield march. Both converts were blocked.

Mike Wicklum scored the winning Gael touchdown in the fourth quarter, Thompson completing the convert.

The Queen's victory leaves Gaels in a two way tie for third place with McGill, although the Gaels enjoy a better for and against point average.

Neither team had any hope for forcing a playoff with Varsity. However, the loss by Western could have enabled McGill to force a playoff if, and only if, they had defeated Toronto.

The Queen's victory comes as a bit of a surprise. In their previous meeting Western walloped Queen's 46-16.

Best Team Ever? Difficult To Deny

By DAVE GRINER
Varsity Staff Reporter

The greatest ever? That is the question that is on the lips of every Intercollegiate football fan now, as they survey the wreckage that the 1958 edition of the Varsity Blues left in their wake as they rumbled through the league unbeaten this year.

No doubt many will say that the league was much weaker this year than it has ever been. It was the weakened condition of the other teams that made it possible for Varsity to pile up such scores as 44-0 over Queens, 46-0 over Western, and 50-7 on McGill.

But stop for a moment and think back to the beginning of the season. Western was being hailed as a sure bet for a second championship in a row. McGill were building a contender around the passing of Dick Carr and Queen's had a young "hustling" club that might give somebody trouble.

Toronto — well they had Tim Reid back, and Curt Russell at centre. Veteran (Gene) Chorostecki was still around to bolster the defence. No one dared prophesy that Toronto was to sweep through the league to their 20th Yates Cup like a fire through a house of matches.

They did, and in the process set scoring marks that will probably never be topped in the future. Two hundred and seventy-one points in league games, an average of 39. This was unbelievable in competition where teams have rarely scored over 100 points in a year.

They humiliated the proud Western Mustangs in London with a 46-0 pasting that left the Mustangs so battered physically that they were no match for the admittedly weak Queen's team the following week.

All Blues victories followed roughly the same pattern. Get an early lead, watch it dwindle to practically nothing, and then stomp all over the opposition with a three or four touchdown burst. Another pattern that came to light was a tendency—with one exception—to beat the opposition by double the margin in the second game that you beat them by in the first.

It took a great team, an all-time great team, to hang that terrible defeat on Western when normally even a weak team would be expected to rally and grab a play-off spot from out of the blue.

Why didn't Western come back? It's simple. Varsity were so good that only a great team could have defied them, and Mustangs were only good.

Blues had everything. Depth, speed, passing, that toughness on defence that is the hallmark of great clubs, and above all spirit.

They were not a team that needed a Knute Rockne to inspire them to heights in the second half. They knew their own ability and set their standards high. A bad first half invariably meant an unpleasant 30 minutes for their opponents in the second half.

Their coaches — they worked long and patiently to iron out the kinks and put the best team on the field. It is to their credit that there were no stars on the team, among the players themselves at least.

The 1958 Blues — can you prove they're not the greatest?

McGill Clobbered In Rousing Finale

By JOHN BROOKS
Varsity Sports Editor

As fine a legion of warriors as ever carried the Royal Blue and White banner into battle destroyed the last vestige of enemy opposition early Saturday afternoon and raced virtually unchallenged to the pinnacle of Intercollegiate football stardom and possession of the venerable Yates Cup.

Battering relentlessly at McGill's stubborn Redmen, Varsity Blues swept away from a 13-7 half-time lead and powered their way to 35 unanswered points in the second half, becoming only the third team in Intercollegiate history to stop within the charmed 50-point circle.

It was a football game for 30 minutes, at which point Coach Dalt White pointed out one of the few errors his team had committed all season, and Blues promptly turned their coach's words into a searing epiphany on the grave of once-proud, now shaken, McGill football tradition.

In the dressing room at the intermission, Dalt explained that McGill quarterback Dick Carr had been given too much time to throw his first-half aerials — he completed 11 out of 16 — and instructed Blues to ignore McGill's "running" attack and chase Carr into the ground. They did, and McGill died.

In the final half, Carr completed only five out of 17, and found himself face to face with a hard-charging Varsity defensive line every time he turned around. McGill's only touchdown had come from a series of short passes during an 83-yard march late in the first half. It was their only threat.

Varsity, on the other hand, were perfection personified. Blues completed 11 out of 23 passes for 200 yards, and ran for 366 more on the ground in 51 carries. That's an average of 7.3 per carry, trifle in any man's league.

Once again, it was Tiger Tim and Pulverzin Pete who did the lion's share, with quarterback Brian Aston and halfback Walt Adams both giving sparkling favours to Varsity football.

REID—scored three touchdowns and a single, raised his year's total to 68 points, his Toronto career total to 101, and averaged 7.5 yards per carry.

JOYCE—counted two majors to earn second place behind Reid in final individual scoring statistics, and powered his way to 139 yards in 22 carries and a 7.2 average.

ADAMS — converted all but one of Varsity's six mutations to finish third in individual scoring and run like a veteran, piling up 55 yards in seven tries for the top running average of the afternoon.

ASTON—played his best game of the season, called plays to perfection, hurtled his finest pass with a 47-yard completion to Gene Chorostecki in the driving minutes, and carried six times for 41 yards, including a 17-yard jaunt through the entire McGill team for his third touchdown of the year.

Those were the outstanding backfielders. But it was a real team effort — as it has been all season — that brought Blues their first crown since 1954.

...GREAT YEAR

Death Shall Have No Dominion

At 10.45 a.m. today students, faculty and members of the public cluster around Soldiers' Tower of Hart House, built to commemorate war dead, and as brown leaves, the remnants of a dying year, flutter about their feet, they reflect upon the dead, a dying era and the labor pains of a new and nuclear age.

Two lines of a hymn are played by a band and the congregation sings a prayer to God—"Our shelter from the stormy blast and our eternal home."

That the opening sentences are pronounced by a man very new to his big job as U of T president is not inappropriate to the theme of death nor to the theme of an eternal shelter and home.

No more inappropriate is it that accompanying the hymn is a football band.

Not any less appropriate is it that the congregation then prays that they be led not into temptation and that they may be delivered from evil.

Because after they pray that the war dead may be remembered, they then pray for consecration.

And after the last post is blown and the congregation stands in hushed silence for two minutes, reveille is heard.

And the people sing that God may save the Queen.

Many will be there who remember people they have lost. But they must still go on living and it is good that they should.

It's been said quite a bit before. "To you from failing hands we throw the torch."

Many will be there who don't remember very much about war dead. But it doesn't make much difference.

Everybody knows a little bit about dying. The young man who's just lost a relative far away from any battlefield knows about it and so does the little girl who watches the sawdust fall out of her favorite doll.

And the message always remains the same. That's probably why it's been said so many times before.

The message has been said in many poems written in many foxholes. And many that weren't written in foxholes. And they say it a lot around Easter.

And they said it quite a bit before Easter was ever dreamed of, let alone Remembrance Day. And the trees say it, dropping their leaves brown and withered to the autumn ground, only to push out new ones around Easter Sunday.

The message is expressed in spring flowers and new university presidents and new parliaments and new football champions.

Because all these things grow from the old ground of that which has been and is no more.

The men who died overseas are some of the best ground there can be.

And maybe, just maybe, that's the kind of ground that can produce a growth which will shelter all the little saplings such as universities and football teams and a million and one individual hopes and dreams.

A new peace.

Classes will be cancelled from 10 a.m. to 12 noon today for the annual service of remembrance and consecration.

The service, at the Soldiers' Tower of Hart House, will begin at 10:45 a.m. and will be preceded and followed by a carillon recital beginning at 10:10 a.m.

The service will begin with the hymn "O God Our Help in Ages Past", will include the customary two minutes' silence at 11 a.m. and laying of wreaths and will conclude with a benediction.

Canadian-US Ties Undergo Scrutiny

U of T delegates Howie Rubinoff (IV Meds) and Steve Clarkson (IV Trill.) leave for Montreal today for the McGill Conference on World Affairs beginning tomorrow.

Conference delegates will discuss Canada's relations with the United States from Nov. 12 to 15.

MCWA officials announced yesterday an additional panel has been arranged for Nov. 14 to discuss "The Position of French Canada in North America".

The new panel will examine the role French Canada plays in the life of North America, the effect her culture has or has not had on English Canadians and Americans and what its role is likely to be in the future.

Professor Mason Wade, director of Canadian Studies at the University of Rochester, will chair the panel. Prof. Wade was awarded a Guggenheim Fellowship in Canadian History in 1943, and received grants from the Rockefeller and Carnegie Foundations. He has written several books on Canadian history, including "The French Canadians (1760 - 1945)" and "French-Canadian Outlook".

Other members of the panel will be Hugh McLennan, Pierre Tisseyre and Robert Choquette.

Mr. McLennan has written several books and is an Associate Professor of English at McGill. He received the Governor-General's Gold Medal while an undergraduate at Dalhousie University, the Governor-General's award for fiction in 1945 and 1948, and for non-fiction in 1949 and 1954.

The author of "55 Heures de Guerre", Pierre Tisseyre is a Paris-born publisher and the founder of the "prix du cercle du livre de France" for French-Canadian literature. He is also the president of the French Publishers Association of Canada.

Robert Choquette's works include "A Travers les Vents" and "Les Velders". He has received the "Prix de l'Académie Française" and the Governor-General's Willingdon prize.

Other events on the four-day conference agenda include an opening address Wednesday by Professor Edgar McInnis, Canadian Institute of International Affairs president, a panel discussion Thursday and reports of round table discussion chairmen Saturday.

The discussion Thursday will be chaired by Professor J. R. Mallory, McGill political science professor, and Raymond Daniell, Gilbert Jackson, Major-General W. H. S. Macklin and Prof. Mason Wade will be panelists.

China Expanding Rapidly Says Professor After Tour

A University of Toronto geophysics professor has returned from a tour of Communist China with reports of fantastic development and national expansion.

Writing in the American magazine The Saturday Review, Dr. J. Tuzo Wilson reported the Chinese race is "stirred to its depths".

"Its passive religions have been suppressed in favor of vigorous activism. The whole country is being transformed at a fantastic rate," he wrote.

Dr. Wilson, president of the International Union of Geodesy and Geophysics, visited China this summer after an International Geophysical Year assembly in Moscow.

He was particularly excited by the city of Lanchow, capital of Kansu Province. Calling it a "wild and frenziedly growing outpost," Dr. Wilson said the city was becoming the economic as well as the geographic centre of a westward-expanding nation.

He described how modern thoroughfares and ten-lane boulevards are slicing through the mud walls of the old city.

Dr. Wilson, one of the world's leading authorities on the structure of the earth, also told how he found 20 or 30 recent world scientific journals in the new geophysical Observatory near Lanchow.

Another Trinity?

UC Students To Decide The Great Gown Battle

University College is trying to keep up with their Jones—Trinity College.

A motion will be placed before the University College Literary and Athletic Society today that all UC students wear academic gowns for lectures.

The open meeting begins at 4 p.m. in the Junior Common Room. The subject has been discussed by the Lit executive, and is favored by the majority.

"We feel it will put UC on an intellectual par with Trinity College", treasurer Fred Zeamons said last night.

The opinions of students questioned range from mute disbelief that such a proposal should even be considered, to a passionate enthusiasm for it.

Several years ago, the now defunct Women's Athletic Society debated whether UC women should wear red academic gowns. The idea was dropped because of lack of enthusiasm in the college.

UC men in residence now wear gowns to dinner.

Among those in favor of gowns are Tony Charlton, (IV UC), and Mike Sherman, (III UC).

"There are so many students at UC, if they wore academic gowns, you would get to know them over a period of time", Charlton said. "UC is a good college in which the students shouldn't even question wearing gowns."

Sherman said, "I am passionately in favor of it. This would add something to life at UC. I would even wear my gown to sleep."

"Remember the fad for Bermuda shorts a couple of summers ago? I predict everyone will wear gowns, instead of grey flannels," he said.

Dr. F. C. A. Jeanneret, principal of UC, has no fixed opinion on gowns. "I stopped wearing mine years ago," he said.

Dean Ian MacDonald, dean of UC men, said he thinks the proposal is fine. "It will be controversial, and therefore fun," he said. "How they will go about enforcing it, if it does go through, I don't know."

Dave Helwig, and Ken Wyman (both III UC) are opposed to wearing gowns. Wyman feels introduction of gowns would lead to conformity in the college.

Mrs. M. Q. Innes, UC dean of women, feels gowns would make the college dignified and distinguished.

Trinity students wear gowns to meals and lectures.

A Trinity student said, "UC men wearing gowns" Hail! Gowns shouldn't be used for such mundane purposes."

Several UC women want to know what good clothes are if they are going to hide them. A male student said he came to UC to avoid wearing a gown.

One student in favor of the motion said "It will create the necessary symbol of intellectual ability that this college needs."

That's funny, are you sure this is the Wallberg Building basement?

Under The Campus Green A Dark, Dangerous World

By SUSIE BRESLIN
Varsity Staff Reporter

A great deal is said these days about traffic jams. City-planners say our streets are being slowly strangled; aviation authorities warn the skies are fast becoming overloaded with planes.

Amid the furor, little attention is paid to another city traffic problem. While man reaches out to the skies and seeks to conquer space, pneumatic drills bore deeper and deeper into the already crowded earth.

Most cities now have detailed maps tracing every inch of the electrical wiring, plumbing and subway tubes which riddle the land beneath the teeming streets and crowded skies. But maintenance men frequently discover unrecorded pipes and wires, lovingly laid by another generation and long since disconnected and forgotten.

Under New York's Times Square and London's Camden Town there are eleven separate levels of subways, tubes and tunnels. A Paris Metro map at first looks like a surface detail, so complex are the subway lines reaching and twisting into every corner of the city.

One of Paris' tourist attractions is a brief but expensive boat ride through the city's most exclusive sewers.

McGill University students are treading the city's streets with care these days. A few weeks ago two McGill students were applauded as heroes when their quick action directed cars away from a section of pavement in front of the campus which suddenly collapsed due to a broken water main.

U of T students have little to fear from collapsing pavements. This campus has its tunnels, too, but the men who maintain them don't have to worry about overcrowded underground space. Their main worry is the students themselves.

Assistant superintendent Alec Russell recalls with horror the day last year when a group of students decided to investigate rumors they could escape the rain by commuting to classes through tunnels.

"We found them in time, but they could have killed themselves", Mr. Russell says. Some of the university's tunnels are filled with poisonous gas, others so dark the uninitiated could easily lose their way.

"If someone got lost in there, we might find them next year, and we might not," Mr. Russell says. But the university takes every precaution that this won't happen.

Entrances to tunnels in every building are covered with heavy steel doors kept carefully double-locked. University police keep a careful eye out for students climbing down the manholes.

Occasionally, university maintenance men have to go down into the tunnels to check on their condition or make repairs.

If a manhole on Philosopher's Walk is opened and guarded by a heavy steel fence, that means a maintenance man is down in the tunnels somewhere. But he may be down by Hart House. The holes are opened to make sure the men have ventilation.

And if men are down in the tunnels, a careful check is kept of their location and the time they expect to spend under ground.

"If they don't come back within a reasonable time, we send someone down to check up on them", Mr. Russell says.

The biggest tunnel in the university is probably one between the new steam plant and the Physics building, Mr. Russell says. St. George St. was blocked when contractors had to rip it up a few years ago to build the tunnel.

But university authorities don't know of any spare tunnels lying around. Even the ones built back in the days when the university was in its infancy are still in use.

Tunnels figured in one of U of T's biggest political pranks last year. At University College election time, the word went round to come see "The Traveller" in front of the Students' Administrative Council building.

Plans were to have a Chinese student pop out of the manhole there with a sign on his back saying "I came all the way from China to vote for Bill Davis".

University police put a stop to the gimmick when they saw the student climbing into a manhole on another part of the campus. But Davis won the election in spite of it.

In past years, students have suggested tunnels under every major intersection around the campus. "But that would be too expensive", Mr. Russell says.

Some students hope to see pedestrian tunnels connecting the buildings being planned for the new West campus.

"There will be tunnels of course," Mr. Russell says. "But I doubt if any of them will be open to students."

So it looks as though alumni 10 years from now will find one familiar note among the many inevitable changes on campus. Their successors will still be walking to class in the rain.

Father Terry Comes Back Trinity Told About Trinity

The Trinity Mission dashed through its first hectic day yesterday with three well-attended discussion groups and a main address delivered by Chief Missioner Father Kenneth Terry of the Order of the Holy Cross, New York.

Introducing the first of four 415 p.m. talks to be delivered during the course of the Mission, Father

Terry warned students of his verbosity.

"The trouble with the religious," he said, "is that when they get away from their monasteries they talk too much!"

Father Terry devoted his first talk to an exposition of the Doctrine of the Trinity and its meaning in human life.

"God is not simply a problem to be solved. He is a person to be adored. But this goes against our pride. Intellectual objections to the Faith are usually something else, really," he said.

Religion is not what we do in our solitary moments, he said. We must express ourselves in society.

Three discussion groups took place under the sponsorship of the Mission yesterday, two at noon and one in the evening.

Mr. Casey Wood conducted a discussion on "Religion and Business", which will be continued today.

He said no business decision is as clear-cut as black and white. But in his experience the thoroughly ruthless and dishonest businessman did not have great success.

Mr. Casey said no one completely irradicates his competition.

He gave an illustration of his contention that firms were not as ruthless as they were made out to be: Some time ago International Business Machines Co. Ltd. won a suit against Remington Rand Ltd. If forced to pay, the latter would have been put out of business. Instead, IBM required them to pay $10,000 a year in perpetuity.

Another noon-hour discussion was on Alcoholism and Drug Addiction, led by Dr. R. G. Bell.

Mr. Bell said 10 per cent of the people of Ontario are destined to become alcoholics.

"The rate of alcoholism is higher among college graduates than among graduates of high schools, and higher among high school graduates than among public school graduates," he said.

Dr. Bell said heroin is the most deadly narcotic. Because it is so expensive, addicts must commit some crime, or degenerate morally.

A third Mission discussion group was held informally in the evening at St. Hilda's College, led by Rev. W. H. Ralston and Mrs. R. S. Rogers.

Although men were invited, only one male was present to discuss missionary work and human freedom to the accompaniment of clattering knitting needles and coffee cups.

The group generally condemned much of the work done by missionaries and decided human freedom was a very difficult subject.

Father Ralston advised giving up the latter question, which, in the end, "made man's moral responsibility meaningless."

The Trinity Mission will continue until next Thursday.

Soldier's Usefulness Less, As Science's Increases

By KEN MARSHALL
Varsity Staff Reporter

In any future total war, the chief use of battlefield personnel may be for reconnaissance only, a prominent defence scientist said here Saturday night.

Addressing about 150 members and guests of the Royal Canadian Institute, Dr. N. W. Morton said, "If there is another total war, nuclear weapons will predominate."

The scientific advisor to the Chief of the Canadian General Staff cited several examples of great armed forces' dependence on science.

He gave as past examples the discoveries of radar, jet propulsion, and nuclear fission and fusion.

"The armed services now work very closely with scientists," he said. This was illustrated during the development of radar, when scientists worked at military posts in order to gain further information through the use of existing radar systems," he said.

"The armed forces employ scientists but they work closely with civilian scientists and university researchers," he said.

"Because of modern warfare methods, there are many new problems now facing the armed forces."

Some he described were: increased mobility of ground troops, better methods of target location for air power and artillery, better communications, and means of supplying the widely dispersed troops, and detecting and destroying approaching missiles.

"There are also many problems in human engineering to be solved," he said. These include the development of lighter and warmer clothing, and dehydrated foods to reduce the weight of supplies. "It's a shame we can't dehydrate water," Dr. Morton said.

"Deciding on which new weapons to develop is a difficult and sometimes expensive problem," he said. "It usually takes from five to 10 years to put a new weapon into the hands of the soldier," he said, "but the weapon will probably be obsolete in five years."

Bottoms Still Ownerless; No Takers After Two Ads

Two pairs of white pyjama bottoms, one with red stripes, the other with blue, are being returned to Zeta Psi fraternity by the people who took the articles and placed an advertisement for their return in The Varsity of last Tuesday and Thursday.

The ads were placed by two Whitney Hall residents under the name of Joyce Campbell, and read: "Lost, two pair of pyjama bottoms in vicinity of St. George and Hoskin (over past weekend). Finder please contact Zeta Psi fraternity, WA 1-8131."

The name "Joyce Campbell" has since been discovered to be an alias.

The pyjama bottoms were hanging outside corner windows of Cody House for a brief period

Friday, but were soon removed at the request of authorities.

At last report they had not been returned to Zeta Psi. Bill Rogan, SPS graduate and Zeta Psi member, said he is missing a pair of pyjama bottoms which he described as "a sort of a plaid, brown, white and green."

A Charlie Brown of the same fraternity said he also is missing a pair of pyjama bottoms, "white with red polka dots."

The fact the Zeta Psi fraternity lost their front door three weeks ago and has not yet recovered it is believed to have contributed to the thefts in this particular house.

One of the confessed participants in the reverse pantie-raids said considering the advertisements cost only 50 cents, it was well worth the cost and the risk.

The girls involved requested they remain anonymous.

Hosiah Rivals Joyce, Author Tells Meeting

The prophet Hosiah rivals James Joyce as a master of literary symbolism, a prominent Jewish author said last night.

Dr. Harold Rolph, addressing the Group of Five, said the first eleven verses of Hosiah's third chapter contained metaphors equal to any symbolism produced by modern authors.

"It's not only that," Dr. Rolph said. "It's the style in general. Hosiah has perfected the 'stream of consciousness' technique in this chapter and uses it to achieve vivid effects not encountered in any literature for another two thousand years."

Dr. Rolph conceded the style could only be appreciated in the original Hebrew. There are only three copies of the true Hosiah text available at U of T, he said.

Dr. Rolph illustrated his points with verbal quotations.

Earlier the group examined Cyril Bonet's reproductions of the Salloway Dead Sea-School collection. Most agreed the Bonet reproductions were highly overrated by recent critics and far inferior to the Hockings set.

Thursday the Group meets to criticize Lloyd O'Connor's review of "Lolita" by Guest at the discussion will be Professor F. P. Grotavich of the Department of Slavic Studies.

Prof. Grotavich will help members translate sections of the novel into the author's native Russian. Members have declared Thursday's meeting open to the public.

gaining faith

If it's wars you want to talk about—and most of us do at some time or another—one thing you can say about this much maligned century of ours is that it's not lacking in examples.

And it is not merely the numbers of wars. God knows there's been enough. It's the variety of wars that is really remarkable.

We've had all kinds of them—big ones, little ones, dull ones and inspiring ones. We've had first wars and last wars, world wars and wars to end wars. We've had global conflicts and civil strife.

And we've learned something from all these wars. We've developed to a fine art the ability to destroy ourselves for a hundred different reasons and a thousand different ways—and we're improving on it every day.

But there's one other thing we've learned from all these wars—and it's this second think we should quietly remember for two minutes this morning.

Every blessed one of them was bad.

losing face

When our distant ancestors swung down from the trees they called their homes, we may suppose their first utterance on the state of affairs in their cavernous dwellings was an innocent "why?" This is merely supposition, but a fast look at our modern world cannot convince us that man has changed all that much from his arborial days:

It is the nature of things that man pose questions, usually with a rather querulous note in his inquiring voice.

It was the same sort of innocent "why?" coupled with a tempered protest that the Canadian University Press sent to the University of Ottawa's Rector, Rev. H. F. Legare. CUP was protesting the firing of the three editors of the university paper La Rotonde by the administrative staff of the university—which is headed by Father Legare.

It was probably in the nature of things that the reply should be short and sweet. In effect Father Legare said: "Shut up and mind your own business. You know nothing of our affairs".

It is a pity Father Legare's reply was so predictable, for it lends considerable weight to an accusation made through La Rotonde last year. Editors Jean David and Normand Lacharite were expelled from the university for accusing the administration of "paternalism" in the running of the institution.

They said the university authorities took too active a part in student activities, stifled expression, gave little recognition of student maturity, sheltered students from new ideas, created the university in their own reactionary image.

This is paternalism: supplying facts to be accepted without question, making decisions to be accepted without protest.

But a new aspect has come into view. The university now splits non-existent hairs; and with grace befitting a medieval emperor, demolishes opponents.

Canadian University Press protested that the administration had fired the editors arbitrarily, in direct contravention of the freedom of the press. Father Legare said the Dean of students did the dirty work. He made no defence of the arbitrary dismissal; he gave no explanation why the dean was not classed as part of the administration.

Father Legare said the CUP protest had been in error. The good dean had not removed the editorial board from office, he said—he "prohibited them from participation of any kind in the affairs of La Rotonde".

Father Legare has put all the blame on the shoulders of Dean Leonard Ducharme, dissociating him from the administration. That Father Ducharme deserves some blame may be true; to claim he is not part of the administration and that the administration is hence not responsible is foolish sophistry.

The University of Ottawa has indicated it wants nothing to do with the present La Rotonde. In the face of recent performances by university officials, it would seem they deserve no paper at all, good or bad.

There will probably be no backing down. Paternalism must triumph over defectors. Authority must stand unquestioned.

Father Legare and his cohorts must not lose face. Their students have never had face to lose—and they probably never will.

to work in South-East Asia except in the rare cases where they could fill the position of a technical advisor. Only recently have one or two nations like Burma offered scholarships specifically for the students of these donor countries.

It was at this point where the Colombo Plan governments left off that the national student unions came into action. Australia, the richest country in the area (per head of population), provided the initiative in many instances. During the past eight years student representatives from Australia and New Zealand have visited most countries of the Orient—including the Chinese People's Republic.

These semi-diplomatic visits have dispelled many illusions; but they have also shown that a couple of weeks in India or the Philippines tells the 40,000 students of Australia and New Zealand remarkably little. Supplementary visiting schemes therefore become necessary.

The oldest of these is the graduate employment scheme which places Australian graduates in civil service positions throughout Indonesia. For the past seven years several dozen Australian men and women have worked in medicine, technology and education all over the Indonesian Archipelago. Unlike most Europeans in the country, they have lived with ordinary Indonesian families, eating their food and speaking their language, and earning the normal Indonesian salary (never more than twenty dollars a month). Their endeavour has elicited hospitality and recognition out of all proportion to the number of people involved. Clothing, a bicycle, and a return passage to Australia are provided by the Australian government. But the return passage has not always been welcome. Several students have extended their initial contract; and some have even married Indonesians.

During these last few years, while scholarship-holders, private students, and student delegations were moving backwards and forwards between Australia and the Asian mainland, it became apparent that some time would have to pass before any appreciable benefit from the experiences of Asians studying in Australia and other Western countries would be felt throughout the South-East Asian region. To compensate for this delay a new type of exchange scheme was brought into operation in 1956, organized jointly by an Indian student, several Australians, and myself. It resulted in a group of Indian engineering undergraduates going to Australia at their own expense for a three months' visit. During that time they carried out their practical training in Australian industry, earned their own keep, and lived with Australian families.

It is now intended to send a group of Australian engineers to India for similar experience; the problem is to find phases of Indian industry sufficiently advanced to provide some worthwhile training for the Australians.

Apart from these unique exchange schemes, the students of many Asian countries have played an important part in the economic development of their peoples without any outside assistance. Amongst these plans the most successful have been the Filipino rural development program, the Australian aboriginal scholarship fund, and the Indonesian oral teachers' training courses.

Provided these activities continue uninterrupted, South-East Asia will boast within a generation a multi-racial "unity in diversity" and a group of cultural leaders who have combined the best of two worlds.

A Reader Observes:

At five-thirty p.m. on Monday, the tenth of November 1958, they found the archway from Hart House to the UC quad blocked.

And she said something inaudible.

And he said "Guess they lost a couple of games in Korea" (sneering).

And then he said, "Holy Christ, I bet they'll close the Library too!"

Yes, son, they will close the Library. For a whole hour, I know, and exams are coming.

And they'll cancel lectures—and you'll be right—only indignant at the loss of your privilege of skipping them.

And they'll blow a bugle—and everyone will lose two precious minutes of their lives—and the time will crop by.

And up on Bloor Street a man whose name I don't know will stop his streetcar and remove his TTC cap and say "It is eleven o'clock." And his streetcar passengers will chafe at the delay.

But John McCrae still lies in Flanders Field and for him it's a long two minutes since the trumpets all sounded as he passed to the Other Side.

And the watcher was angry almost to blows as the couple strolled away—the long way around UC—and when the officers at rehearsal spoke as though "Eyes left" and "Parade will march past in column of route" were the vital things. But now I am only sad—that they do not understand. Men died not in the midst of a glorious waving of flags and sounding of bugles—but wet, tired, dirty—in a flash of flame and iron or duly watching their blood ooze away in the mud.

And we must remember to our slight inconvenience of two minutes or else, son, we'll follow a new generation of cynics or idealists—and send another bunch out to do it again.

Have Show, Will Audition

St. Michael's College has announced a forthcoming musical production.

Oddly enough, it isn't called "The Play Of Daniel", but simply "Mickities", a name to conjure with if ever there was one.

The "Mickities" was established at St. Mike's last year, and follows in the well-worn tradition of all such college musicals: irreverent humour which is largely unintelligible to anyone who is not enrolled in the college in question, as well as gags of a more universally appreciated nature.

Auditions for this year's instalment of the St. Mike's show, will be held this Wednesday and Thursday from 4 to 6 p.m., and on Friday from 3 to 6 in Brennan Hall.

First year students are particularly encouraged to try out for parts in this presentation.

Also, of more interest to the general student community is the new edition of the All-Varsity Revue.

Called, unpromisingly enough, "Have Toga, Will Travel", the AVR takes place in ancient Rome. Auditions will be held in the Howard Ferguson Hall UC at the following times:

Thursday, 7-9:30: Actors and chorus.

Friday, 7-9:30: Actors and chorus.

Monday, 7-8: Dancing.

8-9:30: Actors and chorus.

Tuesday, 7-8: Dancing. From 8 on, Actors.

This year will be the test of the wisdom of SAC's choice in asking for original shows rather than Broadway successes. All they need to prove their theory a failure is a show similar to the one they produced last year.

All students of the university are invited to audition for this production this week and next.

As Pirandello Desired It

As You Desire Me, by Luigi Pirandello is a play of absolute, exasperating, irrational idealism, condemning modern life with its ambiguity, its lusts, its commercial sensuality. The play's theme places the sense of true reality in the beauty of the soul.

"What is reality," ask Pirandello and then plunges us into the vast intellectual-emotional-spiritual depths of a woman's tormented soul.

Scene: Berlin. Time: After the War. Plot: (That crude term)

Elma the beautiful dissolute mistress of a decadent German writer, while carousing with some degenerates through the dim streets is called to "Cia, Cia," cries Boffi "Don't you remember me. It's I. Boffi. I painted your portrait for your husband Bruno whose been looking for you these long last ten war years. Please come with me back to him. Mistaken identity? Material for a comedy? Maybe but this is the same clay from which high tragedy is moulded.

Disgusted with what she is and determined to start life anew she leaves her writer-lover and goes to find and live in the soul of Cia, leaves behind the Berlin glitter-gutter-boudoir life of drink and damnation to the pastoral pleasure of Bruno's villa in the north of Italy.

Relatives asserting their own images of what Cia looked like accept Elma as Cia. For instance: Cia's eyes were green to Aunt Lena, blue to Uncle Salessio, and grey to Bruno. Elma finds Cia's diary. Reads it with passion and longing. Relives this pure, noble, beauty's life. Elma becomes serene, angelic. She is the soul of Cia. A new soul. But the same everlasting body.

And the body has its problems and limitations.

Assuming Cia's death-body-death, the parent's property has been transferred to the next eldest sister. It is to be transferred back. Cia is now here. Trouble brews. Money, materialism and old bodies rising and descending from/into grave. Resurrection and transfiguration.

Cia-Elma cries out: "I did not want any of this, from the very beginning—nothing of all this."

Just the soul of Cia. No more and the love of that soul. Bruno's love and loyalty to that/thin soul. She cannot understand the thin line between love and interest. Loving interest. A constantly wavering thin line, constantly changing.

I want it pure. My soul, Bruno. Please my soul. Not my body, Bruno. Oh, Bruno, Bruno you are just a touch of light within an animal's body. Oh, Cia, Cia you would have us as Gods. Gods. Spirits. With souls and no body. Oh, Cia. Puritanical Idealism. Self-damnation. And despair.

Salter the German writer dissolute returns. And with him the real Cia. The long chunk of human flesh from out of a Vienna Sanitarium Cia. A wreck of humanity. But Cia. The "real" Cia. Oh, how he must have looked. Oh... how he must have hated and loved.

And who drives the body-minded men and women animals back to actual-factual-reality? The Demented One? To the Lost Chunk of Human Flesh? Elma of course. Elma the Greatly Aware. Cia's soul. Cia's soul through Cia-Elma's disillusioned and tormented body and soul.

Oh, how my flesh disgusts this soul. Come, like Christ I must revolt against it. Burn it up. Crucify it. Contaminate it until it rots. Back to Berlin with my German writer-dissolute and that lewd-lazy-luxurious life. That empty life I led. Take me. And my soul be damned.

Renuncio: Living death and damnation. No classic protective finalizing death. Just the terrifying awareness of what you are and have been and will be. Oh, god, god, why has Thou forsaken us?

Classic Cowboys

THE BIG COUNTRY (Loew's) is one of those rare cinema phenomena, a classic of its genre, in this instance, the "Hollywood Western."

Unlike its inspired predecessors, "Shane" and "High Noon", whose plots tautened in a single line toward an inevitable showdown, this superb film offers a vista of essential characters, the complete spectrum of human emotion and a multithreaded plot imbued with the unwritten "Code of the West" and told against the beautiful vastness of Texas cattle country. Working with a lean, uncluttered script by James Webb, Sydney Bartlett and Robert Wilder, Director William Wyler, who knows the "western" as well as he knows the back of his hand, turns out a moving production that is as rich and grand as its setting.

The plot is structured like a delicate mobile with each character subtly, yet inextricably linked to all the others. Every action results in an endless chain reaction which soothes and tumbles toward a climactic sequence of intense power and impact. Essentially it is the story of a gentle, peace-loving Easterner (Gregory Peck) who comes west to wed a high-spirited Texas girl (Carol Baker) and soon finds himself involved in the vindictive machinations of her cattle baron father (Charles Bickford) against the neighbouring, semi-barbaric Hannassey clan (Burl Ives, Chuck Connors), at stake are the water rights to a ranch owned by a pretty school marm (Jean Simmons).

In telling this ostensibly simple story of the fight for the land, Director Wyler artfully integrates several of the most captivating and exquisite cameo sequences ever seen in a "western."

Photographer Franz Planer, working primarily in wide-angle shots, captures the starkly picturesque muted browns and yellows of a vast country. As written, all the characters have plenty of red blood in them and they are coloured up still further by a brilliant cast which opens its collective veins into almost every line. Director Wyler's handling of the entire production can only be described in superlatives.

This is not only the best "western" since "High Noon"; it is an epic in all respects.

Tragédie de Racine

Thursday evening at The Playhouse will be a unique occasion in Toronto's theatrical history, when the Theatre du Vieux-Colombier presents Racine's great tragedy "Britannicus" with Marguerite Jamois in the exciting role of Agrippine.

Racine is to the French what Shakespeare is to the English, and hence we can appreciate the respect and reverence with which these productions of French classical tragedy are regarded. The classical tragedy is a medium which is not very familiar to our audience. We are unaccustomed to the rigorous form of the unities, the absence of action and the poetic element (although these characteristics have lately been revived to a certain extent in the dramas of Eliot and Fry). We must adapt ourselves to the classical form in which all action is subordinated to the inner conflict in the hearts of the characters. Racine is the master of the psychological drama, and in "Britannicus" we have the emotions of love, ambition, pride striving inwardly against each other. The story in brief is as follows:

Nero is in love with Junie, and has her abducted. He tells her that he will slay her suitor, Britannicus, if she does not refuse his offer of marriage. She does so, and Britannicus joins Nero's mother in a plot against the emperor.

The plot is revealed by Narcisse, a treacherous friend of Britannicus, and he and Agrippine are imprisoned. Britannicus is poisoned, and Junie takes refuge with the Vestal Virgins; when Narcisse tries to steal her back, he is killed by the infuriated mob.

Nero, deserted by all, unable to possess Junie, sets about his infamous reign of terror.

THE VARSITY AND ANGELS

By LIZ BINKS

Newspaper people are noted for devoting long hours to discussing the legendary names and stories that over the years have built up their own very special tradition. And because The Varsity likes to think that it, too, approaches the realm of the newspaper world at times, its staff indulges in the occasional luxury of shop talk.

They talk about editors who were fired and issues that were censored, they toss about names like William Lyon MacKenzie King, Stephen Leacock, J. S. MacLean and A. F. Allen; they beat their breasts proudly as they speak of freedom of the press.

But here, invariably, they come to a standstill. Because always at this point, somebody quotes the Varsity motto:

"Suffer yourselves to be blamed, imprisoned, condemned; suffer yourselves to be hanged; but publish your opinions; it is not a right, it is a duty".

Somebody else remarks what a good motto it is and a third somebody inquires where it comes from.

Unfortunately nobody can tell them. From somewhere in the dim regions of its past journalistic escapades, The Varsity acquired its motto, and painstaking scrutiny into quotation books, old files, anthologies of famous writers has failed to unveil its origin.

Staffers know it appeared for the first time in 1895 following the firing of James Tucker who managed during his editorship, to spark one of the fiercest controversies in the university's history.

Tucker, writing the same year William Lyon MacKenzie King led a student boycott of lectures, blasted the administration for its appointment of a history professor, dubbing the university "Home for the Helpless", he was later expelled and students paid his tuition fees at the University of Leland Stanford.

The two issues after his expulsion carried the motto quoted above—then as far as recent research can determine, it disappeared until 1939.

Some say Tucker himself composed it; others attribute it to Patrick Henry, others to Jefferson.

But still no positive proof of its author is known. If anybody can tell them, the present Varsity staff would be proud to add its story to the archives.

HUNGRY but hopeful, University College Follies producers Dick Lee, Harvey Levenstein and Jerry Sperling study up on the tricks of the fasting trade. They planned the stunt to push sales of Follies tickets.

Follies' Producers End Hunger Strike Thursday

University College hunger strikers put a time limit on their fast yesterday. UC Follies producers Jerry Sperling, Harvey Levenstein and Dick Lee said the strike would end 5 p.m. Thursday whether or not all remaining Follies tickets are sold.

"We have lost a total of 88 pounds among the three of us", Sperling said last night.

One UC coed said she saw Lee ordering food at the Junior Common Room food counter at noon yesterday. Other students say the three ate full meals at 6 p.m. last night.

The striking trio said students tormented them with popcorn and food all day, but they refused all offerings.

Originally all three said they would abstain from all food and drink except water until every Follies ticket was sold.

About 200 tickets are left unsold out of the 1,500 originally available for the three-day run Nov. 13-15 in the Hart House theatre.

Have Toga - Will Travel Is This Year's Revue

The All-Varsity Revue was christened last week as officials completed plans for auditions next weekend.

The "whimsical comedy" is now known as "Have Toga. Will Travel", producer Bill Lord said last night. Auditions for the 15 speaking parts and 40-member chorus will be Nov. 13, 14, 17 and 18 in the Howard Ferguson Hall basement, he said.

Students have shown "lots of interest already in relation to the book and casting", Lord said.

"But it should be stressed that we have no one in mind for any of the leads or minor parts", he said.

The two-act show is set in 58 A.D. and centers around Emperor Nero's attempts to settle a plot on his throne led by jealous Senators.

The show will have a black-tie, patron opening night on Feb. 9, and run through Feb. 14, in the Hart House theatre. Rehearsals begin in December.

Lord has received an invitation to play in Montreal during the McGill Winter Carnival Feb. 21, but no decision on the invitation has been made.

Writers Dick Dean and Stan Farrow have already made several changes in the completed book, and "changes will continue right up to opening night and possibly after", Lord said.

Budget for the show so far shows an $11 profit. Total expenditures are expected to be under $4,000.

Tim Reid Wins Scoring Honors

Veteran Varsity Blue halfback Tim Reid, playing possibly the last football game of his life, scored 19 points against McGill Saturday to win the Intercollegiate individual scoring championship with 68 points.

Reid finished 14 points ahead of team-mate Pete Joyce, with another Varsity halfback—Walt Adams—third with 33 points.

Reid's 19-point effort — on three majors and a single—gave him a three-year Varsity total of 101 points. Ironically, Reid had kicked a convert against Western two weeks ago to leave him exactly three touchdowns from 100 points, and then was credited with a single when he fumbled into the end zone and McGill recovered in Saturday's game.

Western's Lionel Conacher, held scoreless in Queen's upset 14-12 win over Mustangs, surrendered third place to Adams, who picked up six converts against Redmen.

The only other substantial gain in the standings was by Blues' Doug Baird, who scored a touchdown to go with two previous safety touches and raise his total to 10.

Top McGill scorer was Wally Bulchak, with four touchdowns, and Terry Porter and Mike Wicklum each had three to lead Queen's Golden Gaels.

Reid led in touchdowns with 11, Adams in converts and field goals with 21 and two respectively, and Gaels' Jocko Thompson.

son had six singles to pace that division.

Grid Outlook For '59 Up To 16 Regulars Go

Lest ardent Varsity fans commence to weep premature tears for the fortunes of their 1959 defending champion football team, may it be said now that the picture is brighter than many have believed.

Of the 33 men who saw action with the team this season, 17 are slated to return. And of the 16 leaving, at least five may be wearing their familiar uniform come September of '59.

Those departing — definitely — are guards Bill Hunter and Don Johnston, ends Dick Risk and Lorry Stacey, quarterback Brian Astor; wingbacks Dave Pinkham and Dunc Brodie; halfback Dave Creswell; and fullbacks Tim Reid and Pete Joyce.

Others who graduate, but who have indicated they may return for post-graduate work are: centre Curt Russell, guard Julian Porter, and backs Al Connolly, Walt Adams and Bob Dann.

Add in all the others with the five "possibles" mentioned above, and it appears a fairly substantial squad. And there are half a dozen Baby Blues ready to move into the Blue camp, as well.

The biggest gaps will come with the departure of twin battering rams Joyce and Reid. Paul Burroughs returns to take over Joyce's spot, and John McMurtry may be the man to fill in for Reid.

McMurtry was a highly-rated prospect at camp last fall, but sustained a shoulder injury which has kept him from active combat all year.

Ev Rush, with added polish that only experience can bring, will be in the thick of the fight for the quarterbacking slot left vacant by Aston.

Add in 6'4", 230-pound Casey Wood at tackle for Martini, along with returning linemen Nick Bruchovsky, Glenn Harding, Trevor Eytan, Malcolm and Sandy Bell, Weldon Thoburn, Mike Chyka-luk, John Evans and Jimmy King.

Doug Baird and Gene Choro-stecki, undeniably the best defensive ends in the league, are eligible for further play, as is Walt Sopinka.

In the backfield, Larry Joynt, Steve Chisholm and Ian Knowles are back to anchor what should continue to be a fine defensive team.

How does relaxing coach Dalt White feel about next year? "We'll be tough."

Interfaculty Summary

University College Redmen hammered their Group Two football lead with a 13-1 win over Denistry. Proudfoot and Goode counted the Redmen majors.

In another grid tilt, Medicine topped Forestry 7-1, with Asby's TD providing the margin of difference.

Soccer play saw Senior SPS whip Victoria, 5-0, on a fine four-goal outburst by Atucha. Sayer had the other Engineers' goal.

Architecture continued its winning ways with a 3-1 win over Forestry.

Lacrosse play saw Senior Skule edge past St. Mike's A, 5-4, despite the return of footballer Curt Russell to the Double Blue lineup.

In squash, SPS blanked UC, 3-0, while UB Beta Sigs took a 15-8, 16-14 volleyball win from Pre-Meds B.

NOS. 91-96—Tim Reid (91) pulls away from a McGill tackler to clear field en route to his second touchdown of the afternoon. Reid scored 19 points altogether to win the college scoring title with 68 points, and to amass 101 for his three years in a Toronto uniform.

Softball Final Today

Varsity Staff Reporter

The 1958-59 women's Intercollegiate swim team will be chosen from the following: Divers; Jane Furness, Marg White, Margot Nunns, Stephanie Haas; Synchronized swimmers; Janet Medland, Anne Ferguson, Elizabeth Bell, Linda Kriisa.

Speed swimmers: Val Lewis, Pam Hill, Gail Royce, Bev Westman, Janet Medland, Shirley German, Eleanor Standish, Lynn Philpott, Judy Cansfield, Linda Kriisa, Sandy McMillen, Sally Bambridge.

At a practice meet with Etobicoke Memorial Athletic Club Wednesday evening, the coaches will be able to make their decisions more definite by the fastest times.

PHE and Victoria played what was to be the last softball game of a three-game series on Friday. The games stood at one apiece (1-0 for PHE, and 4-3 for Victoria), and at the top of the second, it looked as if PHE would be the new champs.

However, the bottom of the second saw a 5-5 tie.

Going into the bottom of the second, the score was 5-1 for PHE, now in the field. The first batter flied out, but a series of hits drove in four runs to tie the score. Judy Cansfield caught a fly for the second out, and with a runner on third, Judy Smith made a beautiful catch in centre field to finish the inning.

The referee's decision was to play the game (rather than play over-time, as was done in a previous tie-game) and although Victoria coach had momentary difficulty accepting this, the game will be replayed today at 1 p.m.

Another controversial point of sportsmanship was noticed regarding the function of the coaches.

Granted, the coach is an integral part of the team, but it seems that the team members should be the ones to make the decisions on the field. Is a player to steal a base or try for homeplate only when the coach signals same?

Football coaches have the same problem: can the quarterback be relied upon to call the plays, or does the coach send them in? On the amateur level, the coach, for the main, leaves the decision to the quarterback. The coach has taught his team the plays, and half his enjoyment comes from seeing the players put his strategy into working effect — on their own initiative!

Is it the players' game or the coaches' game? Of course, if you have to win, and you haven't the confidence that your team can win on their own 'brains and brawn', then I guess the coach has to call the moves.

U's must Reaffirm Education for All

QUEBEC CITY (CUP) — There is a possibility of a mass student demonstration in front of Quebec's Parliament Buildings to protest government education policies.

In a front page editorial article, Laval's Le Carabin asks "What will we do at the opening of the session?"

Writer Paul Cliche claims it is necessary that the province's six universities "reaffirm the principle of the right of association and the principle of education for all."

"Time is marching on; it's getting late," he warns.

Student presidents of the six universities have so far failed in their bid to see Premier Maurice Duplessis to discuss Quebec's education problems.

Concrete action on the part of the universities is necessary, the headline story says. Trouble started on Laval and other campuses by the self-appointed University Action League has not lessened.

Before adopting legislation for education promised to the University Action League, the government should consider views of elected representatives at the universities.

The six student presidents must take a firm stand and ask each day to see the premier as three students did last year, says Cliche.

"The possibility of a mass demonstration should equally be studied."

Laval University was one of the main forces last year in the student boycott of classes against Duplessis. Refusal to meet the university student presidents touched off a one-day strike which saw all but Sherbrooke University students participating.

Radio-Canada, the French-language division of Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, is looking for four students to appear on a half-hour television panel.

The students will discuss the pros and cons of having a history textbook identical in content for both national language groups.

The show, "Opinion", will be broadcast out of Toronto to a Montreal audience Dec. 7 at 12:30 p.m.

The students should be 18-19 years old, and must be able to express themselves in French.

Applications should be filed with presidents of campus French clubs before Monday, Nov. 17.

The telecast is a chance for a valuable experience for participants, because they can learn something by discussing and thinking about the topic — and also give Montrealers an idea of the point of view of English-speaking students. Jocelyn Leduc, St. Mike's French club president said last night.

Miss Leduc can be reached at RO 7-8478, Trinity's club president. Jessie Trumper at AT 2-3295, University College's Barb Walker at WA 2-2713, and Victoria College's John Priestley at HU 1-0504.

Anti-Clerics go, then Elizabethans

Wycliffe Government Out

Two successive governments have fallen in Wycliffe College this week.

There is no precedent for such an event in Wycliffe's history. One government has been overthrown before in the course of a year—but never two.

Wycliffe's government, composed of the students of the college—including those in residence—is responsible for all student policy at the college.

It rules on financial matters, social matters, and any other matters concerning the students. It is modelled after the British system but has only one House.

In a session Monday night, the Anti-Clerical Party, which was in power, proposed a bill establishing more serious debates in the college.

The bill was passed by the House.

A second bill was then introduced calling for establishment of a secondary group of more quorum. The motion was passed by a vote of nine to four with one abstention.

Tuesday morning, Prime Minister John Marriott handed his resignation to Governor-General Charles Ledger.

The Governor-General then called on Morrow, leader of the Elizabethan Party Continued, to form a government.

Rumors of a pending revolution prompted Morrow to choose a Cabinet hurriedly, which he presented to the Governor-General. The Cabinet was accepted, and the EPC was officially in power at noon yesterday under Prime Minister Morrow.

Members of the House discussed the situation and decided it was unsatisfactory. An order for a special session of the House was issued, signed by 20 Members of the House.

The House convened at 9:30 p.m. yesterday to consider a motion of non-confidence in Morrow's government. The motion, after "fast and furious" debate, was carried.

This meant the second government had been overthrown in the space of two days. With no opposition party, there is no one who can be asked to form a government.

The Governor-General, Ledger, who represents the Queen, must now control the House himself. "Decision will be forthcoming within 24 hours," he said, when asked whether he will ask a member of the House to try and form a government or whether he will call a new election.

David Evans, a member, described last night's debate as "really something—fast and furious". Charles Testart, Keeper of the Seal in the short-lived EPC government, said over 40 members were present at last night's session. "This is an unusually high representation," he said.

The EPC Prime Minister, in seeing the resulting vote, said in defeat: "We submit to the will of the House."

UC Meeting Vetoes Gowns Throws Issue To Students

A packed University College Junior Common Room yesterday tossed student gowns out the window by a vote of two to one, but a depleted house later voted to bring the issue to a general college referendum.

An open meeting of the UC Literary and Athletic Society was punctuated by a series of heated exchanges and charges of publicity-seeking on the part of the Lit executive.

Supporting the motion, Tony

Charleton said the importance of the issue should not be overestimated.

He said the trend away from community spirit in a college as large as UC could be checked by wearing gowns.

Climaxing the discussion was a fiery exchange between debates director Ken Wyman and Lit president Bill Davis.

Wyman charged gowns were a "made issue", elaborately publicized by the Lit executive to produce a large turnout at the meeting.

Davis retorted that "had Mr. Wyman been at the last meeting" of the Lit executive, as he was supposed to be, he would have known the executive was sincere.

The executive had not over-publicized the issue, he said.

Supporting the motion earlier, Davis said every UC student is a Lit member.

"In order to make this society work we must give every member a sense of belonging," he said, calling gowns "a symbol of academic achievement."

A speaker from the floor answered, "The fact that we stand in this college is symbol enough."

After the motion had been defeated a house cut to one-third the size pushed through a motion calling for a general college referendum on the gown issue.

Students also voted down a motion of censure against Winnipeg's United College which recently fired Prof. Harry Crowe.

Ottawa Council Protests Further

OTTAWA — CUP — The University of Ottawa students' council last night passed a motion with 16 "whereas" clauses again asking university authorities to re-instate the three editors of La Rotonde.

The "whereas" clauses were a reply to Rev. Leonard Ducharme, Dean of Men, who told the council Saturday they had given no reasons why he should comply with a similar request made last week.

The motion, passed 11 to one with one abstention, asked authorities to re-instate Louis Cliche, Roger Roy and Pierre Trudel in order to re-establish "good relations" between the council and the administration.

Feeling of the motion was that the present dispute involved principles which the students' council could not abandon.

The motion said the authorities has assumed powers which belonged only to the students' council and their action in firing the editors was a negation of student's liberty of action.

The motion was passed in a special meeting called by Student President Marcel Prud'homme.

Earlier in the meeting an independent motion supporting the authorities' position fell for want of a seconder.

The motion, which also suggested a committee of four students and five faculty members be set up to deal with the dispute, came from fourth-year medical student Robert Baron.

Baron was the seconder of the council's decision three weeks ago in refusing to accept the editors' resignation after the Dean had fired them.

Asked why he had changed his loyalty, Baron, a scholarship student, denied pressure had been applied to himself or to his mother who works in the university library.

His only answer was that he had "made a mistake" three weeks ago.

Commonwealth Split? Maybe, Says Scott

A crowd of 75 last night heard the evils of apartheid described by Rev. Michael Scott, permanent United Nations representative of the Herero tribes of South West Africa.

Fresh from the recent UN South Africa debate, Father Scott warned a packed audience at the Canterbury Centre of a possible rift in Commonwealth relations over oppression in South Africa.

"The United Kingdom has shown no interest in the situation," he said. "While she voted against a UN resolution indicating concern for the African people, Canada supported the U.S. and 68 other nations in passing it."

"The Union of South Africa denies the right of other nations to interfere in their policy," he added.

"Under the League of Nations, South West Africa became a sacred trust of civilization," he said. "The Union of South Africa has violated the mandatory obligations put forth by the League, and on such grounds she can and should be brought to the attention of the international community."

Father Scott said news reports have led Western peoples to think violence is the usual answer native people offer to problems.

"The real answer the South Africans have found is passive resistance," he said.

Arms Race Or Human?

A University of Western Ontario professor told students yesterday he would rather "stand in military nakedness before the USSR than face the rising hatred of Africa and Asia."

Professor William Coleman, speaking on "Disarmament Must Start with Us", the last of a series of SCM lectures, said: "vast Canadian and U.S. money appropriations for arms has shown abominably in neglect of the development of underprivileged countries."

Prof. Coleman said it was better to be behind in the arms race than behind in the human race.

"The energy and expense channelled toward construction of nuclear and conventional weapons is shockingly immoral," he said.

The professor compared present day behaviour patterns in the United States and Russia to those of mental patients.

He said the two powers "each thriving under absolute ideologies" want to annihilate each other instead of sharing power. "An attitude of distrust and temper more fissionable than physical weapons."

gals get salked...

University women responded well yesterday to a call for polio vaccine shots, Health Service authorities said last night.

About 175 Salk vaccine inoculations were given yesterday at the office at 110 St. George St.

Shots are being administered again today from 2-4 p.m. for female students but will not be available after that for another month.

"As far as public health is concerned these shots are most important," Dr. Mary Atack, Health Service official said. "The public as a whole has been rather casual about them, but they are excellent protection."

do unto others

We are told that in certain far-off Utopias like Britain the police are loved and trusted by the people they are paid to protect.

In this country with our long standing tradition of fear and distrust of our police, such stories are hard to believe.

In this country you can pick up an issue of Maclean's magazine and read an article on "Why we hate police", an article that would make no sense elsewhere, but is touching a real problem here.

A few days ago all this buried resentment we feel towards our police was given new strength when 11 Toronto policemen were arrested on charges of petty theft.

The courts have not yet made up their minds as to the guilt or innocence of these men.

But many self-righteous citizens have already made up their minds.

Unquestionably this resentment and distrust has some foundation in fact.

We remember, for instance, that some months ago Toronto police arrested some teen-age boys and beat them until they confessed to a crime they had not committed. The boys later laid charges against the police and won their case.

We remember the policeman who fired a warning shot over the head of a boy that was running away from the scene of a petty theft and then killed him with a second shot.

Incidents such as this are all reflections of the basic reason for our distrust. Our police, either because of their training or their experience with criminals, seem constantly to assume a man guilty until he is proven innocent and sometimes even after he is proven innocent.

But to bear a constant hostility to the police force and to vent that hostility on the policemen who were arrested last week is to react to them with the same attitude that we deplore in their reaction to us.

For just as surely as the teenage boys who were beaten up were, and the suspected thief who was killed was, these policemen are being condemned without a trial.

Both the public and the police have something to learn from the charges against the 11 policemen.

The police, watching co-workers that they have trusted and perhaps liked charged with theft, may learn that a man is innocent until proven guilty and that even if he is proven guilty his guilt may not be the most important thing that is to be said for him.

The public may, although it is not likely, learn that the same benefit of the doubt must be given to the police that is expected from them. SA

A large university is a coat of many colors.

Increased enrollment paves the way for diversification; the university can then afford to provide highly specialized facilities, and the student increases his experience by contact with those whose interests are different from his own.

But sometimes the benefits accrued from an increased enrollment backfire. And the Students' Administrative Council has just learned that lesson the hard way.

Each year the SAC is faced with the problem of choosing representatives for innumerable weekends, conferences and seminars. For each activity they must try to select candidates who will not reflect poorly on the university they represent, and who combine most perfectly the qualifications indicated for the affair in question.

To choose 35 students for Carabin weekend from a student body numbering 13,000 is a difficult task; to choose two for an international student conference in Texas is even more difficult.

The SAC executive committee, faced with the prospect of choosing representatives for the Texas Agricultural and Mechanical College's fourth Student Conference on National Affairs, decided to try a new solution to this unwieldy problem.

Each SAC member, they decided, would act as an independent selection board, narrowing down possible candidates within their college or faculty to two.

An independent selection board would then choose two students out of the resulting 44 final applications.

SAC members would be likely to know applicants personally, and be able to eliminate those looking for a free vacation in Texas. The burden on the final selection board would be somewhat alleviated.

It sounded like a fine idea. But unfortunately, it just didn't work out that way.

The original motion left "selection procedure" to the discretion of each member. Thus SAC members could, if they were so disposed, single out two likely candidates at random, and submit their names to the selection board.

By SUSIE BRESLIN

Personal knowledge of candidates will almost inevitably lead to subconscious influence from personal prejudices in choosing candidates.

And since selection procedures were left to the discretion of individual council members, publicity for the conference automatically fell to individual colleges and faculties. Unfortunately, most colleges and faculties just do not have the facilities to do this. Thus, the majority of students on this campus know next to nothing about SCONA.

It just so happens that this university is privileged to be invited to participate in SCONA. It is one of the most important student conferences in the United States, and only two Canadian universities are invited to attend. Speakers at the conference are of uniformly high calibre, and delegates themselves are the best that the U.S.'s largest universities have to offer. The topic, "Sources of Tension—National and International" is of special interest to Canadians, and as the only foreign delegates attending, their opinions will be given added weight.

The result? Out of a possible 44 final applicants, the SAC now has 22 names. An undisclosed percentage of this total represents interested students who came to the SAC office and asked to be allowed to file applications separately. This means at least half the council members have not taken the trouble to go and get their application forms and select candidates from their colleges and faculties, even though they were reminded of their obligation twice in The Varsity, and the deadline was indefinitely extended five days ago.

The SCONA conference is still a month away. There is still time, if the SAC so chooses, to give students on this campus a fair chance.

For beyond the burdens of the selection committee, beyond the problems of weeding out the "joy-riders", the SAC has a responsibility to choose the best possible candidates from the student body they will represent.

what's SCONA?

JACK WHELDRAKE, popular assistant coach of the hockey Blues as he appeared when Captain of the 1952-53 Varsity Blues.

Meet Jack Wheldrake

By GENE GLISKY

Some time before the last cheers have echoed away at Varsity Stadium, and the last pigskin has been tucked away to deflate, the hockey Blues are busily cutting up the ice at the Arena in preparation for another banner hockey season. Jack Kennedy, mentor of the Blues both football and hockey-wise, leaves his hockey changes in the capable hands of a spry, bespectacled lawyer, another Jack called Wheldrake.

Jack Wheldrake has enjoyed a long and colorful career at the hockey wars. He gained recognition in the Toronto Marlboro chain in the late '40s. Playing with the Duke B's, he fondly recalls the rough, tough, battles in which the Varsity B squad was a power.

Jack joined the St. Michael's Majors for the 1950-51 campaign, progressing to the Varsity Blues for the next season. For two years with Blues he turned in a stellar performance at left wing, on a line with Dave Stephen and Johnny Adams. In 1952-53, Jack Wheldrake was captain of the Blues, and in the same season won the individual Intercollegiate scoring championship.

Upon graduation Jack entered

Osgoode Hall, but did not leave the hockey Blues. He took over the coaching reins of the Intermediates and in his freshman year coached the pucksters to a championship. As a coach he has proven himself invaluable. Almost all the members of today's power-laden Seniors began their Varsity careers under the helm of Jack Wheldrake.

The Intermediates, whenever they could find a league to operate in, have always been contenders, having won three championships since 1953. Although this season's arrangements for the Varsity Intermediate hockey orphans are still very tentative, Jack hopes to find a berth for his boys.

Hockey shall always remain Jack Wheldrake's greatest love. He takes his usual turn on the ice during practices, complete with horn-rimmed specs, sometimes without shin pads, but still showing the shiftiness and speed of old. However, he does admit to a certain fondness for the "sport of Kings", turning out whenever time permits, to "watch" the ponies.

Girl's Sports

PHE took the women's interfaculty softball title from Victoria yesterday at noon hour.

Although the Victoria team is strong, in good shape and undefeated for six years, they just didn't seem to be able to warm up in the brief two-inning game. But PHE was keen with nervous tension, enthusiasm and drive.

Victoria scored a run in the top of the first, and there was no more scoring until the bottom of the second.

PHE at bat, Joy Mahood took her base, and with a triple from Marg Thompson was driven in to tie the score. With two out, Sharon Gilmore drove in Marg Thompson for the last and winning run.

Final score, PHE, 2; Victoria, 1.

Victoria clobbered Sr. Skule yesterday on the back campus in Group I football play to the tune of 30-0.

A three touchdown burst in the second quarter was the big factor in the Scarlet and Red's win.

Ahead 20-0 at the half, they completed the rout by adding a touchdown and a field goal in the second half.

Touchdowns were scored by Mike Smith, Jim Mathews, Don Seebach, and Grant Bull. Playing coach Steve Moriarty added a field goal and three converts.

The win gives Vic clear possession of second place in their group. They are still one point behind the leaders, Trinity, who can wrap up a first place finish by defeating St. Mike's today.

It is unlikely that the game between Trinity and Vic, which was scheduled for last Friday but cancelled because of the injury to Mike Coke, will be replayed.

Only a loss by Trinity to St. Mike's would give Vic a shot at first place, and even assuming Trinity lose, it is unlikely that Vic would press their case.

In Group II, UC have first place clinched and will get a bye in the first round of the playoffs.

The problem here is who will finish second and third. Jr. Skule and Dents currently hold down second and third spots respectively, but Skule has one more game to play.

SPS has yet to play Pharmacy to complete their schedule. Pharmacy is in the fourth spot with four points. If they could beat Skule, they would gain the third and last playoff spot with six points thus edging out Dents who have five.

In soccer play, a third division team is looming as trouble for the higher group teams with playoff time nearing.

Wycliffe have won all their games to date and are reported to be very strong. Watch the Varsity for times and dates of playoff games.

Campus Service Marks War Dead

About 2,000 students of the University of Toronto gathered at Soldier's Tower at 10.45 a.m. yesterday to pay tribute to the university's dead of three wars.

In the bright sun and warm breezes of the autumn day, the large crowd that centred around the Hart House side of Soldier's Tower and overflowed past University College and the Students' Administration Building, was silent.
